Dealing with the high death rate among the wounded, nearly 24 per cent., as against 22 per cent. in the Crimean War, and this in spite of the appalling sanitary conditions which then prevailed, the Lancet says that conditions generally are utterly different to-day. Trench fighting results in a much larger number of injuries due to shells and shrapnel. Wounds from rifle bullets are comparatively rare, and when they do occur the body is so sheltered by trenches that it is generally the head which is hit, and the probability of fatal results is consequently much greater.

Warfare on Insects.

Insects have always been considered in the light of disagreeable minute pests, but few persons have looked upon them as dangerous. Careful housewives encountering them in kitchen sinks or cupboards have hastened to sprinkle some sort of death-dealing poison around merely because they were annoying, and then, too, dinner guests have a disconcerting habit of shrieking aloud when finding one of the wee things crawling along a lettuce leaf in the salad.

Basket picknickers have always taken pains to brush the tiny creatures off their sandwiches; pedestrians have promptly proceeded to trample on them when meeting them along the walks, principally because they had no desire to go out of their way expressly to save the lives of the unnecessary little objects.

Now it is learned that these insects which we have never taken very seriously are responsible for many diseases that afflict mankind. Common examples are malaria, yellow fever, sleeping sickness of Africa, Rocky mountain spotted fever of this country, typus fever, which occurs everywhere and which recently attracted great attention on account of its ravages in the armies engaged in the European war, dengue fever, bubonic plague and, in addition, a long list of maladies of domestic and wild animals.

To most persons the insect-borne diseases are of little importance, says the Washington Star. The mention of them merely recalls maladies like sleeping sickness and kala-azar, which are peculiar to tropical regions or to remote corners of the earth. It is not generally realized that there is a considerable number of important insect-carried diseases that are of direct concern to people of this country.

There are numerous groups of diseases occurring in this country which the action of the disease is accidental. This group is represented by tuberculosis, typhoid fever, and possibly pneumonia and other maladies.

was also not mentioned. But this illustrates one consideration of great importance. That our increasing intercourse with other parts of the world furnish opportunities for the introduction of diseases, in many cases transmitted by insects, with which heretofore we have not been forced to contend. The quarantine service is efficient, but there is always a chance that certain diseases may escape. In fact, this is shown very clearly by the introduction of bubonic plague in two greatly removed localities.

An illustration of the complicated relations between insects and human parasites can be mentioned at this point. It is a rather common occurrence in tropical America for fly larvae to be found causing tumors under the skin in various parts of the human body. It had been supposed until recently that the eggs of the fly were deposited on the skin of a human being by the parent insect, and this seemed to be sufficient natural explanation. However, it has been discovered that the process is by no means so simple. The adult fly does not deposit its eggs on the human subject, but on the leaves of plants. There they come in contact with certain mosquitoes which frequent such places, and adhere to their legs. When they attack human beings the eggs have had time to hatch and the minute lahvae make their way from the insect's body to the skin of the subject and soon burrow beneath it.

Another Explanation

shows the intricacy of the organisms. There is a fatal disease of dogs occuring in South Africa and elsewhere, known as malignant jaundice, which is transmitted by a tick. The peculiarity of transmission in this case is that the infection can be established only by the adult tick of the generation following the one in which infection is acquired.

There are no definitely established cases at present, but it is likely that there will be found to be another class of disease in which insects are of importance, where the essential condition is accidental contact with food. If cockroaches become definitely connected with tuberculosis or similar maladies, as seems likely to be the case, they will present such a class as will ultimately be found to be important.

Even in hospitals where everything is conducted in the most sanitary fashion, mankind is not free from disease-carrying insects. An example of this is a fly. The house fly is the most conspicuous example of an insect which may be concerned in the transmission of diseases in this manner.

In this country and in Europe a certain species of beetle is responsible for infestation of swine. Occasional human cases are also recorded.

The destruction of white grubs is undertaken on account of the injury they do to the crops, but it is a known fact that they are of direct annoyance to man.

In the Case of Tapeworm

some animal is necessary for the development of a certain stage of the parasite. Usually it is a pig or cow which performs this function. And in the other case man is directly concerned to at least a certain extent since Blanchard summarized not less than 60 cases which have been recorded in man up to 1907.

Certain common household insects, like the flour moth, have relation to man which is frequently overlooked.

A malady due to direct attack is known as tick paralysis, and is just coming to be known. The attachment of a tick causes progressive paralysis ascending from the lower extremities until all parts of the body are involved. The malady is unique, but is found to be the first representative of a special class of injuries caused by insects.

It is possible that several new groups of diseases in which insects are concerned will be found to exist. In the investigation of beriberi and similar diseases in recent years much has been learned about the effects on the system of the presence of toxins of various kinds.

Insects are responsible for that strange disease known as elephantiasis, in which the limbs are swollen into gigantic proportions. The house fly may be partially to blame for the dissemination of the hookworm. An apparent connection is shown between a germ carried by cockroaches and cancer-like lesions in the internal organs of mice. The work is not all complete, but may be suggestive of a possible in which the insect is concerned.

Recently in the canal zone an investigation was made to determine whether or not ants would carry the bacillus of typhoid fever. The investigators stated:

"One can readily see the danger of our situation in ants acting as carriers of pathogenic micro-organisms, for it is absolutely impossible to keep them out of the house, and they get into food in spite of our efforts."

Not only is man in danger because of disease-bearing insects, but animals are also among the victims. The list of animals in which insect-borne diseases may occur is undoubtedly incomplete, but includes rodents, cattle, horses, dogs and birds.

"The discovery of the causation of diseases by parasites opened a great biological field," said Mr. Hunter, in referring to the connection between insects and disease.

"It became evident that the forces of diseases were parallel to many of the biological processes with which naturalists are familiar. Among the many complicated factors which are concerned in this biology of disease are insects. The first knowledge obtained on the subject was in the study of an important disease of cattle in this country known as splenetic fever, and this was as recent as 1891. It developed from this study of the bureau of animal industry in the course of experiments conducted near the city of Washington that the organism which caused the malady had a cycle outside of the cattle.

"In other words, it was necessary in the completion of the life cycle of the parasite for it to pass through a certain species of tirk, in which it went through transformations necessary to complete maturity. This discovery laid the foundation for remarkable progress in

The Study of Disease.

Since that time many other disease organisms have been found to be dependent upon insects for their development.

"The time has not arrived for the classification of the conditions under which insects may transmit diseases, as our knowledge is being extended almost daily and unsuspected conditions or acts of conditions are coming to light.

Some of us are led to inquire whether there is no end to the possibilities of insect connection with diseases, and must every disease, the nature of which is not known, be considered as possibly carried by insects. Of course, there is a limit to the possibilities, and other modes of infection must be well considered. This leads us to mention a danger—namely, a possible tendency to exaggerate and overlook, even in cases where insects may be occasionally concerned, the greater importance of other modes of infection. The function of air, water, food and contact will always be important, and the enthusiast would do well to weigh these factors.

"What is the conclusion from all this consideration of insects and diseases? We think that it is clear that in the new or biological conception of infectious diseases insects play an important role, and future additions to our knowledge will certainly make this role more important than it seems to be at the present time. The very abundance of insects and their remarkable interactions with other animals furnish the foundation.

"As Dr. Howard has stated, the physicist of the future will be a naturalist, because the control of infectious diseases must rest upon a full knowledge of natural phenomena and in this work entomology must be an important agency."

Britain Has Billions.

An eminent London banker states that Great Britain can raise five billion dollars a year for war purposes and continue this for several years. The British banks have now on deposit more than six billion dollars, the high record in the two hundred years of British banking history. Deposits have tripled since 1880.

The monthly payments to soldiers' dependents in St. John will soon total $10,000 from the Patriotic Fund.

Election Protest Abandoned

The Conservative petition against the return of R. E. Truax, M.P., for South Bruce in the bye-election of 1913, has been dropped, and the seat will be retained for the balance of the term. The cross-petition filed by the Liberals against W. D. Cargill, the defeated candidate, is similarly disposed of.

Chesley Defeats Paisley

The Paisley lacrosse team, weakened by the absence of three of their regular players, was defeated by Chesley in the latter town on Tuesday last by the score of 13 to 9. Right up to the end of three quarter time the Paisley aggregation was strictly in the running and had made more shots on goal than the home team, but in the last period they appeared to be disheartened by the absence of their goal-keeper, whom Chesley refused to allow to play, although there was absolutely nothing in the rule book to prevent him. The locals feel certain that had the Chesley team been true sports and allowed our goal-keeper to stay between the flags the score would have been considerably different.

Killed in Mexico

Thomas Walker, a son-in-law of Mr Geo Bannerman, of Paisley, was killed by the collapse of a watertank at Paquate, Mexico, on July 17th. The deceased was a tinsmith by trade. He had gone up on top of the tank, which was 30 feet high to inspect it, when two heavy timber supports collapsed. Although thrown clear of the mass of wreckage, the top of his head was crushed, supposedly by being caught between timbers or under the tank in the fall. Mr Walker had been in the employ of a hardware company at Albuquerque, Mexico, for a number of years. He went to that country because it was advantageous to his health. He formerly lived in Toronto where three brothers live now, and his remains were brought there for interment in Mount Pleasant cemetery. He was born in Derby Tp., and spent his early days in Owen Sound, where he learned the tinsmithing trade. He married Miss Bannerman about twenty years ago, and four years ago was here with her on a visit to her father and friends. The deceased was 50 years of age. The sorrowing widow has the sympathy of a wide circle of friends here.

Death of Addie Pfaff

Although the end came as a happy release from intense suffering and the hopelessness of incurability, yet the community was plunged into mourning by the passing away of our young townsman Adam H Pfaff. The deceased, it will be remembered by our readers, was taken to Toronto hospital about four months ago, after he had for some time been suffering from pains in the head, and the trouble had been diagnosed as a tumor on the brain. The most skillful surgical treatment could not entirely remove the dangerous growth, but its effects were stayed temporarily, and for a time there were grounds for hope of ultimate recovery. It became possible to have him brought home a few weeks ago, but this fact did not betoken any marked improvement. His return home, however, gave the family and friends the opportunity so tenderly desired of ministering to the needs of their dear one. Everything that loving hands could do or money could provide was at work for him, but proved of no avail. The chord of life was broken on Friday night after a period of unconsciousness. The funeral was held on Sunday afternoon, and was one of the largest gatherings of the kind seen in Paisley for some years. The service at the house was conducted by Rev E J McEwen, assisted by Rev R A Pacey, B.A. At the graveside the Oddfellows took charge, over 75 of the brethern of that order being present and marched to the cemetery. The deceased was a member of Ahiram Lodge. The pall-bearers were six cousins of the deceased. Many beautiful floral tributes were placed on the casket. Among the mourners were friends from Detroit, Toronto, Berlin, Owen Sound, Walkerton, Hanover, Chesley, Elmwood, Southampton and Mooresburg. Addie Pfaff was in his 32nd year, born in Paisley, attended school there, and as he grew up took a place in his father's shoe store, eventually becoming a partner therein, taking charge of the salesroom and the grocery department which was added. He was a member of the Baptist church, and an active worker in that congregation.

Addie was a young man of notably gentle disposition, courteous to all, and counted as warm friends many of those among whom he had spent childhood and grown up to business life in the village. The suddenness with which he was removed from the public eye by illness was in itself a shock, and his demise has brought into the hearts of his fellow-townspeople an unusual degree of sorrow. The father, mother, brother and sisters have the heartfelt sympathy of old and young in their great bereavement.

Hard Training at Shorncliffe

Sert. A E Babcock writes from Sandling Camp on June 8th, to Mr W Megraw: DEAR FRIEND—Received your very welcome letter a few days ago, which found all the boys from Paisley, including myself, enjoying the best of health, but, oh, so busy. They can't give us enough to do in the eight hours drill through the day, but insist on us putting in about four hours in the night. This occurs about three times per week. They are really drilling the boys too hard, I think. Some of them can't stand the pressure. I had quite a surprise the other night while walking down the street at Folkestone, when I came face to face with Tom. Two hundred and fifty of the 34th Batt have come across to reinforce the Princess Pats. Tom has grown about two inches since I saw him last. They have been furnished with equipment that came from the front. Some of it blood-stained. There are quite a number of boys from old Bruce with the 34th bunch. Most of them are good men, too. We have had lovely weather ever since we came across. Have had very little rain, which the boys call regimental, because it mostly rains at night or on Sunday. But I would rather have it that way, as it makes it nicer for training. I suppose we would have to drill whether it rains or not. Our principal work now consists of attack and defence operations, bayonet fighting, physical training, outpost duty and trench digging, with a little trench warfare. Our day's work is from 6.30 a.m. to 5 p.m. solid training. We have to get up at 5.30 a.m. day in and day out. I think they must intend us to go as a division, as they haven't sent any drafts as yet from our outfit. Some of the other regiments of the 2nd contingent have been sent across to re-inforce the different units. Alex Blue and Jim Watt are on the sanitary police around camp. Jack McDougall and Gordon Daniel are still in the transport section. Sam Tooke is in the Base Co yet and is a new corporal. Well, I will say good-bye for this time. Remember me to all the folks. Yours to the last ditch. ANDREW.

CANADIAN NATIONAL EXHIBITION

The Canadian National Exhibition, which will be held from Aug 28th to Sept 13th, will mark a great epoch in the history of the Patriotic service. This year is essentially a patriotic year, and every every event that marks its progress breathes most the spirit of Patriotism and Imperialism.

When the smoke of battle has passed away and the great guns have ceased belching forth their messages of death, and the wave of peace has settled on the surface of the world, when other years and other times have changed the strong spirit of national hatred to National understanding, the year 1915 will still be engraved upon the memories of the people of the world.

As this year is destined to become historical, so every event connected with it must also be historical. For many years one of the greatest institutions of this country has been the Canadian National Exhibition, when people from every part of the Dominion and from the United States spend two weeks of enjoyment, of enlightenment and amusement. In one of the finest beauty spots in Canada.

At the Exhibition this year will be exhibited for everyone to see all kinds of evidences of German Kultur, from the helmets of the trench taunted Uhlans to the barbarous device, the asphyxiating gas bomb. Big guns that had done their deadly work before they fell into the hands of our soldiers; shells of every calibre; helmets and uniforms taken from the bodies of dead Germans; in fact what Krupp's have been able to create will be shown at the Exhibition this year.

PLYMOUTH Binder Twine

"Good morning, Tom, I see you are having some trouble with your Binder."

"Yes, I am having a lot of trouble with it, and I have tried ever so many kinds of Binder Twine, but it's no use. It simply won't work."

"Well, I don't wonder at it not working for you. Why, you are using twine of inferior quality. No binder would work satisfactorily with that Twine."

"All Twine is the same, is it not?"

"That's what I thought, until I used Plymouth Twine. I had the same trouble with my binder as you are having now. I was advised to use Plymouth Twine. I did so, and now I never have any trouble. One ball of Plymouth Twine will convince you that it is the best Twine on the market."

"I hear a lot of talking about Plymouth Twine, but always thought all Twine was the same. I believe you're right, Bob, the next Twine I buy will be Plymouth."

Use Plymouth Binder Twine. We sell it.

Subscription Arrears to The Advocate

THERE is several hundred dollars still due us on arrears for subscription to The Advocate. We have quite regularly sent our accounts out in an endeavor to collect all. Some, however, have neglected to respond to our requests for payment. Subscribers who neglect the little matter of remitting regularly do not, perhaps, understand the position we are placed in because of not receiving from them what is due us. We do not believe there are more than only a few who would deliberately beat us out of our dues, and we do not propose to treat delinquents as rogues unless we actually find they are such. Nevertheless, we are obliged to make a special effort to collect all arrears, and we have handed over to The Publishers' Ad justing Association a list of behind-handers who will hear from them immediately. Prompt attention to the first notice of indebtedness will save additional expense.

We derive no particular pleasure from the pursuit of delinquents, but it seems that it is a necessary part of the business of managing a newspaper office, so we must, that's all.

Kindly avoid all unpleasantness by remitting the amount of your account at once.

Yours truly,

D. McKENZIE, Publisher

News from the Trenches

Lying here this afternoon on straw in a loft, while the sun shines brightly through two little windows in the roof opposite, the past week's experience seems more like a dream than a reality. The straw underneath us has been trodden and lain on by hundreds before us but it is comfortable compared to the dugouts in the trenches. Moreover we had a good night's sleep and just a short time ago a hot meal. Then the sound of the guns comes but faintly from the distance. I must not forget also that we had a real wash and shave this morning and are looking forward to a bath tomorrow.

We were in the trenches a week this session. In some respects we were better off than in the last, but again we had to work harder. My own platoon laid at Orchard Farm, a short distance from the front trench, as a working party. Carrying ammunition, sand bags and fatigues was our work. It may sound better than being in the front line, but I think I prefer the line as we were constantly passing to the front, and then we had to dig a trench from the front line to the second, which means standing higher than the parapet until you dig down, or perhaps if you are lucky, the earth may be soft enough to dig while down on a knee.

You will have read of the general attack along the line. The battalion made a charge while we lay in the communication trench with picks and shovels ready to jump over the parapet to dig a trench between our line and the one taken from the enemy.

The bombardment of the guns was very fierce. The din became so great that it was impossible to distinguish our own from the enemy's guns and shells. The air seemed to be filled with rushing and bursting shells and bullets. Lying flat in our trench, just waiting, was most trying on the nerves. For two hours this kept up and then the earth seemed to rock under us, while the air was conjested in the neighborhood with clods of earth. The last commotion was caused by the explosion of a mine under the German trench. Three minutes were allowed for the air to clear, when over the parapet went the boys with a cheer that rose high above the noise of the guns, the first trench fell and the rush was continued to the second.

Unfortunately we were unable to hang on to the advantage gained. The next day a repetition of the attack was as unlucky. The enemy was most firmly entrenched. This has been a most contentious spot for months with neither side gaining any appreciable advantage.

Where our platoon laid a party of the Cold Stream Guard had about to hand fight against armed Germans. The spot is marked by a large crest of the Coarde, set with flowers which all passers help to keep fresh. Only parts of the walls stand while the orchard has two trenches through it.

The only building around that was not in ruins was a small shrine alongside the road. Trusting you are well,

Yours sincerely, Mac.

FISHING WITH POISON

Thee natives of Rarotonga, one of the islands in the South Pacific Ocean, have a singular method of catching fish in which the whole community takes part. On the shore of the island there are many long, narrow lagoons, each lying between a beach and an outer reef of coral, that usually swarm with fish. The natives choose one of these stretches of shallow water for the fish drive, and close al breaks in the reef by having nets across them or building up rough barriers with pieces of coral.

When they have done that, 400 or seven hundred men, women, and children wade into one end of the lagoon carrying little plaited fibre bags filled with utu nut. In most places the water is about three feet deep, and nowhere more than four feet; so the natives march slowly up the lagoon, trailing behind them the bags of utu nut. As this substance is wet it forms a peculiar narcotic, which it diffuses through the water. The process is called "poisoning the lagoon."

Half an hour is allowed for the "poison" to spread, and at the end of that time all the fish are under the influence of the drug, and are swimming about in a confused and aimless manner. The natives, armed with long, pronged spears, form a line that reaches from side to side of the lagoon, and march along shouting, splashing, and driving the intoxicated fish before them. When the fish are all collected at the farther end of the lagoon, the natives begin to cry, "Ehuu-hu-u-u!" and the barbed spears fly in all directions. The natives are very dexterous with the spears, and the fish are so sluggish, owing to the effects of the utu nut, that very few of them escape.

Why Athletes Get "Stale"

The question of short versus long periods of practice in training the human muscles for any particular kind of work is obviously one having far reaching application. Some interesting experiments on this subject were carried out by Dr. K. S. Lashley, of Johns Hopkins University. Acquisition of skill in archery was selected as the subject of observation. Twenty untrained persons were divided into three groups. One group shot five arrows with the English longbow per day; another twenty shots per day; and the third, forty shots. The results showed conclusively that the group shooting only five times a day improved in accuracy with less expenditure of time in practice than was required by either of the other groups for the same amount of improvement. A report on the experiments says: "The relatively greater efficiency of short periods of practice continuing for many days is in accordance with the results of the study of animals and of speech habits in man, and indicates that in training to muscular feats, in both animals and men, the length of practice periods required is usually too great for maximum efficiency."

Harnessing Volcanoes

Italy's newest product is electric energy from volcanic steam. Not far from the little city of Volterra is a region of volcanic hot springs that for a century have been a source of boric acid, and that in addition supply heat for drying the crystals and for the power needed in preparing the material for market. Borings of 30 feet or 40 feet are said to yield an unfailing supply of steam at pressures up to more than three atmospheres, and of temperatures up to more than 700 degrees. The steam has been wastefully used in small engines of an old, non-condensing type, but in recent experiments the heat of the springs—on account of the impurities contained—is made to generate steam from fresh water, and this is employed in low-pressure turbines for driving electric generators. The large area to be served with electric energy from the earth's own heat, if present expectations are realized, will include the neighboring cities of Volterra, Siena, and Leghorn.

Prof. Reithdorf on German Militarism

"The underlying Causes of the War" is the subject upon which Prof F V Reithdorf, of Woodstock, has delivered numerous addresses in Bruce and other parts of Ontario. We take the following report of his address from the Owen Sound Advertiser:

The two underlying causes of the war he stated to be German militarism and the house of Hohenzollern.

About twelve years ago, when the Professor left Germany, he had no knowledge of the English language. His father had objected to his learning it, but nevertheless he had come to Canada. He had never been a German jingoist, because he had recognized that good was in all nations. He had foreseen the war but when it came he had been saddened, shocked. He had at times been told that he was too strongly opposed to the Kaiser. That was before the war. Now it had been proved that he was right. Before the war started he had made up his mind what he would do for he was sure war would come. When it came he had a statement published, giving his stand in his home city of Woodstock. This was published broadcast and soon he had been asked to go ont and take the platform for patriotic purposes, and he had consented. The Germans in Canada were being shown the light. As for the causes, it was not the assassination of the Crown Prince of Austria which caused it. "The stage was set, the ground was cleared. All ready—that assassination was merely the light wind which fanned the blaze which spread over Europe." The Kaiser had said that the German army was the most democratic in the world. On the surface it looked alright. To strangers it actually seemed it was the most democratic in the world. But it was not the case really. The boys in the army served one, two or three years. Every poor boy in Germany had to serve two or three years whether he wanted to or not. Those poor boys are locked out entirely from the good things in Germany. The boys who were sent to the higher schools serve one year. At the expiration of the year the man comes out a sergeant and could get a lieutenancy in eight weeks. The poor boy had to report at twenty years of age, goes where he is sent, lives in the barracks, receives severe treatment. Life is hard in the barracks, and rough. There were no professional soldiers in the German army, but there were professional officers and professional non-commissioned officers. The military families of the country supplied the pupils for the military academy. Even the little boys in the playrooms of rich homes played at war, studying the big cities of Britain, Russia and France. At ten years the boy of the military family goes to military academy and he is taught that he is better than the ordinary boy who does not wear the uniform. In school the boy is taught that war is glorious, that in it he will win glory and honor. Even if he is killed he is taugh that he will go to heaven. The great military families provided and continued to provide officers. Non-commissioned officers are given government positions. Not a policeman in Germany but is an ex-soldier. All these preached militarism and the doctrine of the military cult grows and grows. This was the chief difficulty in the way of the German people arising and crushing militarism.

In 1895 the German nation held a celebration of the victories of 1870. This was a spur to warlike sentiment. The class of militarist tendencies had been worked up to warlike fever. But the government had approved the spirit and had passed the word through the militarist class that the time was hardly ripe—but in 1912 it was expected. At Essen on the centenary of the Krupp works, 1912, the Kaiser, the Crown Prince, Count Von Bohlen and General Von Bernhardi, held a conference that the time was not quite yet—but soon. Which merely meant that the great guns on which Krupps were working were not quite ready.

Von Bernhardi was sent on a special mission to the United States to fan pro-German sentiment. There was no danger of war in 1913, for William the Kaiser was superstitious. In 1913 the Kaiser would have had no war if half a dozen Crown Princes had been assassinated.

The Hohenzollern family tradition was that the sun always was given more territory than the father had received. Machiavelli was the guiding genius in diplomacy for the Hohenzollern. All was right if it were successful. All Hohenzollerns had observed the doctrine. Frederick the Great had caused every war they had fought. William the Kaiser, proudly declared that he followed in the footsteps of Frederick the Great.

"Germany is going to lose—no doubt, and when it goes down, militarism is going to go down—But German blood will not have been shed in vain, because the "German people will be free."

Prof. Reithdorf from speeches of the Kaiser. He thought the Kaiser not sane. Bismark had feared that William would estrange Germany from all friendly nations. Bismarck had been a good prophet, for not a respectable nation had remained a true friend to Germany, unless the Turk could be called respectable. There was a brutality, disregard for human life, immorality in the German army always. An officer was but slightly punished. German warfare was as barbarous as in the middle ages. Belgium afforded a good example of what German militarism did. He had not been surprised when the Lusitania was sunk.

The wind-up was one of the most rousing recruiting appeals ever heard in any city in Canada. "I want every young man who can go to do so. We must fight and die. No better death can come to a boy than die in the trenches. It is a blessed death, that for liberty and freedom. Young men are needed. It is not enough that you say, 'O, I am loyal,' but you must know that you are needed to go to the front. I have had my life in danger for those who do not agree with me, but I do not care. I am willing, if need be, to die for Britain. I am not afraid. Now, if I, of German blood, am willing to do this, how much more should you?"

CHAPTER III. (Con'd.)

Valeria ran her eyes quickly over the letter, and then she threw herself into a chair—but it was to laugh. Miss Sutherland raised her head in silent surprise and displeasure. When she found her voice, "Why, my dear, unsophisticated girl, there is nothing except a great deal of food for laughter in all this! He has been in New York at the height of the annual fevers, and has caught it! Not the first hot-headed young Southerner sent to a Northern college who has fallen into the same series of fevers. But they all come safely through it! When they find out that to free their slaves means just to empty their pockets, and go to work with their own hands or brains."

"Oh, don't! Only think of it, even at its best! Here, for weeks past, he has been mingling freely with these sort of persons—mixing in their assemblies, where people of all colors and castes meet on equal terms, in a stifling crowd—oh, Queen of Heaven! it is a ruinous dishonor—an unspeakable insult he has cast upon me, his betrothed!" she exclaimed, rising with all the proud and passionate energy of deep and strong conviction.

And again Mrs. Vivian gave way to a peal of silvery laughter, exclaiming, "Why, you simple maiden! gentlemen will do such odd things. But be comforted! He comes to us by sea, and will have passed through several hundred miles of salt sea wind before he reaches your fragrant boudoir."

"Do not pursue this subject! Do not, Valeria! Do not press it upon me so! It worries, it injures me—I feel it does!" said India, with energetic earnestness.

"I never saw you so deeply and strongly moved before. It is too good to keep—this ludicrous secret! Ah, here comes Mr. Bolling, with Uncle Clement in his wake, no doubt. I must tell Uncle Clement of his son-in-law's conversation or—die.

"Uncle, Uncle Clement! what do you think has happened to Mark?" Miss Sutherland sprang and caught her hand, and, pale as death, cried out. "On your life, Valeria—on your soul! You do not know my father; he abhors those sects with an exterminating fury of hatred! It was a sacred confidence. Give me the letter!" And she wrested the contended paper away.

"Hey-day! What the mischief is all this? I'll stand by and see fair play," exclaimed Mr. Bolling, who had just entered.

Blushing with anger at having suffered herself to be surprised out of her usual repose of manner, Miss Sutherland sat down in silent dignity, while Mrs. Vivian, still laughing, inquired, "Where is uncle?"

"I went down to the mill to bring him home to supper. Guess where he was? Gone over the other side of the river, to preside at the lynching of an incendiary. Upon my sacred word and honor!" exclaimed Uncle Billy, growing crimson in the face, "the most cruel, unjust, unwarrantable proceeding I ever heard of in all my life; though, to be perfectly fair, I must say it serves the fellow exactly right."

"Apropos—what did I tell you, Valeria?" said Miss Sutherland, in a low voice.

"And now, what is this mighty mystery that must be concealed from Clement?"

Mrs. Vivian and Miss Sutherland exchanged glances, and the latter replied: "It is a letter from Mr. Sutherland, sir, that concerns myself alone, and I do not choose to make its contents public, even at the suggestion of my dear esteemed friend here."

"Ah! But now, my dear child, let me say one word. Observe, therefore, what I say. There is no circumstance or combination of circumstances that will justify you in withholding any secret from your father; nevertheless, I am bound to say that nothing under the sun could excuse you in betraying even to him, the confidence of your betrothed husband. Now, I hope you understand your duty!"

"At least the advice is very practical!" said an ironical voice behind him. All turned to see Mr. Sutherland the elder, who had silently entered. He was of an unusually tall, attenuated form, with a yellow, bilious, cadaverous face, whetted to the keenest edge by care and rapacity, and surrounded by hair and whiskers so long and bristling as to give quite a ferocious aspect to a set of features that without them would have looked merely cunning. He strode into the midst of the circle, and standing before his daughter, demanded in an authoritative tone, "Give me that letter, Miss Sutherland!" She turned deadly pale, but without an instant's hesitation arose to her feet, placed the letter in her bosom, and stood fronting him.

Seeing that the matter was about to take a very serious turn, Mrs. Vivian playfully interfered, by nestling her soft little hand into the great bony one of the planter, and saying, with her bewitching smile, "Ah, then, Mr. Sutherland, let young people alone. Do not rifle a young girl's little mysteries. Remember when you were youthful—it was not so long ago but what you can remember, I am sure," she said with an arch glance. "And when you used to write sweet nonsense to one beautiful Cecile, her mother, how would you have liked it if the practical commercial eyes of good Monsieur Dumoulins had read your letters? Come! give me your arm to supper; we have waited for you half an hour;" and the lively lady slipped her arm into his; and Mr. M——rland, with the very ill grace of a bear led captive, suffered himself to be carried off. Mr. Billy Bolling, with a flourishing bow, gave his hand to Miss Sutherland, and Paul Sutherland led Rosalie.

The apartment was very pleasant. The inner shutters of wire gauze, that were closed against the mosquitoes, did not exclude the fresh and fragrant evening breeze that fanned the room. The elegant tea-table stood in the midst, and the whole was illuminated by light subdued through shades of ground glass—not figured—but plain, and diffusing a soft, clear, even radiance. They sat down to the table, and coffee and tea were served by waiters from the sideboard. To dispel the last shades of suspicion and discontent from the mind of Mr. Sutherland, Mrs. Vivian remarked: "We are to have Mr. Mark Sutherland home in a few days, if I understand aright. N'est ce pas, chere India?" Miss Sutherland only bowed, and the conversation turned upon their approaching voyage to Europe.

CHAPTER IV.

On the opposite side of the Pearl from Cashmere, and a little farther down the river, and back from its banks, in a small vale, embosomed in hills, was Silentshades, the home of Mark Sutherland. The homestead was the same that had been built by his father, upon first laying out the plantation. The house was very modest and unpretending—a moderate-sized, oblong building of two stories, painted light brown, with green shutters, and with piazza surrounding both floors. The pillars of the piazzas were thickly twined with running vines, that, branching and interlacing, formed a beautiful trellage of foliage and flowers. Doors from this piazza admitted directly into the rooms upon the first floor. In the right-hand front room, opening upon two sides into the piazza, upon the next evening after the events related in the last chapter, sat Mrs. Sutherland. She was a medium-sized, full-formed brunette, of perhaps forty years of age, yet so perfect was her physical organization, and so well regulated her moral nature, so even, calm, and blameless had been the tenor of her life, that now, she was a specimen not, certainly, of youthful beauty—but of a rare kind of matured and perfected matronly beauty. Her style was noble and simple. Her rich, abundant hair of glossy black, with purplish light, was plainly divided above a broad forehead, and laying down upon the temples in heavy looped bands, was carried behind and twisted into a thick, rich coil, and wound round and round into a large knot fastened with pins; there were no combs, curls, ribbons, or fripperies of any sort, to mar the simple, grand beauty of the head. The eyebrows were black and lightly arched; the eyes large, dark, and very quiet, under their curtain of long black lashes; the nose perfectly straight; and the cheeks, lips, and chin, perfectly beautiful in contour. Her complexion was of that mellow, Italian brown, flushing and deepening in the cheeks to a carnation richness. (Uncle Billy, who sincerely admired his sister, always said that her complexion ever reminded him of the bloom on a ripe, luscious peach.) Her dress was very simple—a black silk with a delicate lace collar pinned with a small diamond brooch. She sat in an easy chair, reading a letter; and as she read and turned the leaves a quiet smile would just dawn and play on her lips. By her side was a stand with an open book, a work-box, and a little silver hand-bell. At last, without removing her eyes from the letter, she smilingly extended her hand, and rang the little bell. A servant entered, and still without withdrawing her eyes from the fascinating letter, she said:

"Send Mrs. Jolly to me William."

The man withdrew with a bow, and the housekeeper entered and awaited the commands of the lady.

Slowly and smilingly folding up the letter, she said, "Mr. Sutherland is coming home this evening. He brings a friend, a young gentleman, with him. I wish you to have their chambers prepared; and do remember to close the wire-gauze blinds, and burn catalpa leaves in the rooms, to destroy any mosquitoes that may remain."

"And at what time shall I order supper, madam?"

"Ah, yes—it will be necessary to put it back two or three hours. You must judge of that. Mr. Sutherland may arrive at any time between this and ten o'clock."

The housekeeper left the room, and the lady sank into her chair again to re-peruse her letter, smiling and murmuring to herself, half aloud—"Dear boy! dearest Mark. Sure no mother ever had a son like mine. Comes to me first—comes to me before hastening to see his lady-love—his adored India. Dearest Mark—but this devotion shall be rewarded. I shall find his India here." And she went to a writing-desk, took paper, and pen, and ink, and wrote the following note:

Silentshades, June, 184—.

Dear India: My dear niece, but dearer daughter, just get into your carriage and come to me, and do not pause to wonder why I ask you. It is late, I know, but the moon shines brightly, and the roads are good—your driver is careful, and the distance is short. More than all, dear daughter, I consider my coming very important. So hasten, darling, to

Your affectionate aunt and mother,
Helen B. Sutherland.

Having sealed this letter, the lady rang the bell and gave it in charge of a footman, urging dispatch.

Soon a waiter entered, and lighted up the rooms; and he had scarcely closed the blinds and withdrawn, before the sound of carriage-wheels was heard approaching, and the lady hastened out into the hall. The carriage paused before the door, and in an instant after Mark Sutherland had alighted, and was clasped to the bosom of his mother.

"Oh, my dear Mark! I am so overjoyed to have you again!"

"Dear mother, I am so proud and happy to find you looking so well! Permit me to present my friend—Mr. Lincoln Lauderdale—Mrs. Sutherland."

A low bow from the gentleman, and a deep courtesy from the lady, and then smilingly throwing off her habitual reserve, Mrs. Sutherland offered her hand, saying—

"I am very glad to see you, Mr. Lauderdale. You are not a stranger, I assure you. My son has taught me to esteem you, and desire your friendship."

And with another smile she gave her hand to her guest, and permitted him to lead her into the drawing-room.

Mr. Sutherland remained in the hall to give some directions to the grooms, and to order the baggage of his guest to be taken to his chamber. After which he entered the parlor, and laying his hand affectionately upon his friend's shoulder, said:

"My dear Lauderdale, when you feel disposed to change your dress—Flamingo will show you your apartment. Supper will be ready—Madam, when will supper be ready?"

"My dear Mark, in an hour—an hour and a half——"

"In an hour, Lincoln; that will give you ample time. Flame! lights here. Show Mr. Lauderdale to his room, and consider yourself in his exclusive service while he honors us with his company."

"Thank you, but really I do not need——"

"When you have been subjected to the enervating influence of this climate for a week, you will better know what you need."

By this time Flamingo had made his appearance with chamber lights. Lauderdale arose to follow him. Sutherland accompanied him into the hall.

"My dear Mark, did I understand you to say that Mrs. Sutherland was your own mother?"

"Undoubtedly my own mother! Besides, my friend, pardon me! but really, where are your eyes? We are said to be the image of each other!"

"Well, now although both of you are dark, with high complexions, I cannot see the likeness," said Lauderdale, mischievously; adding, "she is very handsome."

"Is she not!" echoed Sutherland, with enthusiasm, and accompanying Lauderdale up-stairs—"the handsomest woman in the world, except one. You should see India. And, more than that, she—my mother, I mean—is the most excellent, except—none."

"I cannot think that she was so handsome in early youth as she is now."

"Oh, I suppose her youth to her maturity was as the budding to the blooming rose. Here is your room. Make Flame supply you with anything you may need, that is not at hand; and for your life do not open the wire shutters: if you do, you may look in the glass in ten minutes after and fancy yourself ill with the erysipelas. Au revoir! When you are ready, come down."

Mark Sutherland left the room, and instead of seeking his own chamber to refresh himself with a change of raiment, he hastened down the stairs, entered the parlor, and once more clasped his mother fervently in his arms, and——

"My dearest mother," and "My dearest Mark," were the words exchanged between them.

"What, oh, Mark, how haggard you look, my love! You have been ill, and never let me know it."

"No, upon my honor, mother!"

"Ah, but you are so pale and thin, and your expression is so anxious. What can it be, Mark?"

WOMAN DOCTOR DOING FINE WORK

ORGANIZES AND MANAGES MILITARY HOSPITAL.

Dr. Louisa Garrett Anderson Has Served Prison Term as Suffragette.

Since September Miss Louisa Garrett Anderson, an Englishwoman of note as a suffragette, has been doing great things for the wounded. Early in the war she and the British Government felt mutually shy of one another, and her first hospital was opened under French authority. Her next hospital was at Wimereux, where she was among her own people, and where the rations (most incontestable of all evidence of recognition) supplied to her patients were the official rations of the British soldier.

The mutual shyness having been dispelled, the War Office asked Miss Garrett Anderson to return home and make a hospital in London. Out of her own resourcefulness, experience, and initiative she makes her hospital. It has five hundred beds; it is to be in working order in record time; it is to be wholly self-sufficient—that is to say, Miss Garrett Anderson herself is wholly self-sufficient. How has she come by the necessary ability? Not, certainly, by the fostering foresight of a paternal Government. No count was taken before the war of the possibility of a woman doing the things she is doing, and even after the war was well in hand there was still no effort made to secure the services of the whole group of extraordinary young Englishwomen to which she belongs. She now holds authority equal to that of a Major in the R.A.M.C., and the Press is eager to give her the salute. She rather relishes the humor of the situation when she tries to persuade the public, against its will, that she is not a Major—that no woman can hold a commission in his Majesty's Army.

Once in Jail.

She remembers that the only time before the war when the authorities showed any special interest in getting and keeping hold of her was when a magistrate, not without comments, sentenced her to six weeks' imprisonment. For forty years her mother and her aunt had worked with all propriety, for the cause of Women's Rights. After that space of time, the ridicule of Parliament and the boolngs of medical students—of students beaten on their own ground—palled on the younger generation, and a window was broken. Some good, as it happened, came of the incident—and the sentence. Miss Garrett Anderson's articles on the conditions and management of women in prison make, with Lady Constance Lytton's papers on the same subject, an invaluable basis for reform.

The family record is an extraordinary one. Her mother, Dr. Elizabeth Garrett Anderson, was one of the first women doctors. She began her medical studies in 1860; and though the College of Surgeons and the College of Physicians refused to admit her to their examinations, she obtained a license to practise from the Society of Apothecaries in 1865. Paris had fewer prejudices than London and, passing the medical examinations of its University, she received her M.D. degree. Later on, when England realized that she was not to be denied, honors were not lacking, and her daughter's degree is a London one.

H.M.S. Warrior, launched in 1860, was the first ironclad.

PRACTICAL FARMING

The Handy Barn.

Good barns cost money, but when the farmer once knows that by the proper construction of his barn and other outbuildings, he can save the work of a man, it will readily become clear to him that the investment will pay big interest in the long run.

There are a few things that are absolutely necessary in the farm barn. It must be well lighted, well ventilated, easy to keep clean, so arranged as to economize space, so as much stock as possible can be housed. It should be easy of access, and its location should be such as to insure a well-drained barnyard. With the above features incorporated into the farm barn, the sort or style of the building matters not.

A Well Braced Long Ladder.

Farmers who have occasion to use long ladders often find them weak and dangerous when set up at the proper angle. This can be overcome by a wire brace. Get a blacksmith to make two V-shaped irons, and fasten them to the side sills with small bolt. Bore small holes through sills at each end. Take two pieces of No. 9 wire and fasten to the sills at one end by passing through the holes and forming a lock by turning the end back through the holes over small iron pins, then pass the wire over the V-irons, drawing them tight with a lever and fasten at the other ends in the same way. This brace will more than double the strength of the ladder and add but little expense.

Making Good Butter.

The essentials in the making of good butter can be secured by anyone who will take a little pains. There has been so much discussion of the subject of caring for milk and cream through the columns of the farm papers that it really seems that a better grade of butter could be made now with modern equipment than at any time in the past. And if a high-grade article can be produced, and it is sent to market packed in a dainty manner that will appeal to the eyes as well as to the tastes of the buyers, it will sell at a price that will assure the producer a good margin of profit.

Ten Good Poultry Rules.

1—Provide fine grit, charcoal, shell and bone from the start.
2—Give grass range or plenty of green food.
3—Have fresh, clean water always available.
4—Feed only sweet, wholesome foods.
5—Avoid damp and soiled litter.
6—Disinfect brooders frequently.
7—Test all beef scrap before feeding.
8—Keep chickens active by allowing them to become hungry once daily.
9—Feed moist mash sparingly.

NERVOUS CHILDREN

There is much criticism of modern educational methods that require too much work at school children, allowing them too little time for play and preventing sufficient out-of-door exercise. When the study of music or any other accomplishment, with the necessary practice, is added the strain is increased. Under these conditions the blood becomes impoverished and fails to nourish the nerves. The child becomes restless, and twitching of the muscles follow. Sometimes the child stumbles in walking and drops what it tries to hold. Pallor, listlessness and irritability are symptoms that early show that the blood and nerves are failing to meet the demands made upon them, and that St. Vitus dance has fastened its hold upon the child.

In this condition there is no tonic can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which build up the blood, strengthen the nerves and safely help to meet the demands of the growing child. Out-of-door exercise, nourishing food, plenty of sleep with these tonic pills will cure even the most severe cases of St. Vitus dance. We offer the following proof: "Up to the age of ten years," says Mrs. Johnson, of Hemford, N.S., "my son Calvin was as healthy and rugged as any child could be. Then he began to complain that his eyes hurt him, and of pains in the head, and began to fall back in his studies at school. Then I noticed a twitching of the muscles of his face and arms, and later his whole body seemed to be in constant motion. Our family physician was called in and pronounced the trouble a severe attack of St. Vitus dance. He was under the doctor's treatment for some three months, but did not seem to improve. We had taken him from school, and were careful that nothing should excite him, but notwithstanding he grew worse, and the least start would bring on attacks of hysteria. This went on for some months until Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were brought to my attention, and we decided to give him this medicine. After using a few boxes there was a noticeable improvement, and by the time he had taken nine or ten boxes he had recovered his former good health. There has been no sign of a return of the trouble, and I can scarcely say how thankful we feel for the complete restoration o four son's health."

Parents who find their growing boys or girls becoming nervous should lose no time in giving them Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. You may ward off an attack of St. Vitus dance, or if the trouble has reached that stage the Pills will effect a cure. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A SHORTAGE OF SHIPS.

It is evident from reports on trade conditions in British Colubia which have just been received by officers of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, that the war in Europe was not the entire cause of the business depression, from the effects of which the people in the coast province are now recovering. Representative business men from Vancouver and Victoria almost unanimously advance the opinion, that speculations of the boom period in real estate, account for the greater portion of their troubles. They add that the European conflict has had the effect of complicating conditions of trade, but contend that the slowing down of provincial commerce may justly be attributed to the economies British Columbians were forced to resort to in order to meet the payments for the real estate they had purchased long before, in the hope of obtaining a prompt and excessive profit. But it also seems from the reports, that the days of discipline have resulted in the formation of a new perspective towards business generally, and that a revival which now appears to be imminent will find a people without illusions and with a more intelligently directed courage waiting to take advantage of its opportunities. These reports to the C. N. R. are supplementary to those published recently in connection with the survey of trade conditions in Canada, which was conducted by that company.

In British Columbia, the worst effects, commercially, of the war overseas, have been experienced by the men engaged in the lumbering industry. The demand for building material from the people in the Prairie Provinces fell off sharply almost immediately after the outbreak of hostilities, and has not yet returned to its former volume. This undoubtedly adversely affected a number of smaller operators, or at least those enterprises lacking adequate backing, but the larger concerns which were well financed have been able to easily weather the re-adjustment period. At present, it would appear that the mills in British Columbia would be doing a much larger business if ships were available to move the product to its destination. A shortage of bottoms as a matter of fact, appears to be the chief handicap. While prices have eased off somewhat, the shrinkage has been taken up, possibly more than taken up by better, and what a manufacturer describes as "more tractable," labor. A remedy for the price trouble is being sought in plans for the organizing of a central selling agency, similar to that operating in the State of Washington.

The mill men on the coast say that stocks of lumber all over the world are badly in need of new supplies. If from the confidence engendered by the harvesting of a good crop, building resumes its former activity in the Prairie Provinces, and vessels are able to clear to newly developed markets in Great Britain, the West Indies, and the American Atlantic Coast States, they expect a business which will tax all their available facilities. In the meantime, it is shown that one mill in Vancouver is working overtime on new orders, which will keep it busy for a considerable period, and other lumber men are in daily expectation of orders for large quantities of building materials for reconstruction in Europe. There are evidences that the finest spruce of British Columbia is meeting with favor for the construction of aeroplanes, and several small supplies have been delivered.

The credit situation in the Province is improving, and it seems to be the general opinion that obligations have been well met when conditions are considered. Lumbermen report that their collections are satisfactory. The weaker dealers are not in the market to any extent, and the stronger firms are able to meet demands made upon them. Export lumber is sold on a basis of cash on delivery.

The Department of Agriculture for British Columbia, reports by wire that the agricultural situation is distinctly encouraging, and that weather conditions are favorable for growth. Increases are reported of land cleared, and in the areas devoted to crops of all kinds. The profits of poultry raising have been reduced to some extent owing to the high price of grain, but there has been satisfactory increase in dairying. In small fruits there is a fair crop. The selling organizations have been improved, and prices have been excellent so far. Truck farming is increasing, and the British Columbia produce is largely displacing imports from the United States. The prices for beef, pork and mutton are good and likely to so continue. There is a satisfactory increase in hog raising. The establishment of public markets is proving very satisfactory, and is reducing the cost of living. Unskilled labor at low prices is plentiful; skilled labor is difficult to obtain, and fairly good prices are paid. The report adds that comparatively little grain will be imported from the Prairie Provinces this year on account of the larger area sown. The tendency appears to be for city people to exchange town properties for farm lands, and many appear to be anxious to leave the town and engage in agricultural work. A large increase in production is looked for in the next few years.

Prince at the Front.

An interesting picture of the Prince of Wales at the Front is drawn by Sir William Robertson-Nicoll, who tells us that His Royal Highness continues when circumstances permit, to take a six-mile walk before breakfast. When asked if he went to bed very early in order to accomplish this, the Prince replied that he could not go to bed very early, as he wrote to his father, mother, and sister every night.

The only way that has been found to induce the Prince to take some precaution when under shell fire is, according to Sir William, to represent to him that serious inconveniences might be caused if he were taken prisoner. For to any remark about his being killed, the Prince answers cheerily that he has many brothers at home, so it wouldn't matter.

BUILT A MONUMENT

The Best Sort in the World.

"A monument built by and from Postum," is the way a man describes himself. He says:

"For years I was a coffee drinker until at last I became a terrible sufferer from dyspepsia, constipation, headaches and indigestion. (The effects on the system of tea and coffee drinking are very similar, because they each contain the drug, caffeine.)

"The different kinds of medicine I tried did not cure me, and finally some one told me to leave off coffee and take up Postum. I was fortunate in having the Postum made strictly according to directions on the pkg., so that from the start I liked it.

"Gradually my condition changed. The old troubles disappeared and I began to feel well again. My appetite became good and I could digest food. Now I am restored to strength and health, can sleep sound all night and awake with a fresh and rested body.

"I am really a monument built by Postum, for I was a physical wreck, distressed in body and mind, and am now a strong, healthy man. I know exactly what made the change; it was leaving off coffee and using Postum."

Postum comes in two forms:

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

USIT

Has Removed Wrinkles For Over 2,000 Years

Since the time of Cleopatra, the beauties of the East have preserved their fresh bloom of youth and kept their skins free from all wrinkles by the application of a combination of Oriental oils, the preparation of which is a secret handed down from generation to generation.

A Canadian traveler in Egypt was fortunate enough to secure the secret from an Arab. After exhaustive tests of the preparation in England, United States and Canada, the preparation has been placed in the hands of druggists everywhere under the trade marked name of Usit.

100 Years of Peace

It is a hundred years since the Treaty of Ghent ended the last war between the British Empire and the United States of America; for a full century two great powers, with interests which occasionally conflicted and with tempers which were not invariably conciliatory, have lived at peace and in steadily increasing goodwill. Plans were on foot to celebrate this great event, and had not Fate—and Germany—willed otherwise, this summer would have seen a celebration of great magnitude and of exceptional interest and value. But the war came. Canadians are bending all their energies, and devoting their thoughts, to the work of fighting for the British Empire, and our friends of the United States have been confronted with anxious and absorbing problems. In the circumstances, the plans for a great commemoration of the First Century of Peace between the Great Empire and the Great Republic had to be reconsidered.

Those in charge of the movement, after consulting the leading men connected with it both in Canada and the United States, decided on a modified programme. That aspect of the plans which contemplated public rejoicing has been postponed, but those portions—the larger portions, it should be said—of the plans, which laid emphasis on education and on the cultivation of a reasonable frame of mind in the conduct of international relations are being prosecuted. The public rejoicings are only postponed, and the organizations formed to carry out the commemoration were encouraged to continue their work of preparation and education, so that when the war is over and victory has crowned the British and allied forces, fitting festivities might be held. These festivities are likely to be all the more impressive in view of the fact that we shall be celebrating not only the conclusion of a century of peace with our neighbors but the overthrow of those forces which have, for so many years, menaced the peace of the whole world.

The Canadian Peace Centenary Association—which, by the way, is not and never has been a "Peace Society" has just issued a pamphlet which sheds an interesting light on the temper prevailing between the Canadian and American peoples. The ratification of the Treaty of Ghent took place on February 17th, 1815, and on the centenary date great numbers of messages were exchanged between the President of the Canadian Peace Centenary Association, Sir Edmund Walker, and the Governors of the States; between cities and towns on both sides of the line; between Boards of Trade, and even between individual firms and their correspondents across the border. These are printed in the pamphlet, and bear witness to a cordiality of spirit which affords a welcome contrast to the dark animosities which make other continents so dreadful a spectacle to-day.

These messages display a wonderful unanimity of conviction, and it may be added that many of those from the neighboring Republic convey the heartiest good wishes for the success of our cause. Another feature of the pamphlet is the description of the services held on Sunday, February 14th, in an extraordinary number of churches in both countries.

The public celebrations of this triumph of reasonableness and good will should be one of the earliest events after the conclusion of the present dreadful struggle. The Canadian Peace Centenary Association, and its corresponding body in the United States, the American Peace Centenary Committee, have made all the necessary preparations, and it is to be hoped that their work will be crowned with success.

Will Quickly Cure Any Sour Stomach

Relieves Fullness After Meals.

"When I was working around the farm last winter, I had an attack of inflammation," writes Mr. F. P. Hawkins, of Port Richmond. "I was weak for a long time, but well enough to work until spring. But something went wrong with my bowels for I had to use salts or physic all the time. My stomach kept sour, and always after eating there was pain and fulness, and all the symptoms of intestinal indigestion. Nothing helped me until I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Instead of hurting, like other pills, they acted very mildly, and seemed to heal the bowels. I did not require large doses to get results with Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and feel so glad that I have found a mild yet certain remedy. To-day I am well—no pain, no sour stomach, a good appetite, able to digest anything. This is a whole lot of good for one medicine to do, and I can say Dr. Hamilton's Pills are the best pills, and my letter, I am sure, proves it.

TO CRIPPLE WAR CARS.

Germany Is Transporting Bottles to Belgium.

From the German point of view everything leads to the necessity of her endeavoring to cripple the motor transport services of her enemies, according to one of the English motoring writers. This is not as easy as dropping bombs on airship sheds, railway stations, and the like, because the motor vehicles are dispersed all over the theatres of war and are to be counted by tens of thousands.

"Therefore Germany is seeking the means of crippling our use of such machines," he says, "when the time comes for us to make our advance. As usual, her methods are characterized by that most uncommon quality, common sense.

"Large quantities of empty bottles have been sent into Belgium, there to be broken up and in due course strewn on any roads along which it might be necessary for the Germans to make a retreat. Inasmuch as the bulk of the motor transport service of a modern army necessarily consists of vehicles equipped with solid tires, it might be assumed that the proposed tactics would prove more or less a waste of enterprise on the part of the enemy.

"His calculation, however, is based on the fact that the fastest classes of motor vehicles used by the nations now at war, including varieties of armored cars, which could be used effectively for following up and harassing a retreating enemy, are equipped with pneumatic tires. Of course, various preparations exist for filling these tires so that they become immune from puncture, nor would there be any difficulty in equipping a few armor-plated cars with apparatus for sweeping the road surfaces in front of a train of vehicles pursuing a retreating foe.

"Undoubtedly, the armored motor car as an instrument of offence is destined to play a larger part in the war than it has so far assumed."

Tea Is a War Munition.

Tea is being used as the most portable beverage ration in the trenches in Europe. The belligerent Governments are buying immense quantities and the troops are acquiring a taste for tea that will greatly increase the future consumption. Cheap tea is a thing of the past now that the new demand has arisen, and rising prices may be expected for some time.

Starving the Belgians.

It is reported in Rotterdam that the German military authorities in several of the Belgian provinces, in an effort to force the civilians to work for the army of occupation, have withheld food supplies sent in by the commission for the relief of Belgium.

In Malines the supply of food is said to have been stopped because the mechanics refused to work in the railroad shops. At Courtrai the workers are reported to have been deprived of food because of their refusal to work in barbed wire factories, while similar action was taken at Roulaix on the refusal of the workers to make sandbags for trenches.

General von Bissing, Governor of Belgium, has issued a decree providing for the expropriation of the grain crops for the feeding of the civilian population. The decree, it is stated, aims at preventing a speculative advance in prices, and at an equable distribution of supplies.

FLOWER OF INDIAN ARMY.

The Sikhs Are Unhampered by Caste Prohibitions.

Mr. C. H. Payne (late of the Bhopal State Service) gives us a small volume of immediate interest in "A Short History of the Sikhs." It begins with Baba Nanak, whose birth in 1469 represents the first date in Sikh history, and concludes with a chapter on "Annexation—and After." It was Nanak who gave his disciples the name of "sikh," which means "disciple," and to him is due the most authoritative portion of the "Adi Granth Sahib," or Sacred Book of the Sikhs. A copy of the Sikh Scripture is still carried at the head of every Sikh regiment. The greatest Sikh leader was the military despot, Ranjit Singh (born in 1780), who never wore a royal head-dress and never used a throne. "My sword," said he, "is the only distinction I require." In his talent for military organization Ranjit Singh ranks first among Indian leaders, and as Mr. Payne observes, "his conquest of the Punjab was an achievement of which Napoleon himself, with the same means at his disposal, might have been proud."

There are now in the service of the Government 30,000 Sikh troops, who constitute the flower of the Indian army. Unhampered by caste prohibitions, the Sikh soldier will go anywhere and do anything—which explains his joy at serving for us now in France. He is hardy, good-tempered, patient under privations, and obedient to discipline, while his courage is such that he never knows when he is beaten. Sir Lepel Griffin thinks "that the Sikhs, infantry and light cavalry, are, when well and sufficiently led by English officers, equal to any troops in the world, and superior to any with whom they are likely to come in contact."

Italy's Pretty Queen.

Pretty, dark, very charming in her own circle and very reserved out of it, the Queen of Italy is a devoted wife and mother. Visitors to Rome are apt to comment on the fact that she and the King do not go driving together; strangers are unaware of the court etiquet that makes it impossible for them to do so. "The two Queens!" cry the street children as Margherita and her daughter-in-law go by, the one in black, the other in the inevitable gris-perle. The pretty daughters are sometimes with them, the King never. The Queen's pearl-grey is the one complaint the Roman people have against her. They accept her pretty shyness, they like her looks, but her shopping habits they wholly disapprove. Dressing on one note, she never makes a strange color fashionable and profitable for a brief season; she is never responsible for the whims that give a fantastic interest to the crowd on the Pincio, and bring success to the dressmakers. It is a standing jest in the capital that every report of a garden party or bazaar attended by royalty finds the same phrase in print: "Her Majesty was present, in a gown of gris-perle."

"Do you think," asked the widower, "you could learn to love my children as you would if they were your own?"

Minard's Liniment Cures Colds, Etc.

Those tolling bells, which tells of sad farewells, tolled the sad news last Thursday afternoon of the death of Lella Crawford, second eldest daughter of J H Crawford. Although she had been sick for a little over a week the sad news was a great surprise to all as it was considered she was gaining from a slight attack of typhoid fever, which she had contracted on Thursday forenoon. She took a change for the worse and when medical aid arrived it was found that tubercular mengenitis had set in with death pronouncing itself victor in the afternoon. Although Lella had just passed her twelfth birthday, in May she was known to all for her mild and loving disposition and was termed the peacemaker at school. The funeral which was held on Saturday was very largely attended. Wreathes, sheaves and boquets of flowers covered her little coffin, among which was a very large and beautiful wreath from the teacher and scholars of S.S. No. 8. Although her place may be vacant in the home may they look beyond the clouds and there behold their darling, borne by the angels to her Heavenly Father who had but loaned her for a short stay on earth, and needing her for a position He had in waiting had called her hence.

WALKERTON

Rev D McLennan, secretary of the Bruce County Children's Aid Society, is certainly kidding the town, as was evidenced by his sermon here on Tuesday last with four little neglected kiddies from the Bruce peninsula. These, with another supply that he recently brought in, are awaiting adoption here, and if Walkerton homes haven't children enough it won't be Rev D McLennan's fault.

A well-known citizen whose son recently passed his University examinations, hailed [illegible] John Rowland on the street the other day and proudly asked him if he hadn't noticed his boy's name in the paper. But Mr Rowland took the starch out of this man's shirt when he told him that he had been reading the recruiting columns daily and was sorry to admit that he hadn't yet seen the speaker's son's name.

While parties holding charitable or patriotic events in town never think of asking the merchants to contribute goods for these affairs free, but rather pay them for all they get, yet they think nothing of bombarding the local newspaper offices for free advertising, we having no less than four such calls for different charitable or patriotic events this week. And this in face of the fact that we have a special rate of 7 cents a line for such advertising, whereas otherwise our price is 10 cents. Notwithstanding that the papers give as big cash contribution to patriotic purposes as any line of business in town, yet the hundreds of dollars' worth of free advertising that they are being asked to contribute yearly besides, has prompted them to finally draw the line and hereafter anything we give will be handed out in cash, and our advertising rates will prevail.

The suit of clothes which was found alongside the river edge last week and which resulted in Chief Ferguson inducing a lot of boys to dive into the stream with a view of bringing up a corpse to fit the clothes, resulted in nothing of a gruesome nature being brought to the top, and the general belief now is that a tramp who worked Walkerton begging money for his motherless children, raised enough coin to buy himself a new suit, leaving a little sensation behind him he changed raiments down by the water's edge, and while the authorities would be looking for his body he would be beating the public in another sphere. Some of the strangers who have recently been holding out their hands in Walkerton are certainly practical jokers.

While Mr Breck, of London, was having his auto replenished with gasoline at Vogan's hardware store about 11 o'clock Saturday night, he unthinkingly lit a match to light his cigar when the escaping gas ignited and ran along the hose towards the pump, near which about a hundred gallons of gasoline were stored. Seeing the flame advancing towards him, Sam Vogan ceased pumping and succeeded in disconnecting the hose just as the flame had reached within two feet of the pump. This timely action prevented a terrific explosion and probably saved Sam remains from being scattered all over several counties. The fact that the car at this juncture had only a small supply in the tank alone prevented the flames from reaching the liquid and booking the auto for the scrap heap. As it was, about fourteen feet of hose were destroyed and Mr Breck was given a taste of high finance by being asked to come across for the loss.

Gabriel Haas, a local youth with an angelic name, enlisted last week and went to London to train for the front. As Gabriel was under age he had to get his father. Mr Alex Haas, who is a native of Germany, to sign his release papers for him, and if anybody ever doubted Alex's loyalty to the British cause, their suspicions would have been promptly given the quietus could they have seen the proud father with tear-bedimmed eyes signing the paper that gave his youngest and the only one he had at home to the cause of the Allies. Many British fathers in this town who may be seen daily standing around the bulletin board parrotting a lot of loyalty talk would look better following Alex Haas' stunt by signing papers for their sons and getting them off to the front instead of having them lurking around home while the Empire is in danger, and the forces of freedom are strenuously holding on the thin red line against the greatest military tyrant that the world has ever known. We know homes in this town where there are several able-bodied sons, and yet the Empire has not seen the name of one of them yet on a service roll and this at a time when the flag is in danger and our very national existence threatened. In Toronto many of the bigger firms are following Britain's example by laying off all their unmarried employes who won't enlist for the war, and while we wouldn't recommend such a step yet in Walkerton, still we think some homes in this town should be mortally ashamed of their pusillanimous conduct in this war.—Herald and Times.

TWO WOMEN SAVED FROM OPERATIONS

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound — Their Own Stories Here Told.

Edmonton, Alberta, Can. — "I think it is no more than right for me to thank you for what your kind advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have done for me.

"When I wrote to you some time ago I was a very sick woman suffering from female troubles. I had organic inflammation and could not stand or walk any distance. At last I was confined to my bed, and the doctor said I would have to go through an operation, but this I refused to do. A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now, after using three bottles of it, I feel like a new woman. I most heartily recommend your medicine to all women who suffer with female troubles. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills, and think they are fine. I will never be without the medicine in the house."—Mrs. FRANK EMSLEY, 903 Columbia Avenue, Edmonton, Alberta.

The Other Case.

Beatrice, Neb. — "Just after my marriage my left side began to pain me and the pain got so severe at times that I suffered terribly with it. I visited three doctors and each one wanted to operate on me but I would not consent to an operation. I heard of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was doing for others and I used several bottles of it with the result that I haven't been bothered with my side since then. I am in good health and I have two little girls."—Mrs. R. B. CHILD, Beatrice, Neb.

OLD LADY DISAPPEARED IN EXTRAORDINARY WAY

Relatives of Mrs. Maxwell Seek Assistance From Hon. I. B. Lucas to Send Police

Toronto, July 14—Two months ago Mrs Rebecca Maxwell, aged [illegible]5 years, left her home to visit a brother, Her whereabouts since have to baffled her relatives and friends that they have found it necessary to seek the assistance of the Provincial Attorney-General's Department in locating her. Relatives held a conference with Hon. I. B. Lucas, Attorney General, yesterday, and an officer was at once assigned to investigate. Mrs. Maxwell had been living with Mr. Robert Ring, a nephew, on a farm in Osprey township, Grey county, for several years. On May 25th the aged lady, who had been in the best of health and had complete control of her mental faculties, started out with the intention of spending a few days with a Mr. James Seeley, a brother, living on a farm some three miles distant. According to the information furnished to Hon. Mr. Lucas, the brother was not aware of the fact that his sister contemplated visiting him. In order to reach his farm his sister had occasion to pass through a Buckleberry bush. When her nephew received no news of her safe arrival he went to Mr. Seeley's farm and discovered that the old lady had not reached her destination. It was then that a searching party prowled through the bush. In a swampy part of the berry patch they found a slipper and a satchel which they identified as belonging to Mrs. Maxwell. While they scoured the bush they were unable to obtain any further trace of the woman and fearing that she had probably been the victim of foul play, they appealed to the Provincial Police to ferret out the case. Mrs. Maxwell was a highly respected member of the community, in which she had resided for a number of years. Her sudden disappearance has been learned with profound regret by her friends. By her affable manner and disposition she had been recognized as one of the most loveable old ladies in the district.

But if a German tries to accuse the blackguardism in Belgium or the murder of the passengers on the Lusitania, of course he will be shunned by his decent neighbors. They say that a man who excuses such crimes may commit such crimes. Germans in Canada and the United States will not go wrong if they stand by human standards—standards of decency and humanity, of liberty and common sense. If the Kaiser goes mad, surely all Germans are not expected to go the same.—Ex.

PRACTICAL FARMING

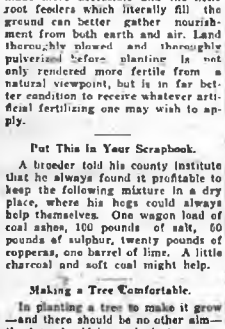
Vermin Proof Fences.

Protection is the prime requisite for increasing the number of birds in any area, and the results of protection are in direct proportion to the amount given. Besides insuring birds against every form of persecution by human kind, we must defend them from various natural foes. The most effectual single step is to surround the proposed bird sanctuary with a vermin-proof fence. Such a fence should prevent entrance either by digging or by climbing, but will serve its greatest use if it can not be climbed, and is, therefore, cat-proof. If it is impracticable to build an impenetrable fence, the next best device is to put guards of sheet metal on all nesting trees and on poles supporting bird houses. This should be done in any case where squirrels or snakes are likely to intrude, as it is usually impracticable to fence out these animals. Tree guards should be six feet or more above ground. Attacks by hawks, owls, crows, jays or other enemies are best controlled by eliminating the destructive individuals.

Well Prepared Soil.

Soil well pulverized before the crop is planted is much more productive than cloddy land or any land left with an uneven surface, because the plantfood already in the land is made more accessible and the little root feeders which literally fill the ground can better gather nourishment from both earth and air. Land thoroughly plowed and thoroughly pulverized before planting is not only rendered more fertile from a natural viewpoint, but is in far better condition to receive whatever artificial fertilizing one may wish to apply.

Put This In Your Scrapbook.



A breeder told his county institute that he always found it profitable to keep the following mixture in a dry place, where his hogs could always help themselves. One wagon load of coal ashes, 100 pounds of salt, 50 pounds of sulphur, twenty pounds of copperas, one barrel of lime. A little charcoal and soft coal might help.

Making a Tree Comfortable.

In planting a tree to make it grow—and there should be no other aim—the tree should be made just as comfortable in its new environment as possible. If the land is wet it should be drained, for trees will never thrive with wet feet. The best results are obtained by preparing the land the previous year for the setting of the trees. Clover or cowpeas plowed under in the fall will make humus the following year and keep the soil about the roots. Trees will often do well in poor soils and unfavorable conditions if good soil is placed about their roots, so that they get a good start the first year or so. After they once become established they can do considerable towards taking care of themselves.

The Farmer's Friend.

The dietary of a toad contains 77 per cent. of insects and the remainder is composed of spiders, crustacea and worms. Having an amazingly active tongue, he captures much of his food on the wing. There is every reason why farmers and gardeners should encourage and protect the toad. European gardeners often purchase toads, considering their vigilance in hunting insects well worth a trifling outlay. Toads become very tame when treated with consideration, and as they never do any harm beyond occasionally excavating a little cave for midday retirement in a favorite flower bed, while destroying a vast amount of insect life, there is every reason why they should be welcome guests.

When School Closes.

It's an awful queer sensation, yet one chuck full of joy, that circulates this time of year in every healthy boy. It makes him stand upon his head, and do all sorts of freaks, to know the lock's tight on the school for nigh a dozen weeks. The man who thought of such a thing as summer school vacation, is worthy of a monument and a silver tongured oration. So let us sing about the chap in all our sweet refrains, and versify the size and kind and color of his brains. The chances are that he was once a tiny boy at school, who learned to figure and to spell beneath the hickory rule. We never heard about his name, nor the color of his skin, but we'll bet our last red nickel that he was white within. He took the damper off of sport, and uncorked lots of fun for we didn't have to start at nine, and then again at one. The wobbly creek with banks of clay became a paradise; we swam with frogs and leeches there, much 'gainst our folks' advice. We played at injun in the woods, with stein and chicken feather, and we were nature's children then most any kind of weather. The whole world seemed a place to play, the ponds were big as lakes, and rafts were strong as battleships, with crews as brave as Drake's. The forest was our grand estate where we could monarchs be, and hold dominion like a king with castle in a tree. We knew most all there was to know concerning birds and things, where the meadow lark had hid its nest and the blue jay flashed its wings. We knew that old black crows could talk when once their tongues were split, and how to wind a birch bark torch and hold it when 'twas lit. We learned an awful lot of things they never print in books, when we lived upon the hillsides and camped beside the brooks. We didn't seem to realize that those days were our best, and they slipped away like morning sun that sinks down in the west. But they're woven in our memories like silver threads or gold—a storehouse vast for after years of stories yet untold. Time won't turn back in its mad flight, but memory always will, and it makes us children camped again on meadowland and hill.—By "Ark," in Guelph Mercury.

Its Middle Name.

Little Robert, says an exchange, rushed into the kitchen one day and asked his mother what kind of pie she was making.

"Lemon meringue pie," she answered.

The little fellow disappeared, but presently returned.

"Mamma," he said, "what did you say is the pie's middle name?"

"My own dear mother, it is nothing that should give you any uneasiness. I have had a long, fatiguing ride, and —I have not heard from India for more than a week. How is my Pearl?"

"Ah, rogue! a lover's anxiety! And yet, to come to me first! Dear Mark! But I have anticipated all your wishes. Your India will be here to meet you. Hark! there are her carriage wheels!" said the lady, going to the window; then hurrying back, she exclaimed, "Peste! she has some one with her—that lively Mrs. Vivian, I suppose. Listen, Mark! I will carry her off to a dressing-room, and leave you to meet India. She does not know that you are here."

And Mrs. Sutherland went to the hall door just as Mrs. Vivian, who was the first to alight, entered.

"Ah, how do you do, Mrs. Vivian? I am very glad to see you! Come, come into my room."

"Oh, but stop—let us wait for India!"

"By no means, my dear. Mark will wait for her."

"A-h-h-h! He has come?"

India sauntered languidly up the door-stairs. Mark sprang forward to meet her. She started—reeled—might have fallen, but he caught her to his bosom, murmuring deeply, "India! my India!"

For a moment she had nearly swooned with surprise and joy, but in the next instant she recovered, and deeply blushing withdrew herself from him, saying, "I did not know you were here."

"I have only this instant arrived," he replied. "To see you, it is unspeakable happiness."

With flushed cheek she glided out of his arms and entered the parlor. He followed her, placed an easy chair, seated her on it, and then would have sunk down upon the cushion at her feet—there to sit and worship with his eyes her peerless beauty, only the sound of light footsteps and silvery laughter arrested the folly.

It was Valeria, accompanied by Mrs. Sutherland. Their entrance was soon followed by that of Mr. Lauderdale, who was immediately presented to Mrs. Vivian and Miss Sutherland.

Supper was announced, and the party left the drawing-room. After supper, the evening was spent in music, conversation, and cards. A storm arising, detained the ladies all night. After the party had separated, each to seek his or her own apartment, Sutherland stopped for an instant in Lauderdale's room to ask, "Well, what do you think of her, Lincoln?"

"She is perfectly beautiful."

"Is she not?"

"There is positively nothing possible to be added to her beauty?"

"Ah, did I not tell you so?"

"She has taken me completely captive."

"The deuce! I did not require you to be taken captive."

"If I were only in a condition to seek the lady's love——"

"Humph! What would you do, then?"

"Lose no time in suing for it."

"The demon you wouldn't! That is extremely cool."

"Such glorious black eyes!"

"They are not black, but blue—celestial blue."

"Blue, are they? I thought they were black; one cannot follow their quickly-changing light and shade to find the hue, they scintillate and flash so."

"Scintillate and flash! Why, they are calm and steady as stars. What are her eyes to you?"

"And then her magnificent black hair!"

"Black! you are mad! Hers is bronze in the shade, and golden in the sunlight."

"I swear her hair is superb black!"

"What are you talking about?"

"Who—who but charming Mrs. Vivian!"

"Cousin Valeria! And I was speaking of India! So you think Mrs. Vivian good-looking?"

"Good-looking—divine."

"I thought no one in his senses could apply that term to any woman but Miss Sutherland."

"Who—the red-haired young lady?"

"Red-haired!" burst out the voice of Sutherland, then raining in his anger, he added, "Lincoln, you are my friend, but there are some provocations——"

"Miss Sutherland is graceful," said Lauderdale.

"Now, here is a reasonable man! When he thought I was praising his love he was as jealous as to feel like running me through the heart; and now that he finds me very moderate in my admiration he is angry enough to sweep my head off," said Lauderdale, laughing.

"Good-night!" said Sutherland.

"Stay, I can't let you go so; your lady-love is really lovely enough to turn all the heads and break all the hearts that approach her. But she has not disturbed mine—will that content you?"

"Yes, because I know it is true. Good-night."

"Good-night."

And the friends separated.

* * * * * * *

"And is this all you have to say in support of your project, Mark?"

"Not all, my dear mother."

The lady applied her handkerchief to her eye quietly, almost stealthily; her face was pale and sorrowful. Her son had just revealed to her his purpose of emancipating all the negroes upon his plantation and sending them to Liberia, with his reason for so doing. The scene took place very early in the morning after his arrival. It was in her dressing-room. Before any of their guests had arisen she had called him, as he passed her door. They sat now at the open window. The mother sighed deeply as she withdrew her glance from the gladdening scene, and fixed it upon the face of her son.

"And so, Mark, this is the cause of your ill and anxious look?"

"Yes, mother; it has cost me a very severe struggle; and perhaps you see some of its effects."

"Yes, some of them, Mark—alas! not all," said the lady, in a low, faint voice.

She sat silent, with her hands folded and her eyes fixed upon them. Mr. Sutherland watched her anxiously.

"My dear madam, I have pained you."

"I am a widow, Mark, and have no child but you——"

"Mother——"

"It is a sorrowful time for the mother, Mark, when the boy she has nursed and brought up to man's estate turns upon her in her weakness, arrayed in all the strength and power of manhood."

"My dearest mother——"

"Your father, Mark, never caused me a tear or a sigh in his life."

"God bless his memory for that."

"He trusted us in your affection for me, Mark, that he left me totally dependent upon you——"

"My dearest mother, your comfort shall be my first object in life. Not even India shall cause me to forget all I owe to you."

"Words, Mark, words! This project will reduce me to beggary!"

"No, madam, it shall not. Me it will reduce to—my own exertions for a livelihood, but not you. When all my slaves are freed, and on their way to Africa at my cost, there will still remain, from the sale of the land, some thirty thousand dollars. That money, mother, with the homestead here, I intend to settle upon yourself——"

"Oh, you break my heart. Do you think I will suffer you to beggar yourself to enrich me? No, dear Mark. Since you remember me with affectionate interest, it is sufficient."

"I never for one instant forgot your interests, dear mother. How could I? I had settled the plan in my mind before I left the North."

"I cannot bear the name of that quarter of our country! the word strikes me like a bullet, Mark!"

Mr. Sutherland looked down, mortified and troubled.

"And as for this plan, Mark, under no circumstances can I consent that you beggar yourself for me."

"Dearest mother, I do not think it possible for mere loss of fortune to beggar a man of good health and good morals. I shall go to the West. I studied law for my amusement. I shall commence the practice of that profession in some Western village, and grow up with the town. Indeed, methinks new life and energy runs through my veins and fires my heart at the very thought of difficulties to be met and overcome!"

"Alas! you do not know what you are talking about, Mark! And your approaching marriage with India—you do not think of that?"

"Not think of that!" echoed Mr. Sutherland. "Mother, I dreaded this interview with you; but I looked forward to an explanation with my loved India as the first reward of right-doing—if what I have done is right. My India! I know her generosity, her magnanimity, her high-souled enthusiasm! How many times I have experienced it! And now, when in her own life an opportunity occurs of practicing those very same virtues—when she has the power by sacrificing wealth and luxury, to bless hundreds of her fellow-beings—do I not know that high-souled girl will aspire to do it! Madam, it is a majestic, a god-like power—a power I would not now exchange for a small limited monarchy. And, oh! do I not know that my India will feel as I do?"

"Oh, Mark, Mark, romance! nothing more. And even should India approve your project, which I think quite impossible, what is your further purpose?"

"I mean to take her with me to the West, to encourage and assist me while I make her as happy as I possibly can!"

Here the lady's feelings arose to so high a pitch of excitement that she had to put a violent constraint upon herself, while she answered, quietly: "And how do you think Miss Sutherland will like to lay aside all the prestige of her rank, and wealth, and bridehood, and take an ignominous departure from her father's house, for a life of poverty and privation in the West?"

"I told you, dearest mother, that my India was of a highly heroic nature."

"And so you deliberately mean to take that girl—if she will go with you—to some miserable Western village, to endure all the miseries of poverty?"

"What miseries of poverty, dearest mother? It seems to me, mother, that in our country the man or woman who refuses to marry for such a reason, wants faith, love, hope, and everything they ought to have; and under such circumstances, it seems but right that they should stay single."

"You do not know what you are talking about. But should India be so imprudent, do you think her father will consent to such a mad project?"

"His consent was long ago obtained; and if he should withdraw it—India is of age, you know!"

"Mark, tell me if you have ever had any experimental knowledge of want." The young man looked up with a questioning glance. "To the well-born and well-educated, to the refined and intellectual, poverty is a dreadful, dreadful thing. It is not only to suffer the privation of proper food, and comfortable clothing and dwelling—to be shut out of all enjoyment of the blessings of nature and of society, and at the same time be exposed to all the evils that nature and society can inflict upon you. No adequate protection against the freezing cold of winter, and no escape from the burning heat of summer. And for society, pride will not permit you to seek the company of your sometime peers, and delicacy restrains you from the coarse association around you. To us, Mark, poverty would be the privation of every enjoyment."

"Dear mother, you are a lady—I, a man! And loss of fortune has now no terrors for me. With birth and education, so far from rendering me more helpless, shall make me stronger to conquer my difficulties. Do you think I shall keep away from nature because I cannot call on her in a coach, with a groom on the box back to take in my cards? No, indeed. She's an old intimate friend of mine, and no summer friend either. And as for society, mother—oh, let me quote to you the words of Dr. Channing, whose tips, indeed, seemed touched with fire: 'No matter though the prosperous of my own time will not enter and take up their abode under my roof, if Milton will cross my threshold sing to me of paradise, and Shakespeare to open to me the worlds of imagination and the workings of the human heart, and Franklin to enrich me with his practical wisdom, I shall not pine for want of intellectual companionship.' So, dearest mother, with industry that will procure me all the necessaries of life, health that will enable me to enjoy or endure nature in all her moods, and a mind dependent on itself for its enjoyment, what have I to dread from loss of fortune?"

"It may be very well for you, but you would not bring Miss Sutherland down to such a state?"

"Yes, mother, yes! If the only alternative is to be a separation of many years."

"Oh, Mark! that is very, very selfish!"

"I do not think so, madam."

"Mark! Just now, when I told you of the nameless miseries of the well-born poor, you did not deny them, but said, 'Mother, you are a lady—I, a man.' Mark! out of your own mouth I will condemn you—Miss Sutherland—'is a lady!' Are you not selfish?"

"No, mother, not if India feels as I do."

"My dear son, your sanguine confidence gives me deep pain. Be not too sure! Not for worlds would I speak a word against your India. Nor do I know that, under her circumstances, I speak much evil of her when I say that she is haughty, self-willed, indolent, and fastidious! But are those the elements of self-sacrifice?"

"Mother, I would not hear another soul breathe aught against India but you; but to answer your question—and granting, what I am unwilling to grant, that these faults of her station may be also hers—affection will conquer them!"

"Mark, they have gone down to breakfast; we must go, too. We will speak of this again. When do you break it to India?"

"This day. You have conjured up a phantom whose presence I would not endure for many hours."

IN DEFENCE OF A BERRY.

By Peter McArthur.

There is an old saying, "Give a dog a bad name, and kill him," which applies everywhere in life. No matter how good a thing may be, if you give it a bad name you may as well do away with it. It is all very well for Shakespeare to say that "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet," but if you called a new variety of rose "The Skunk Cabbage Rose" it would take a long while winning favor.

I am moved to make these reflections because one of the best of our tender fruits suffers from a bad name, and I wish to proclaim the fact that its bad name is due to a strange mistake. The very name gooseberry suggests something about which one could not hope to be enthusiastic in spite of the fact that gooseberry wine figures in the Vicar of Wakefield, that literary masterpiece in which everything is dainty. And the children who have not yet learned the disfavor that goes with the name "goose" will reach for gooseberry tart before any other, but the name, "goose" puts all grown ups on their guard. And now comes a great philologist who proves the name to a vulgar and ignorant mistake. The berry is one that should be known as the Saintsberry—and the berry of the most beloved of saints at that.

Mr. Fox Talbot gives the following remarkable account of the origin of the name "gooseberry"; Gooseberries are called in German, Johannis-beeren, that is, "John's berries," because they ripen about the feast of St. John. St. John is called in Holland, St. Jan, and the fruit is there called "Jansbeeren." Now this word has been—centuries ago—corrupted into "Ganseberen," of which our English word Gooseberries is a literal translation; Gans in German signifying a goose.

So you see that the only thing the matter with the delicately flavored St. John's berry is that it was suffered from a touch of German Kultur and has been called out of its name. Give it its right name and saintly character and you will never be without jam from it for your tarts.

Superfluous Grit.

After a time he broke an awkward silence by saying to the cook:

"If you put the lid on that camp kettle you would not get so much of the dust in your soup."

"See here, my lad, your business is to serve your country."

"Yes," interrupted the recruit, "but not to eat it."

The Housewife's Corner

Refreshing Summer Drinks.

A cool, refreshing drink makes the hottest summer day seem, if not cool, at least less warm; and there are many kinds of summer drinks besides the well-known iced tea and iced coffee. Here are some of the best of them:

Fruit Punch.—Mix together one cupful each of water and sugar, boil them ten minutes, and skim the syrup carefully. Add one cupful of hot, strained tea, one cupful of any fruit juice that you prefer, and the juice of five lemons and six oranges. Add sufficient water to make a gallon, and serve it ice-cold.

Ginger Ale.—Put one quart of chipped ice into a gallon jug, add one pound of sugar and one tablespoonful of strong ginger, and shake the mixture well together. Add one pint of good cider vinegar, and fill the jug with water. Keep it on ice until it is very cold.

Raspberry Vinegar. — Pour two quarts of vinegar over four quarts of raspberries. Cover it, and put it in a cool place for two days. Strain the juice through cheesecloth, and pour it over four quarts of fresh berries. Set the mixture aside again for two days, then strain it a second time through cheesecloth, and three quarts of sugar. Heat it slowly, and skim the liquid until it is clear; then boil it twenty minutes. Seal it in sterilized bottles. When you serve it, use two tablespoonfuls of the syrup to a glass of ice water. It is a most refreshing drink on a hot day, and will keep for years.

An Egg Drink.—Beat three eggs thoroughly, and six tablespoonfuls of sugar, and one and one-half cupfuls of ice water. Whip into the mixture the juice of one orange and a small amount of the grated rind. Serve it in glasses topped with whipped cream.

Grape Cordial.—To one quart of rich, unsweetened grape juice add one-quarter of a cupful each of cold water and sugar syrup, and one-half of a teaspoonful of grated nutmeg. Just before you serve the drink fill the glasses two-thirds full of crushed ice, and pour the cordial over it.

Currant Shrub.—Heat two quarts of ripe currants, and strain the juice through cheesecloth. To every quart of juice add three-quarters of a pound of sugar, and stir the syrup until the sugar dissolves. Add the juice of one lemon, and enough cold water to dilute the syrup. When it is cold, pour it over cracked ice, and ornament each glass with a slice of lemon or a bunch of ripe currants.

Mint Sherbet.—Wash the mint thoroughly, then crush it and bruise it well, and add a pint of boiling water; let the infusion stand for twenty minutes, strain it carefully, add a cupful of sugar, and let the whole boil for ten minutes. When you take it from the fire, add the juice of three oranges and a cupful of pineapple syrup. Put the liquid into a freezer, and when it is partly frozen add the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs. Freeze it again to the consistency of mush. Serve it in sherbet glasses, with shredded cocoanut sprinkled lightly on the top.

Lemon Mint.—Wash the mint well, and pick off a large cupful of leaves. Put them into a stone jar with one quart of chopped ice. Stir the mixture until the leaves are thoroughly bruised and the flavor is extracted. Strain off the water, and add the juice of two oranges and six lemons, and one pint of sugar. Put it on ice and when it is thoroughly cold serve it in tall, thin glasses, with a sprig of fresh mint and a very thin slice of lemon in each cup.

Lemonade for a Week.—Boil together two quarts of water and four cupfuls of sugar for ten minutes. Remove the syrup from the fire, and add four and one-half cupfuls of lemon juice. Let the mixture cool, then seal it in glass jars and put it in a cool place. When you want to make lemonade, dilute a little of the syrup with ice water.

Lime Punch.—Put eight cubes of sugar in a bowl and pour over them the juice of two limes and two oranges. Add one and one-half cupfuls of cold water, and when the sugar is melted, chill the syrup with cracked ice. Just before serving it add a slice of pineapple and a few crystallized cherries. The receipt makes only a small amount of punch. For a large company it should be trebled.

Ginger Punch.—To one-third of a pound of preserved ginger add one quart of water and one cupful of sugar, and boil the mixture for fifteen minutes. Let it cool, then add one-half of a cupful of lemonade and one cupful of orange juice. Strain the syrup through a jelly bag.

Dandelion Cordial.—To one full quart of dandelion blossoms add one large lemon, sliced, and two large oranges, also sliced, three pounds of white sugar, and four quarts of boiling water. Let the mixture stand for a few days, and then serve it with ice.

Milk Shake.—Flavor rich milk—or, if preferred, half milk and half cream—with vanilla, and add the well-beaten white of one egg and sugar to suit the taste. Put the milk into a screw-top jar or bottle, and shake it until it foams, but not hard or long enough to make it buttery. Pour it into glasses, and sprinkle grated nutmeg on top.

Sour Milk Recipes.

The cook who is not wasteful has at her command a good many sour milk recipes to make use of in the summer, for then, no matter how careful she may be, the heat occasionally makes the milk turn sour. It is not wasted if it is made into some palatable food.

Here is a sour cream filling for cake: Mix equal quantities of thick, sour cream, chopped nuts and raisins. Add a little sugar and lemon juice, enough to give the proper taste, and spread between layers of cake.

Many kinds of cookies can be made with sour milk. Here is the recipe for a good sort: Cream half a cupful of butter with a cupful of sugar and add a cupful of sour milk in which three-quarters of a teaspoonful of soda has been dissolved, and two cupfuls or a little more of flour, sifted with half a teaspoonful of cloves, half a teaspoonful of cinnamon, and a teaspoonful of salt. Chill the dough before cutting the cookies. It must be rolled thin.

Corn bread can be made with sour milk in this way: Sift a cupful of cornmeal with half a cupful of flour, half a teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of sugar. Then rub in a tablespoonful of shortening (clear chicken fat that has been fried out is a good kind) and then add a cupful of sour milk and a beaten egg. Lastly, add half a teaspoonful of soda. It is well to add the soda last where a light mixture is desired, as it begins to give off carbon dioxide, the gas that makes the dough rise, as soon as it is moist and comes in contact with the acid of the sour milk.

Worth Knowing.

Borax will remove leather stains on white stockings.

When frying liver, if each piece is dipped in milk, then into flour, it will brown beautifully.

Potatoes lose 40 per cent. of their food value when pared before they are boiled instead of afterward.

To clean a raincoat, sponge with a mixture of alcoholic and ether, to which a tablespoonful of ammonia has been added.

If part of a bottle of olives has been used and you wish to keep the remainder for some time add a pinch of salt to the brine and pour in bottle enough olive oil to cover brine.

Eucalyptus oil will remove grease spots from any kind of material without injuring it. Apply a little of the oil with a clean piece of flannel and rub the material gently until the stains disappear.

To prevent cakes from burning put two or three layers of thick paper underneath the tin. To heat the white of eggs quickly a pinch of salt should be added. Salt cools and causes them to froth rapidly.

To boil meat for serving, put it in boiling water, allow the water to boil for a few minutes, then lower the temperature; by this means juices in the outer surface are coagulated and the inner juices are prevented from escaping.

It is a good idea to have an easy method of moving the bucket when scrubbing the floor. Take a two-inch board, large enough to set a pail on; insert casters in each corner, and the pail can be pushed from place to place with ease.

BOMB HUNG IN WIRES.

Russian Aviator Took Terrible Risk to Release It.

A French aviator, apparently serving with the Russians, tells in a letter received in Paris, of a most unusual and horrible predicament in which he found himself. He says:

"I have been able to make two good flights by moonlight. The second was the most terrible experience I have yet known. I started at 11 o'clock with Capt. M.— as look-out, with 18 gallons of petrol and four melinite shells. We climbed 2,500 feet, dodging all the time two Austrian projectors which were searching the heavens. Then, circling over the barracks on the river bank, we took careful aim and dropped our bombs. We could hear the muffled roar of the explosions.

"An luck would have it our third bomb failed to get clear and became entangled in the landing gear of our machine. What were we to do? To descend was impossible, for the bomb was primed and would have blown us into the next world directly we touched the ground. We were then 7,000 feet up. 'It's my fault,' said M.— so I'll go down and unhitch it.' So we eased ourselves of the fourth bomb and then started to plane down towards our aerodrome.

"At 2,500 feet M— climbed over the tank, threaded his way through the wires, and, on his knees, hanging over the abyss, with an icy wind blowing at the rate of 70 miles an hour, bent over and disentangled the bomb, which dropped into a deserted field. Then he crept back to his seat and soon afterwards we were in port."

WHY EUROPE NEEDS COTTON.

Big Guns Consume Ten or Twelve Bales in a Minute.

There is no bullet or shell propelled in modern warfare unless there is a supply of cotton for the explosive which sends it from the gun, says Pearson's Weekly.

It is the big guns that eat up guncotton. For instance, a 12-inch gun uses up 200 pounds of guncotton every time it is fired. That is as much as is employed in the firing of 42,000 shots from the ordinary rifle. It is equal to the amount that would be used in the firing of a field gun 150 times.

Guncotton is also burned at a great rate in any conflict between battleships. A single battleship can use from 5,000 to 6,000 pounds a minute, or from 10 to 12 bales of cotton a minute, in firing all its guns. In fact, it has been calculated during the war that every innocent shipload of American cotton crossing the Atlantic to Germany is the cause of killing or wounding 500 of our men.

Another estimate shows that every 100 yards of trenches require for their defense 25,000 rounds of small arms ammunition. Now, assume that the lines of trenches along both fronts at the present war in the East and West should cover 600 or 600 miles. For their defense a daily expenditure of 200,000,000 cartridges would be required. That is equivalent to 340 tons of guncotton.

This guncotton has entered so thoroughly into ammunition of all nations that it difficult to realize that the compound was only discovered in 1845 by the Swiss chemist, Schobein. He invented it by treating cotton wool with a mixture of nitric and sulphuric acids. He then had it washed with water and dried, and even to-day its appearance hardly differs from that of the cotton wool from which it is manufactured.

The effect of guncotton is not obtained by setting it on fire, as is the case with ordinary gunpowder. In fact, when a light is put to it it simply burns with a rapid flare and does not explode.

To make it disintegrate suddenly it has to be "detonated." This can be done by hitting it a hard blow on an iron base, but it is usually exploded by the use of a "detonator," composed of fulminate of mercury made by dissolving mercury in a mixture of nitric acid and alcohol. It is a greyish-white powder, discovered by an Englishman named Howard, and is used for percussion caps, for the slightest blow or rise of temperature will cause it to explode.

It should also be remembered that 10 tons of cotton furnish about 18 tons of guncotton, and the eminent chemist, Sir William Ramsey, calculates that Germany started this war with a reserve of 900 tons of guncotton.

Epigram.

My rage I cannot smother.

And given me another.

We have heard of the blessings of poverty but we can't recall having ever seen any of them.

A Lesson for the Steward.

King Frederick William III of Prussia was a man of few words; whatever he had to say was always brief and to the point, as the following anecdote from a foreign journal shows:

The king, who was accustomed to interest himself in all the details of court management, ordered his steward to take special pains to see that all the carriages and waggons were amply supplied with food and drink whenever they left for a journey of a day or so; but it sometimes happened that the steward failed in his duty and dispatched the drivers without any food, giving them a coin, perhaps, to buy what they wanted. That usually meant that the driver went hungry, as he did not have much opportunity to leave his horses and dine at a shop or restaurant.

At length the king became aware of the steward's failure to carry out his orders, and awaited the next opportunity to bring the fact to his attention. He had not long to wait. That night the king stopped his coachman as he entered the court yard, and upon inquiry, found that the man had had nothing to eat since breakfast. He held out a dollar in his hand that the steward had given him to buy food with. Without a word the king took the dollar.

He went into the castle and summoned the steward. That worthy appeared immediately and made a profound bow; but as he raised himself up, he was surprised to feel a coin placed against his mouth.

"Eat it!" ordered the king.

"But, your Majesty, I—"

"Eat it!" the king again roared.

"Why, Your Majesty, I can't eat it!"

"Oh, you can't? But you expected the coachman to! Well, in the future just remember that—the people eat food, not money. Do you understand?"

The steward understood; in the future the king's coachmen were amply supplied with provisions whenever they went upon a journey.

CANDY RELIEVES FATIGUE.

Useful as Well as Sweet to Soldiers In Dreary War.

The value of candy is recognized by military authorities. The British soldiers in France are reported as consuming "prodigious quantities of sweets." A captain at the front with the British army reports that the canteen has five times the demand for sweets that was expected, and one-fifth the demand for beer. The Australians encamped in Egypt have eaten all the chocolate to be had in Cairo.

Scientists contend that sugar has much food value and is a good substitute for alcohol. Chocolate, for example, is harmlessly stimulating. Soldiers have discovered what scientists know before, that sugar will relieve fatigue quickly and give a sense of strength that is real without the subsequent depression experienced by those who use spirits. Sugar and candies are found to be useful not only to the physically tired, but to those who suffer mental exhaustion.

GERMANY BUILDING WARSHIPS

The Final Sea Battle Will Assume Great Proportions.

The fighting strength of the German navy at the present time can only be a matter of conjecture, while its power of expansion has been the subject of considerable speculation, says the Liverpool Journal of Commerce.

To her battle squadrons the enemy will undoubtedly have added the Kronprinz, which was laid down at Kiel in the middle of 1912, while the battle cruisers Luitzow, launched at Dantzic near the end of 1913, and the Ersatz Hertha, laid down in the same year, will certainly have joined the waiting battle cruiser squadron by this time.

The best known of the new ships under construction are the Ersatz Worth and the "T," both commenced early in 1914. These vessels are approximately of 28,000 tons displacement and mount eight 15-inch guns. Compared with the Queen Elizabeth class they carry the same armament much more efficiently protected, but at an inferior speed.

The German fleet is most likely to fight when the land campaigns have gone so badly for her that a master stroke is necessary in order to retrieve the situation. When that state of affairs will arrive is, at the moment, beyond mortal knowledge. Many critics still anticipate that another winter campaign will not be necessary but this view appears to err on the optimistic side, and if we neglect it and assume that 18 months of war is a practical possibility, then the German navy is likely to prove a much more powerful argument than it is at present.

Early in the war the superior value of the battle cruiser was emphatically demonstrated, and if the big ship facilities of the German yards were concentrated on rushing out this class of ship the squadron would be immediately strengthened. Firms such as the Germania at Kiel, Blohm and Voss and the Vulcan Company at Hamburg, and the Schichau yard at Dantzic, could probably between them complete seven or eight battle cruisers by the end of next spring, when the Germans would have available something like 20 dreadnoughts and 15 battle cruisers.

The above figures can only, of course, be quite general, but they serve to indicate that if the final sea battle be postponed till next year the tussle is likely to assume proportions hitherto undreamed of, and far beyond the general imagination.

Saving Their Honor.

Your true diplomatist is nothing if not touchy concerning his own dignity and that of the nation that he represents. The lengths to which they have ried their sensitiveness in the past own by an amusing episode that occurred when the Peace of Karlowitz was negotiated in 1600.

The war between Austria and Turkey, which led to the siege of Vienna by the Turks, had just been brought to an end by the Battle of Zenta, in which Austria was victorious. Prince Eugene at once gathered the diplomats at Karlowitz in Croatia to dictate the terms of peace; but for weeks the congress made no progress because the representatives could not agree as to their proper positions in the council hall. That the representative of Emperor Leopold should have the seat of honor was taken for granted; but the other parties to the congress, the Turks, Russians, English, Dutch, Poles, Venetians, all clamored for the next highest seat.

Finally the situation became so critical that it was feared that the peace would never be negotiated; so drastic measures had to be taken. As the diplomats could not be coerced, Eugene immediately employed a number of workmen and had them build a new council chamber. It was a round building, with a special entrance built for each representative. In the middle was a circular table surrounded by chairs all the same size and finish. The diplomats now came willingly to their private entrances, and at the sound of a trumpet they entered, each standing beside his appointed seat. At a given sign they all sat down, and everyone's pride was satisfied.

Thus at length, says Das Buch fur Alle, was the Peace of Karlowitz signed, after several weeks' delay because of the foolish caprices of the diplomats.

THOUGHTS FOR THE DAY.

He that lives in personal suspicion lives the life of a sentinel fever relieved.—Young.

A prudent man won't swallow a potato-bug and then take Paris green to kill it.—Billy Sunday.

To be a great man one must know how to derive some benefit from every incident in one's fate.—La Rochefoucauld.

It is a beautiful and blessed world we live in, and whilst that life lasts to lose the enjoyment of it is a sin.—Chambers.

Opportunities approach only those who use them. Even thoughts cease by and by to visit the idle and the perverse.—Emerson.

The words we speak and the things we do to-day may seem to be lost, but in the great final revealing the smallest of them will appear.—Lowell.

If sympathy becomes distorted and morbid it hampers instead of helping the effort towards social settlement. Without sympathy, without fellow-feeling, no permanent good can be accomplished.—Roosevelt.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, AUGUST 8.

Lesson VI. The Kingdom Torn Asunder—I Kings 12. 1-24. Golden Text. Prov. 16. 18.

I. Rehoboam Takes Counsel of the Elders (Verses 5, 7).

Verse 6. With the old men, that had stood before Solomon—Solomon valued good counselors highly (see Prov. 11. 14; 15. 22; 22. 6). These men were much advanced in years, as they were the counselors of Solomon, Rehoboam's father. Rehoboam was forty-one years old when he began to reign (1 Kings 14; 2 Chron. 12. 13). These men probably were at least seventy years old.

7. If thou wilt be a servant unto this people—That is, listen to the popular clamor. This at least would have been expedient and, therefore, in the opinion of the elders who were close to the people, wise.

II. He Rejects Their Counsel and Advices With the Young Men (Verses 8-11).

8. Young men that were grown up with him—Men of Rehoboam's own choosing, and hence in mind and attitude like him. It was natural for him to place their view and advice above that of the elders. These younger men were the privy counselors of Rehoboam, just as the elders were the privy councilors of Solomon. Rehoboam, doubtless, asked the advice of the elders in deference to the regard of the people for the wisdom of his father Solomon, and in the hope that they would agree with him.

11. Whips . . . scorpions—In despotic countries scourging men to induce obedience is not unknown. There is, however, no record of Solomon ever having chastised his people in this way. Just as "my little finger is thicker than my father's loins" is metaphorical, so is the expression of chastisement with whips and scorpions. Some define "scorpions" as "whips having laden balls at the ends of their lashes with hooks projecting from them." The Romans had such a whip or rod. Perhaps one was used on Paul (see Cor. 11. 25). Others suppose the term to refer to the thorny stem of the rye plant, which, when used as a whip, leaves an irritating wound. These figures of speech are sufficient to show what kind of a burden Rehoboam's young friends advised him to place upon his people. Their advice suited Rehoboam's haughty spirit, and he was not long in deciding upon his course of action.

III. He Adds to the Yoke of the People (Verses 12-16).

16. What portion have we in David—David had been able to unite the tribes of Israel. Rehoboam's conduct brought about a division. These words of the people, which express their intention to revolt, are very like the words of Sheba, the son of Bichri, who carried on the revolt against David after Solomon's death, and are a clear indication of the spark of tribal jealousy which had never been put out.

To your tents, O Israel—A rallying cry (see also 2 Sam. 20.1). The words literally mean, "Go to your homes and prepare to protect yourselves. We shall have to fight for our rights."

See to thine own house—The tribe of Judah was now all that was left Rehoboam. He must look to it for support.

A VERY HUMAN KING.

How Victor Emmanuel Cheers His Soldiers.

An Alpino on patrol duty met King Victor, who, hearing firing at the top of a mountain, asked him to accompany him thither, says Reuter's correspondent at Udine. His Majesty climbed like a chamois and asked questions constantly.

When the King and the soldier reached the top of the mountain they examined the positions through glasses while bullets came nearer and nearer; but Victor Emmanuel was as calm as at a theatre. The King shared his own luncheon with the Alpino.

Seeing an elderly soldier silent and sad, the King asked the reason. The soldier replied that one of his children was ill and he had received no news.

The King said he himself for a whole week had received no letters from home, adding, "I am also a father." His Majesty ordered an inquiry about the child.

Victor Emmanuel saluted and replied, "No, my son; for Italy!"

The Youngest British Soldier.

Probably the youngest soldier is the British army to-day is Pte. Michael Cowan, of Burnley, Eng., who belongs to the 4th Manchester Regiment. At the outbreak of the war, when he was only 14½ years of age, he left his home, and his mother published "Missing from home" notices in the papers concerning him. She subsequently ascertained that he had enlisted and was stationed at Hull, England. He is at present in France with the expeditionary force.

The Paisley Advocate

PAISLEY, AUGUST 5th, 1915

Let the Government Buy

Canadian men with heaps of money that they did not have to earn by the sweat of their brow or the swell of their muscles are tumbling over each other with offers to furnish machine guns and other equipment for the regiments that are going to the front from our Dominion. When the war is all over and the Kaiser dethroned some of these gold-bugs will be busy impressing their fellow-men with the magnitude of their contribution. To many it doesn't seem quite right that the Canadian national military department can't handle the whole job of equipping completely the army made up of her sons, and then even the poorest citizen could say he did as much as any other unenlisted man to kill the dragon that emerged from the medieval black forest of European politics in 1914 and attempted to destroy modern civilization in other parts of the earth.

Prohibition Progress

Local option has proven to be so acceptable a measure of prohibition that not only are temperance people of Paisley satisfied with its operation in the community, but also many other citizens who opposed it more or less are satisfied as to its efficiency as a promoter of sobriety, and would not on any consideration be in favor of repealing the by-law. In fact, it is quite safe to say that a sufficient number of names could not be secured to apply to the council for a repeal vote. No open-eyed individual of sound mind can go to a town or village where licensed bars are still doing business without being able to note the advantage we enjoy through abolishing the sale of liquor in our midst. The contrast is so marked, particularly on holiday occasions, that a Paisleyite just can't help pitying a community where the abominable business still goes on debauching a certain percentage of the populace, wasting money and destroying happiness for at least some households. The same feeling of satisfaction with local option prevails in other towns and villages where it is in force in this and neighboring counties. How to dry up the sloughs represented on the scenery of this district by Walkerton, Chepstow, Port Elgin, Elmwood, Eden Grove, Cargill, Wiarton, etc., is the concern of the temperance party at present. Huron county has all gone dry by enactment of the Canada Temperance Act, and now the same measure is advocated for both Bruce and Grey counties. Success in such a programme would give an extensive dry area covering three adjoining counties. If taken up heartily there is little doubt but that a vote would be favorable to the temperance side. Now that the western provinces are going strong on abolition lines there is the possibility of a sweeping agitation being worked up in old Ontario to have the voice of the people say whether all bars in the province should be closed and the liquor business wiped out in every municipality. Will prohibition be an issue at the next Ontario election, or will the province continue to be checkered by wet and dry spots?

The Strife Getting Closer?

The war is beginning to feel a good deal closer to home for Canadians. What was practically an ultimatum from the U.S. has been received by Germany, and unless the Kaiser's submarines cease to murder subjects of the great American republic President Wilson may issue a declaration of war against Germany. In that event Canada will be in danger of invasion, as there are thousands of Germans in the United States who are ready to do anything that would give trouble to the Allies, and to Britain in particular. We believe that Germany has long coveted Canada for colonization purposes, and while her hosts in Europe remain unvanquished her American sympathizers are not to be overlooked as an inactive or harmless foe by Canadians. German agents in the U.S. have been exploiting the people of the republic to the south of us by various methods which show the ramifications of a perfect system operated by men of brains and resource. To plan a raid upon this British Dominion for the capture of our chief cities would be in all probability one of the first acts in the American part of the great war drama. Immense quantities of munitions have been purchased in the U.S. by Germans, but because of the effective blockade maintained by the British navy, shipment cannot be made to Germany. What more natural than that the purchases should be utilized in a campaign against Canada? Signs are not lacking to prove that men are ready to undertake the job of invading our borders. The blowing up of factories at Windsor and other like incidents during the past few months were only of the premature explosions in a larger plot that may be certain to develop the moment an open rupture occurs between our Uncle Sam and the Kaiser. The rural residents of Ontario may awake some morning to news that will disturb the unseemingly complacency with which we have viewed the contest of arms while it raged only across the seas.

A Legal Absurdity

That the hotels in local option municipalities are not liable for business tax is the ruling of Judge Klein in the case of appeals by Kilcardine and Paisley hotelmen. The Bruce county judge follows the ruling of Judge Doyle, of Huron, but if the Paisley court of revision would not consider the opposite ruling of the Dufferin county judge as the latter has not yet appeared in the law reports and therefore could not be accepted as a precedent. Neither would Judge Klein listen to any arguments advanced by Paisley counsel, stating that all had been heard over and over again. Whether Judge Doyle and Judge Klein are absolutely right or wrong according to law, The Advocate is not prepared to argue. The lawyers should be able to handle that part of the subject. We do say, however, that hotel-keepers in Paisley or any other place have the same right to pay a business tax as the printer, the grocer, the dry-goods dealer, the liveryman, or any other man paying such a tax, and a most glaring legal absurdity is manifest in the situation here. The stable at the Hanna House is rented and kept open for public accommodation just as the Balmoral stable is, yet the lessee in one case has to pay a tax, while the other does not. The pool room at the Balmoral also escapes the business tax, but the other pool room proprietor in town has to pay. We understand that while Judge Klein adheres tenaciously to the ruling he has given, he also intimated that the law should be amended. This leaves an opportunity for our provincial legislators to do something in the way of improving our complicated assessment act. In the meantime those Bruce county hotel keepers who appeal stand to benefit while the municipal authorities are helpless and hopeless as there is no appeal from a county judge's decision.

—Sunny Alberta, too, has come to the conclusion that life can be enjoyable enough without free booze. By a majority of over 20,000 the voters of the province very plainly declared last that the bars must go. The vote will abolish 320 hotel, club and hotel licenses on July 1st, 1916. Old Ontario should soon get into the van, now.

More Auto Cars

The auto fleets in Paisley and vicinity continue to grow larger. Stationmaster Brigham is the latest townsman to command a family car. Mr And Woolfie, of 16th con Greenock, is now numbered with the farmers who use a machine roadster instead of a horse. Mr W J Hyde sold his car not long ago, but has invested in a new one.

Hurt in Runaway

Mr. Herb Gordon, of Greenock required surgical repairing after a runaway accident on Monday. While helping his assistant in the fields to get up on a load of hay or grain both fell on the horses which started them off. Lacerations on Herb's head that took several stitches to mend were the worst injuries sustained in the mix-up.

Judge Allows Assessment Appeals

Three appeals from Paisley Court of Revision were heard by Judge Klein on July 22nd, all of which were granted, the main finality to pay costs of appeal. J. H. Glover appealed against business assessment on the Balmoral hotel; Mary B. and T. P. Pearce against $600 income; also Agnes Hogg and trustees of Hogg estate against $800 income.

Successful Students

Three graduates from Paisley Continuation School who wrote on the Departmental exam for entrance to Faculties of Education are among the list of those successful, viz: Wilfred L McGill (Part II), attending Galt Collegiate Institute; Wilfred W Tanner (Part II), Walkerton High School; John D Walks (Part II, without Latin), Chesley High School

Recruiting Tests Changed

Canadian recruits will hereafter have to pass only one medical examination, and that at the place of recruiting. Important changes have been made in the regulations regarding qualifications of men for service in the Dominion. The height requirement is reduced from 5 ft 4 inches to 5 ft 2 inches for infantry and from 5 ft 6 to 5 ft 4 for artillery. Minimum chest measurement is to be 34 inches. Men with bad teeth but otherwise fit will have their teeth fixed by the dental corps at the expense of the Government. Slight physical defects that may be removed by minor operation will not debar a man, and treatment will be given by the army medical service. It is estimated that over 15,000 men have failed to secure a place in the forces because of regulations which have now been relaxed on approval of the Militia Council and Cabinet and officially announced from Ottawa by the acting Minister of Militia.

Soldiers May Harvest

A harvest furlough of one month will be granted all non-commissioned officers and men of the 33rd and 34th Battalions and the 20th Battery, who care to help take off the crop of grain the farmers within a radius of 300 miles of London will harvest this season. The order has been issued from headquarters and comes as a result of word received from Ottawa to the effect that farm hands, owing to recruiting, are very scarce, and that unless something is done to better matters in this regard there will not be labor for home service throughout the war.

For the Boys at the Front

A movement is on foot in Toronto to collect old and discarded razors for the use of the soldiers at the front. The matter is taken up by Thomas B Lee, a wholesale hardware man of Toronto, and it should not meet with a very ready response. It is the intention to collect the razors and send them to Cutler's Hall, Sheffield, England, where they will be put in order for use of the troops. The demand for razors among the boys at the front has been found to be far below the supply available. There must be a large number of discarded razors all over the country that could be utilized for the purpose. The latter is one that the Women's Patriotic League or one of the local patriotic bodies might well take up.

—Mr J C Little, who a year ago became editor and proprietor of The Teeswater News, has laid down the pencil to take up the gun. Mr Little's successor is Miss M Feilhaim, a niece of the editor who founded The News about 40 years ago. The lady will herself take charge as editor and business manager. It is a notable fact that heretofore ladies who undertook the management of print-shops in Bruce Co. subsequently handed the job over to one of the male persuasion, the latter assuming not only the duties of editor and manager but also husband to his predecessor. Well, here's for all kinds of success to the new News editor. If her introductory editorial is to be accepted as a fair criterion, Miss Feilhaim possesses qualities of head and heart that should qualify her for either journalistic or domestic life.

"Yes, I am having a lot of trouble with it, and I have tried ever so many kinds of Binder Twine, but it's no use. It simply won't work."

"Well, I don't wonder at it not working for you. Why, you are using twine of inferior quality. No binder would work satisfactorily with that Twine."

"All Twine is the same, is it not?"

"That's what I thought, until I used Plymouth Twine. I had the same trouble with my binder as you are having now. I was advised to use Plymouth Twine. I did so, and now I never have any trouble. One ball of Plymouth Twine will convince you that it is the best Twine on the market."

Subscription Arrears to The Advocate

THERE is several hundred dollars still due us on arrears for subscription to The Advocate. We have quite regularly sent our accounts out in an endeavor to collect all. Some, however, have neglected to respond to our requests for payment. Subscribers who neglect the little matter of remitting regularly do not, perhaps, understand the position we are placed in because of not receiving from them what is due us. We do not believe there are more than only a few who would deliberately beat us out of our dues, and we do not propose to treat delinquents as rogues unless we actually find they are such. Nevertheless, we are obliged to make a special effort to collect all arrears, and we have handed over to The Publishers' Adjusting Association a list of behind-handers who will hear from them immediately. Prompt attention to the first notice of indebtedness will save additional expense.

We derive no particular pleasure from the pursuit of delinquents, but it seems that it is a necessary part of the business of managing a newspaper office, so we must, that's all.

Kindly avoid all unpleasantness by remitting the amount of your account at once.

Yours truly,

A PEACE RIVER PIONEER

Tells of Rapid Development of the Great West

Mr. M. L. Propst, of Vanrena, Alberta, who made the first shipment of wheat out of the Peace River country to the Winnipeg market, is one of the pioneers of that great fertile district which now being linked up with the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific by the building of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway.

"When grain reached a good price," said Mr. Propst, "I saw where it was possible to haul the grain and just as soon as the steel was laid to end of grade I started my teams. In crossing the Peace River the gorge is some 700 feet deep, and it required doubling on the hill, and it required seven teams to get the heaviest loads up the hill, which is one and one-half miles long. It took seven days for the trip from Vanrena to Peace River Landing. Though wheat realized about cents per bushel all clear, after expenses were paid.

"For two years our nearest railroad station was Edmonton and all our supplies we were compelled to haul from that point, 500 miles distant, and it had to be done in the winter. Now we have all the modern conveniences here, despite the long transportation by teams of everything. The district is all connected by telephones belonging to a local company. There are several automobiles in the country, of which I own one. This country seems to be more adapted to grain growing than most other parts I have been in, as the crop is sure. I am confident that quality of wheat will get better each year with the development of the country. As it is now, settlers have not had the time to devote to their crop they should on account of long transportation by team and the homestead improvement work to be done."

Facts About Furs

Although a great number of popular-priced furs masquerade under names that no actual animal claims as its own, there is no particular secrecy about it. One of the fur concerns, for instance, publishes a catalogue to inform customers just what they are actually buying. Alaska bear, for example, is the best Minnesota raccoon, colored a dark brown. Adelaide chinchilla is the fur of a selected, soft-haired and delicately colored Australian opossum; French armine is the fur of the white hare of France; Baltic fox is the fur of a large hare of Northern Europe; Iceland white fox is white Tibet lamb, combed until the hair is straight; Kamchatka fox is the fur of the Northern timber wolf; Manchurian fox is the fur of a variety of half-wild dog from Manchuria; Yorkford lynx is Canadian wild-cat; Baltic lynx is a species of Australian kangaroo; Siberian pony is selected Russian calf-skin; Hudson seal is muskrat skins of selected quality; and inland seal is the skin of selected French white hare.

Fifty Thousand Eyes

There is a most astonishing diversity among animals in respect to the number and location of their eyes. In mammals, birds, reptiles, and fish they are limited to two, and are invariably placed in the head; but others of the animal kingdom may have anywhere up to 50,000, and they seem to have been placed anywhere that seemed handy.

The dragon fly possesses eyes composed of an aggregation of about 50,000 smaller eyes, and the common house fly has about 10,000, which may be seen by the aid of a magnifying glass of even small power.

In spiders and scorpions there are usually eight or ten eyes in one or more clusters on the back and top of each of its five rays, drawn close together.

Vaccinate the Cattle

The natives of Senegambia vaccinate their cattle against tuberculosis with a serum drawn from the lung of a beast in the incipient stages of the disease. They inject this on the forehead and what looks almost like a third horn grows there.

What Soldiers Eat

In the British army a battalion of 1,010 men requires for its daily rations 635 two-pound loaves, 127 pounds of bacon, more than 31 pounds of salt, and nearly 13 pounds of pepper—to mention only a few of the items.

Big Australian Farms

Typical wheat farms in Australia extend from 600 to 1,000 acres, and are usually worked single-handed by the farmer and his family, labor-saving machinery being used in every possible direction.

Under an Act of King Charles II., gamblers losing more than £100 at one time were not compelled to pay.

GERMANY'S SUPREME EFFORT

Measured by every possible standard, viewed in the light of all the information from all sides, the present German offensive represents the second, conceivably the final, bid of the Kaiser's hosts for a decision, a favorable decision in the war. Certainly not since that time, eleven months ago, when the great drive to the Marne began, has there been any such momentous crisis as is now at hand.

By this time the world is wholly familiar with the German strategy of August, 1914. France was to be removed from the allied battle line by one swift, terrible, final blow which would destroy the military power of the Third Republic and leave Germany free to deal with Russia.

But France was not destroyed. The blow was passed, and in the meantime Russian hosts poured into Austria, and the disaster that seemed to threaten France in August in no small degree overtook Austria in September. The great scheme of German high command was thus thwarted. There was left the necessity to turn east with the western work unfinished and rescue Austria.

Now, over weeks and months the German effort to save Austria was pushed with varying success. On the whole, until May 1, with small success in field, and shining success back of the line, in the reorganizing and reofficering of the Hapsburg forces. Until Austrian armies were reorganized, new German forces put in the field, the campaign, after desperate effort culminating at Lodz, fell to the level of local operations.

But we know now that behind these local operations there was the old idea, the idea of ending a war on both fronts by the complete destruction of the foe on one front. France, German high command conceded, could not be disposed of—there was left Russia. If Russia could be disposed of there was time to win the war.

Little by little then German plans were made. Russia continued to advance, but Russian ammunition grew less and less. The ice blockade and the German blockade interrupted the inflow of supplies. At the last moment, before the spring came and Archangel and the Vladivostok were opened, Germany planned to strike.

Her blow was tremendous, instantly successful, continued from May 1 to the end of June and culminated in the swift reconquest of Galicia, the repulse of Russia to her own territory, the capture of hundreds of thousands of prisoners, the most brilliant success of the war.

But there was one limitation to the success. Russian military power was shaken as was the French in August, but it was not broken. Defeated, the Russian army escaped envelopment along the San and the Dniester, and to this extent the great campaign failed. The failure was complete in this sense. For armies, not position, must be the objective, their destruction the test of success in the present war.

German high command had, however, envisaged this failure. It had hoped to envelop the Russian armies in Galicia between the army of Mackensen coming east from Cracow and the Austrian troops coming north over the Carpathians and west from Buckowina. Now it fell back upon a far more grandiose scheme, involving an enormous extent of territory and requiring troops in numbers unknown in other wars.

Look at the map of Russian Poland and it will be seen that it is pushed into Austro-German territory like a fist driven against a pillow. To use another figure, it is like a nut held within a cracker, one jaw of which is East Prussia, the other Galicia. And in the military sense Hindenburg is the upper, Mackensen the lower jaw.

To-day the whole of the gigantic German conception is comprehended in an effort to bring these jaws together, crushing all of Russia's military forces. Successful, the plan will practically destroy Russian military power. All the Russian troops west of the Bug, defending Warsaw, holding the railways to Moscow, Petrograd and Kiev will be pounded to nothing, or captured. A Tannenberg ten and twenty-fold will be the result.

For the Russians the problem is simple. They must defend, hold on to Warsaw to the last possible moment. Its loss will be a great and permanent injury, but it is even more essential that they should bring their armies out alive. Think always of these two jaws of the nut-cracker closing on Russian military forces in the eastern field and the main circumstance of the new operation is simplified.

If Germany can envelop the Russians, if she can crush their main armies and send their fragments behind the Bug, she will then be free to send most of the victorious army to the west against France and England, to the south against Italy, or she can detach an expedition to "back its way" through Serbia and open a road to the Dardanelles. The fate of Constantinople will be settled along the Vistula.

And if Germany can do this, what hope will remain to France and England of ultimate victory, since now with all the German masses in the east, and only skeleton armies in front of them they cannot move, or at most can only move by inches and feet? When Hindenburg and Mackensen come west what chance will be left to free Belgium, to liberate northern France? Bear in mind this is the German view, this is what the German expects. This is why Germany is more confident than ever since the Marne.

On the other hand, if the Grand Duke is able to escape the jaws of the cracker, if his army eludes the destruction as Joffre's did last August, if he gets his main forces safely behind the Bug, then the Germans will have won a considerable advantage, but the hope of a real decision will have been shattered.—New York Tribune.

FINE TRIBUTE TO ENGLAND

A SERBIAN WRITER'S GLOWING WORDS.

The following eloquent tribute to England, moving in its expression of the deep faith which the smaller nationalities have in our country, and inspiring in its incentive to act in the present according to the traditions of a great past, is from the pen of a Serbian writer, Mr. Lazare Kossovac, and has been contributed to the official Serbian journal, Samouprava:

The French people are silent; but it is remarkable that when these northern men begin to speak they are more eloquent than we of the south. More eloquent is Macaulay than Mirabeau, and Carlyle than Renan, and Gladstone than Mazzini. As if the chill northern mists pressed upon the mouth, their thoughts come to the tongue and go back from the tongue again unexpected. Englishmen are silent and thoughtful. Never was this island more silent, more thoughtful, or more busy than it is now. The war has given to the whole of Great Britain a solemn aspect. As I stepped upon British soil at Folkestone, I felt as though I had entered Westminster Abbey. All this island is transformed into an abbey; every man is silent, thoughtful and busy.

Determination Increased.

In the Dardanelles five great battleships have gone down. In the southern lands such losses would cause Englishmen to become only more silent, thoughtful and busy. In the Atlantic there was committed the "superman" crime of the Lusitania, which like other vast sarcophagus was laid on the floor of the deep. But in England, as the news arrives, lips are only pressed more tightly, the brain is more intensely concentrated, and tasks are more bravely seized. The Zeppelins make daily competition with their brothers the submarines in the destruction of private property and of unarmed and innocent people. At home poisonous bombs may fall from airships, while poisonous gases choke the heroic men in the trenches. Day by day appear the long columns of killed and wounded. But the granite island is silent, thoughtful and busy. Thus it makes answer to all calamity.

Ruling the Waves.

The English have to-day a veritable sea dominion from Pole to Pole. If their duty to the allies was to free the waters, they have done that duty brilliantly. To-day a Serbian can embark at Salonika, and travel through Suez to the Antipodes, around the globe and back through Gibraltar to Salonika again. During the whole journey he will travel upon the friendly English green sea-fields. English power upon the waters was never realized in such measure—and so effectively—as now. Never was there in history upon land such power as the English are exercising now upon the seas. You will say, "The waters are only a highway, nothing more." No, the waters are more than a highway. They represent nine-tenths of the best strategic positions, which, thanks to these Britons, are now in our possession; but which, without these Britons, had certainly been in German hands.

Can't Be Starved.

A free highway of the sea preserves the allies from starvation, makes possible the transport of men and munitions, and transforms what would be otherwise widely-scattered parts into a well-knit and inseparable whole. Imagine if it were not so; imagine if the Germans had such dominion on the waters! Their battleships would now be at Salonika, Kronstadt, Vladivostock, at Naples, Marseilles and Odessa, at Jaffa and who knows how many tribes and nations would not now be fighting against us on the Prussian side? It is, indeed, our happiness that these nine-tenths of the best strategic positions the English are holding now and not the Germans.

June and Its Battles.

It appears that June stands out conspicuously in world history as a month of battles. Bunker Hill was fought on June 17th, 1775; Napoleon was defeated at Waterloo on June 18th, 1815. The United States declared war on Britain on June 18th, 1812. In the American revolution the battle of Monmouth occurred on June 28th, 1778. The French took the Mamelon Earthworks at Sebastopol on June 7th, 1855, in the Crimean War. June 14th, 1645, witnessed the Battle of Naseby—the final defeat of Charles I. by Cromwell. June 14th, 1800, was the date of Marengo. June 14th, 1807, saw the Russians overthrown by Napoleon at Friedland. June 14th, 1809, Napoleon beat the Austrians at Raab. At Kolin, June 18th, 1757, the Austrians defeated Frederick the Great. June 23rd, 1757, Lord Clive won at Plassey the victory which made Great Britain mistress of India, and, doubtless, there are many more great battles associated with the month.

IN THE WAKE OF BATTLE.

BATTLES PLANNED MONTHS AHEAD

GERMANY'S SYSTEM ON CARRYING ON WAR.

Go About It Much as a Contractor Would Build a House.

In an interview with a correspondent, a Russian general who fought in the Galician battles has just explained the German plan of campaign which has resulted so successfully this summer.

He said the Germans plan battles as builders plan houses. A builder gets together his blue prints and his estimates, engages a sufficient number of workmen and a certain quantity of material and sets to work. He doesn't try to build a bigger house than he has material or labor for. Of course, accidents or bankruptcy may prevent the execution of his plan.

Similarly the Germans plan that a certain thing shall be done; they bring up the necessary soldiers and the necessary guns, shells and bullets, with a margin for miscalculation, but no more and never less.

They may, through accident or miscalculation, fail. But they never start fighting on the principle of doing the best with the men and shells you have.

To revert to the house parallel, the house may collapse during construction, owing to a mistake. But the builders will not decide suddenly that they have not enough material and dock the house of one storey, nor they will not abandon the house half built, because of lack of workmen or material. They know what they want to do. The battle planned and prepared for months in advance is a precise work.

An Instance.

The whole eastern campaign shows this. When the Germans won at Tannenburg they planned the march on the lower Vistula, which ended near Warsaw. Hardly had they retreated when they tried a new vast and clear-cut operation from Thorn. When that stagnated on the Bzura they were preparing the battle of the Mazurian Lakes which was a great victory, and hardly was over when they were sending their armies south to assault the Dunajec.

"The Germans in short," said the general, "never start fighting on the principle of 'we have so many men, so many guns—let us have a shot at the foe and do him as much harm as we can with these men and guns. They plan the shot first; see that they have the men and guns to execute the plan, and do not touch a plan which is from the first plainly beyond their strength.

Cannot Crush Whole Army.

"Thus they never once tried to crush our army as a whole. That is beyond them. Even admitting their technical superiority and good munition supply, they would want, in order to crush us by one operation, at least as many men as we have. Their way is to plan relatively small operations, which attack only one section of our front, in the hope of destroying this section before we can strengthen it.

"The battle of the Dunajec shows that the enemy planned to take these lines and to reach the San. He prepared everything for this, and something over, but did not intend to march straight to Lemberg. When he reached the San he had to stop—apart from our attempts to counter attack.

"Then he brought up, no doubt, shells, food and men for his next operation. He treated the next operation as a self-contained thing, and until it succeeded or failed he would attempt no more. Also he will not attempt a modified plan. If he feels too weak he will try something new, which, according to his judgment, is within his strength."

ANCIENT BARBERS.

Could Perform Operations Not Permitted Him To-day.

In the time of Louis XIV. and of Henry VIII., says the New York Medical Journal, a process of differentiation was under way, for there were then barbers, or perruquiers, barber surgeons and surgeons. The barber surgeons were made to confine themselves to minor operations of bloodletting and drawing of teeth, while on the other hand the surgeon was prohibited from "barbery or shaving." This distinction has been broken down in recent years by the surgeon, who must frequently act as barber before undertaking his more specialized activities.

The barber's sign two centuries ago consisted of a striped pole, with a basin suspended from it. Both the basin and the stripe indicated that his surgical function was of special importance, for the former represented the receptacle for blood and the latter the ribbon for wrapping the arm during and after bleeding. The basin has disappeared from the sign, but the striped pole is of historic significance to the man of medicine and he should humble himself before it as he enters the tonsorial parlors. Whether the alternating red and white so often seen were signals ant of a white bandage about an arm we do not know, but it might well have been the case.

Until the time of Lister doubtless both barber and surgeon were alike, equally aseptic and septic. Then came a separation in this respect, but more recently the wielder of the razor and shears is also finding, partly from compulsion, that cleanliness makes him more godly in his trade.

While the barber now limits his surgical practice to squeezing out of black heads or extracting burrowing hairs, he on the medical side applies facial massage and attempts to cure seborrhea, alopecia and ringworm. Cleanliness inside and out is an essential of health, and, so far as can be accomplished by external treatment, the barber might with sufficient training excel the dermatologist, who only prescribes.

The barber, though his fees are small and his working hours long, is still working in line with the prouder manipulator of the scalpel, for the latter is still but a cleanser of the inside of the body. And the former is a cleanser of the outside of the body. The barber will flourish when the surgeon has faded under the glare of the rising sun of sanitary and hygienic knowledge, which, by example, the former is even now helping to foster.

Where "Round Robin" Originated.

The name "round robin," given to a written petition or protest, and signed by a number of persons in circular form so that it may not appear who signed it first, is supposed to have originated among the ancient Greeks. It later was used by the Romans.

The officials of the French government used the "round robin" in medieval times. As for the name, that is of very uncertain derivation. Some say it comes from the French words, rond ruban, a round ribbon, but this is not at all probable. In some parts of England a pancake is called a round robin, and the question is: Was the circular petition named from or did it give the name to the pancake?

It has also been supposed that the petition was named for some person who suggested to his companions this peculiar method of declaring their sentiments, and Robin is a proper name, an old and familiar form of Robert. Another conjecture, however, given by Wheeler in his "Familiar Allusions," has greater probability:

"The small pieces of yarn or marline that are used to confine the upper edge of a sail to the yard or gaff are called rope bands, corrupted by sailors to robands, or robbins. Now, a robbin of this sort encircling a yard bears a measily recognisable, though rather fanciful, resemblance to a ring inclosing a petition or other writing. As 'round robins' are frequently made use of by British sailors, it is quite possible that this is the true origin of the name."

EPIDEMICS IN RUSSIA.

Conditions in Russia brought about by a scarcity of medical practitioners are described in an article in the Medical Journal which attacks vigorously the administration of the Russian war hospital arrangements.

"It was a fact well known in Russia previous to the outbreak of hostilities," the writer says, "that the supply of doctors fell far short of the actual needs of the empire. This deficiency is now aggravated by the circumstance that the representative members of the profession have been summoned to the seat of war, while the doctors at home have abandoned their ordinary duties to wait upon the half million sick and wounded soldiers in various parts of the interior. The public is thus compelled in many places to prescribe for itself, and its empirical treatment, by no means successful at the best of times, has been rendered all the more uncertain by the extraordinary spread of epidemics.

"Official reports issued by the municipal councils of Zhitamir, Berditchef, Bialystok, Nikoliief and Zvenigorodka show an appalling mortality from epidemic diseases. Scarlet fever, smallpox, typhus and typhoid are the most prevalent and, if anything, they rage with greater intensity in the country than in the town. Writing from Voznesensk, a newspaper correspondent states that the Cherson district has experienced the enormous loss of thirteen hundred children since last February.

"Among adults deaths from typhus fever, cholera and typhoid have been correspondingly numerous. For this mortality the peasants themselves are greatly to blame. Living on food which no decent human being can touch, filthy in their habits and having no conception of the simple laws of sanitary science as practised among peasants in more enlightened countries, the muzhiks lay themselves open to the reception of every epidemic that passes over the land. The suppression of the vodka has also given rise to many fatal cases of poisoning from methylated spirit. These evils are largely augmented by the removal of doctors from the provincial towns to the military hospitals, and still more so by the careless manner in which the invalids from Galicia are being transported through the country.

"Unless the reports in the Russian press are greatly exaggerated trainloads of men suffering from typhus fever, smallpox, cholera, typhoid and other infectious diseases pass daily along the lines and remain for hours in the stations without any attempt being made by the authorities to prevent the spread of infection. The great conflict has also served to bring out in disgraceful prominence the deficiencies of Russian hospital arrangements for the troops in the field."

Bomb Pleasantries.

There have lived in Hartlepool, England, side by side for many years a cranky old bachelor and a spinster of doubtful age. Their houses were adjoining, but the owners were not on speaking terms. The story of how their quarrel arose is safely locked in their own breasts. Suffice it to say that their mutual aversion to each other's sight and habits of life has furnished many an amusing incident to the neighborhood. The attack on her cats and the defence of his rude mouthed parrot had afforded many a scene of violent outburst of loud temper and abusive language. Then came the early morning raid of the German cruisers. He was just out of his bath, enwrapped in a towel, and she had just disembarked from the deck of her four poster when, crash! a fearful crash that seemed like the crack of doom, and amid the blinding dust and falling rubble they were discovered each to the other, only a few feet separating them, prostrate on their respective floors from shock, but otherwise unhurt, for the partition wall between them had been blown down. Fate had saved their lives, but had laid them almost in each other's arms.

A Remarkable Achievement.

The story of how the British Army at the front was supplied with black net respirators inside three days is now being told in London wholesale trade circles as an instance of what can be done by British industry under the stimulus of a little "push and go." Ten or twelve days was the answer given to the War Office when that Department first inquired as to when delivery of plain black net to the required amount—the exact figures cannot be divulged, but they are enormous—could be made. It was then that the "push and go" policy was put to the test. A certain person was given carte blanche, and in a few hours he had bought up all available stocks of plain net, and arranged with the dyers to give the net thus purchased the necessary blackness. The material was dyed, dried, and despatched to London by passenger train within a few hours of getting the work. Some of the packages weighed nearly half a ton, and the cost of carriage is said to have run into hundreds of pounds. Arrangements had been meanwhile made in London for the manufacture of the respirators, and as fast as the net was received it was made up. In that way the men at the front were equipped against poisonous gas within three days.

The consumption of City Dairy Ice Cream is increasing every season. The local dealer has not the facilities, besides he makes so little that he cannot turn out a uniform Ice Cream. PIE CULTURE.

(By Peter McArthur.)

An article published some days ago in which I mentioned the fact that the cherry pie was at one time considered the supreme test of a housewife, or rather, the test by which it might be discovered whether a girl was competent to be a housewife, has brought me a good story from Dr. Hugh MacCallum, of London. According to him the cherry pie plays a much wider part than I suggested in the life of the New England States. He says:

"At a medical banquet which I once attended our great Dr. Osler, of Oxford, stated that Dr. Weir Mitchell, of Philadelphia, had once put his culture to the final test. Dr. Mitchell, who was present, nodded gravely.

"'He gave me a piece of cherry pie to eat and watched me while I ate it.'

"Once more Dr. Mitchell nodded.

"'And,' continued Dr. Osler, 'I ate it to his entire satisfaction.'

"Dr. Mitchell applauded enthusiastically."

Naturally the assembled medical men wanted to find out how a cherry pie should be eaten for the test was one that any of them might be obliged to face at any time.

"All we could learn," said Dr. MacCallum, "was that he ate it with a spoon and that he rejected the pits."

This information contains the possibilities of much further discussion. It will be news to the eaters of factory made pies and even to housekeepers who are making their own cherry pies during this cherry season, that the cherries should always be used with their pits. Also the writers of books of deportment must record the fact that in the case of the cherry pie the fork must give place to the spoon. But the most important fact is that no matter how a cherry pie is eaten it is the best pie that is made.

EMBRACE ON BATTLEFIELD

Relatives Who Were Enemies Figured in Moving Incident.

A moving incident is related by an Italian soldier in a letter home. He writes:—

"The other day, before the morning mists had cleared, one of our patrols found themselves opposite a trench containing about 20 Austrians. Our men, eight in number, charged with the bayonet, and taking the enemy unaware, put them to flight.

"Six were taken prisoners, and another tried to hide. One of our men saw him, and gave chase. The Austrian fired at his pursuer, who fired back.

"At last the Italian came up with the fugitive and sprang on him to take him prisoner. They pitched into one another for some minutes, and then the Austrian surrendered.

The two men looked at one another, and suddenly rushed into one another's arms again, and kissed each other like long-lost brothers.

It turned out they were brothers-in-law from the frontier district. The Austrian had married the Italian's sister. They were horrified when they found they had been shooting at one another, but delighted that neither had been successful.

Getting Back.

"My cook left this morning merely because I asked her to get dinner for a few friends of mine."

"I hired her, my dear, and I don't mind giving you a chance to get back at her. Bring your friends over to my house for dinner."

CHANGE THE VIBRATION

It Makes for Health.

A man tried leaving off meat, potatoes, coffee, etc., and adopted a breakfast of fruit, Grape-Nuts with cream, some crisp toast and a cup of Postum.

His health began to improve at once for the reason that a meat eater will reach a place once in a while where his system seems to become clogged and the machinery doesn't work smoothly.

A change of this kind puts aside food that is slow to digest and takes up food and drink of the highest value, already partly digested and capable of being quickly changed into good, rich blood and strong tissue.

A most valuable feature of Grape-Nuts is the natural mineral elements (phosphate of potash, etc.,) grown in the grains from which it is made. These elements are absolutely necessary for the well-balanced rebuilding of body, brain and nerves.

A few days' use of Grape-Nuts will show one a way to physical and mental strength well worth the trial.

STEIBER, MASTER SPY OF GERMANY

MAN WHO BUILT UP INTELLIGENCE DEPARTMENT.

Stieber First Claimed to Be Socialist to Betray His Friends.

In 1818 at Merseberg, in Prussia, was born the man who if not the father of the Prussian spy system, at any rate was its chief organizer and its developer to the point at which improvement seems impossible, writes Mr. Morley Acklom.

The parents of Stieber were of the middle class and in easy circumstances, and they apparently destined their son for the Prussian bar, for he became an unsuccessful lawyer.

In 1847 we find him attached as legal adviser to a factory in Silesia owned by two brothers named Schoeffer. Silesia was in those days the breeding ground of socialism, and the Schoeffer factory was honeycombed with the new doctrines.

Stieber was on the lookout for some way of advancing himself in the social scale, and he not only managed to marry the daughter of one of his employers but he induced the other to join the Socialist brotherhood of which he himself had already become a member with the idea of penetrating its secrets and methods for the information of the Berlin police.

Incited by Stieber, Herr Schoeffer became such an ardent recruit and so violent in his utterances that he was arrested and imprisoned for urging Silesia to revolt.

Having thus shown the authorities, by causing the arrest of one of his own relations, that he was a suitable instrument for their purposes, Stieber was rewarded by being called to Berlin and attached to the secret police with the express commission of breaking up the Socialist organization in the capital.

The enthusiastic letters of introduction which he brought with him from the various revolutionary bodies in Silesia insured his welcome among the Socialists of Berlin, and he speedily became an influential and trusted Socialist leader, on one occasion heading a great procession of Socialist societies through the streets.

Presented to King.

It was on this occasion that he was presented to King Frederick William. He notes in his memoirs that the King was uneasy at the appearance of such numbers of Socialists, and that he reassured the monarch by telling him that every precaution had been taken for his safety.

Whether the fact of their leader having spoken to royalty made the Socialists suspicious of his good faith or whether in other ways some whisper of his duplicity came to their ears is not certain, but it is a fact that from this time on he was frowned upon by the Socialist clubs and that he was shortly afterwards taken into the King's personal service and made a "polizeirat," or police councillor.

In this position his business was no longer to orate to deluded crowds and preach the abolition of police and monarchy, but to keep a close watch on the police officials of the kingdom and report to the King personally on their activities and loyalty. This business of spying upon spies suited him so well that when the chief of police complained to the King of Stieber's interference and accused him of being a traitor Frederick William bluntly told the official that he trusted Stieber more than any one in the Kingdom.

Shortly afterward Stieber was gazetted official head of the Secret Service and set about organising that army of civil spies, as apart from the regular police system, which by 1870 had grown to the number of 35,000. His emissaries covered the court itself, the Government officers, banking and commercial houses throughout the kingdom, as well as all persons who were in any way connected with foreign countries.

By 1860 his system of observation had been extended beyond the borders of Prussia to Austria, Bohemia, France, Luxemburg and Saxony.

Stieber's particular duty in his new position was to supply the Prussian army headquarters with topographical, social and military information, about Bohemia, which Bismarck had marked out as the route which the Prussian armies were to follow in their invasion of Austria, for which he was even then preparing, although the two countries were nominally acting together as close friends and allies.

Build Great System.

Stieber disguised himself as a pedlar and, taking a pack full of statuettes of the saints and pornographic pictures, he travelled for over two years along the routes which the Prussian armies marched in 1866 to Sadowa, minutely maping the country and collecting so much valuable military detail that even Von Moltke was astounded. When the war ended Stieber became a Privy Councillor of Prussia and National Minister of Police.

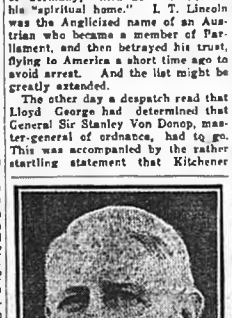
The war of 1866 thus insured the triumph of the spy master and led to the permanent adoption of the principles for which he stood as cardinal institutions on which, in the future, both the military and civil governors of Prussia were to rely.

Not content with his other multifarious activities Stieber also undertook to attend to the French newspaper press during the war of 1870 and in the two years preceding. Through Bismarck he applied for and obtained a subvention worth $75,000 annually for the purpose of making important French papers "talk Prussian," and by 1870 he claimed to control nearly a hundred writers in Paris and Provincial dailies and weeklies.

When the invasion of France was an assured success Stieber took up his quarters in Versailles near the King of Prussias and organized a mob of his spies and agents, withdrawn from the already conquered districts, into a crowd who used to line the streets and cheer the King of Prussia whenever he made his appearance in public, thus putting an artistic finish to his work by creating the impression in France that William I. was being acclaimed daily by enthusiastic Frenchmen.

Stieber did not cease his activities for the Prussianization of Europe with the colossal coup of 1870-71. He remained Bismarck's closest intimate and by 1880 had worked out a scheme for the military organization of the Empire, of which the effects are still felt.

Stieber died in 1892, wealthy, feared and theoretically respected.



The results of his system are coming to light daily. When the invading army of 700,000 Germans entered Brussels last year and proceeded at once to distribute themselves in and around the city without confusion or delay the world applauded the military genius of Von Kluck, whereas it should have paid its compliments to Stieber's successor, Herr Steinhauer, and his agents who, as long as two years before the event, had marked down the hotels in which the staff officers were to be lodged.

HEAD OF ORDNANCE DEPT.

British Officer in Charge of Ordnance Dept. Has Cousin in the German Army.

Canadians have been amazed to learn since the war began the great number of Germans and people of German descent who have succeeded in getting into high places in the old land. Many of them are doubtless loyal to the Union Jack, but it was not long after the war started, before the British public began to insist that people bearing German names had to get out of public positions, whether proven guilty of disloyalty or not. Better be sure than sorry. Prince Louis of Battenburg, who was First Sea Lord of the Admiralty, was the first to go. Sir Edgar Speyer, a Privy Councillor, was another for whom things became so hot that he had to leave for the States. Lord Haldane was forced to retire from the Cabinet because he had been a great admirer of Germany, which he declared was his "spiritual home." I. T. Lincoln was the Anglicized name of an Austrian who became a member of Parliament, and then betrayed his trust, flying to America a short time ago to avoid arrest. And the list might be greatly extended.

The other day a despatch read that Lloyd George had determined that General Sir Stanley Von Donop, master-general of ordnance, had to go. This was accompanied by the rather startling statement that Kitchener and Von Donop were great friends, and that the latter's retirement would involve the former's. Who is this man with the German name at whose door has been placed the blame for the British army's scandalous deficiency in shells, ammunition, and guns?

Sir Stanley has the misfortune to belong to an old German family. One of its most conspicuous members is Stanley's cousin, the Prussian general, Hans von Donop, for several years grand master of the household to the Kaiser's brother-in-law, Prince Frederick Leopold of Prussia, inspector-general of the cavalry of the German army. General Hans von Donop, since the beginning of the present war, has been commanding a division of German cavalry in France.

General Sir Stanley von Donop is a son of the late Vice-Admiral von Donop of the British navy, is a brother of Lieut.-Col. Pelham von Donop, chief Government inspector of railroads, and joined the Royal Artillery 25 years ago, the only active service which he has seen having been in the Boer war. Before becoming master-general of the ordnance he was for several years director of artillery at the War Department.

ONTARIO DAIRY PRODUCTS.

A model dairy farm for the purposes of demonstrating rotation and the value of alfalfa and corn for ensilage will be one of the features of the Ontario Government dairy exhibit at the National Exhibition, Toronto. Mr. Geo. A. Putnam plans to locate the model farm in the southwest wing of the building and nearby will be another innovation, an exhibit showing the value of concentrated foods.

He expects to have an unusually large and representative showing of Ontario dairy products and intends making the exhibit as practical and instructive as possible. In this work he will have the assistance of several Government officials, who will be engaged in making a number of demonstrations, including the sediment test, cow testing, care and testing of milk and cream.

The Niagara Fall of milk will again be a feature, the flow showing the production of milk in the Province, and the proportions into which the total is divided for cheese and butter-making, city consumption, etc.

It has again been decided to distribute samples of Cheddar cheese and to demonstrate in a practical way the relative food value of dairy products.

The great success of the Quebec contingent in the butter section a year ago has stimulated the spirit of emulation among the people of the adjoining province and this year there has been a large increase in the number of requests for entry forms from the dairy schools all over Quebec.

THE NEEDS OF THE RED CROSS.

The Red Cross need is like the widow's cruse of oil—it is inexhaustible. Fully to meet that need would require a purse like the widow's cruse. Such a purse is a financial miracle, but the Red Cross must ask the Canadian people to perform that miracle.

Every time you read a report of a battle do you realize that it means a fresh addition to the task of the Red Cross?

Do you know that every bullet fired is only one more drip in the Red Cross cruse of inexhaustible obligation?

If the Government, when its General Staff demanded fresh supplies of munitions, replied: "Why do you want more shells?" would you think the Government insane? When the Red Cross asks for more supplies do you not realize how much it needs them?

The need of the army is for shells, and still more shells.

Every dollar you give to the Red Cross is a bandage which ties up some wound, and there are as many wounds to bind up as you have dollars to give.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows

Not Seen in Daytime.

A farmer worked his harvest hands from 4 o'clock in the morning until 9 o'clock at night. A man looking for work hollered to a hand over in the big wheat field, asking him if he could get a job. He was advised to ask at the house.

"How do I get there?" the applicant asked.

"You go down this field," said the haggard laborer, "turn down the road to the barn, turn to the left and follow the lane."

"I don't know," said the harvest hand. "I ain't never seen it in daylight yet."

Harvesting the Crop.

According to C. P. R. advices there is likely to be a shortage of farm labor in the west in the fall. There are already over 100,000 of our Canadian young men under arms, and the war may demand more. Immigration is, of course, at a standstill. It will be impossible to get men from the east, where men are scarce, and in any case the west does not want men who, after the harvest, would be a burden on the people.

The question is, where will the men come from? The press is advising the farmers to hire men now and to hire them for a year in advance. There is, indeed, talk of a famine of unskilled labor in the fall. Many thousands of men, not merely from Canada, but the States, have left for Europe, since the war started. Where will the men come from, and particularly in view of the added acreage, which will mean more labor, as there is fully 30 per cent. of increase under cultivation? The States expects the largest crop in its history; and experts in the west insist that our crop, if the favorable conditions are maintained, will be the largest that we have produced. It is now the question of labor that is agitating the minds of the farmers. Several towns and municipalities have suspended their programme of public work in order that all the laborers possible should be on the land for the harvest.

Generous Bay of Fundy.

Some of the finest grindstones in the world come from the bottom of the Bay of Fundy. The stonecutters there have a simple method of moving them to the shore. Workmen quarry the stone from the solid rock when the tide is out, and fasten them to a large flat-bottomed boat.

The tides in the Bay of Fundy are the highest in the world, they rise from fifty to seventy feet, and rush in with great swiftness. The tide lifts the flatboat with the stones attached; the workmen bring the boat ashore and remove the stones at their leisure when the tide is out.

The Substitute for Vodka.

Elimination of vodka from Russia has evidently started that immense nation tea-drinking. In February last the New York "Journal of Commerce" stated that the quotations were 8c to 10c a pound higher than they were a year previously, and that the Russians were buying all the India-Ceylons available. The price has been advancing ever since.

Why Cows Give More Milk.

Cattle used to be bred chiefly for work. Therefore the cows did not give much milk. Breeds improve the thing for which they are selected.

In 1790 the work cows of Germany gave an average of a pint and a half a day. Interest in milk increased, and by 1800 the average yield was a quart and a half. Breeding went on milkward, and in 1810 the German cows averaged two quarts of milk each per day.

In 1820 three, in 1830 four—and there the gain stopped for thirty years. But in 1860 the production had increased to six quarts, and by 1870 to eight.

TENTH CON BRUCE

Berrypicking is the order of the day.

Haying operations are about completed in this neighborhood. The hay crop surprised a good many of the farmers this year as it turned out 50 per cent better than they were counting on a few weeks ago.

Mr and Mrs G Heath, also Mr and Mrs A Bradley Sundayed at Mr T S White's.

Messrs McDonald & McGillivray are busy repairing their threshing outfit. By the appearance of the grain crop at present the threshers this year ought to make a little money.

Mr Chas McDonald has been slightly indisposed for the past week. Charlie has not just looked like himself since the last horse deal he made with our genial mail carrier.

Mr Richard Christie is preparing the foundation for a new house. That looks like prosperity, for a man cannot build a house nowadays without money, and plenty of it at that.

Since the price of autos has taken such a drop a number of farmers have intimated their desire to have one. Messrs A Sinclair and W Minto seem to be giving the matter a good deal of their serious consideration.

REMARKABLE CASE of Mrs. HAM

Declares Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her Life and Sanity.

Shamrock, Mo.— "I feel it my duty to tell the public the condition of my health before using your medicine. I had falling, inflammation and congestion, female weakness, pains in both sides, backaches and bearing down pains, was short of memory, nervous, impatient, passed sleepless nights, and had neither strength nor energy. There was always a fear and dread in my mind, I had cold, nervous, weak spells, hot flashes over my body. I had a place in my right side that was so sore that I could hardly bear the weight of my clothes. I tried medicines and doctors, but they did me little good, and I never expected to get out again. I got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier, and I certainly would have been in grave or in an asylum if your medicines had not saved me. But now I can work all day, sleep well at night, eat anything I want, have no hot flashes or weak, nervous spells. All pains, aches, fears and dreads are gone, my home, children and husband are no longer neglected, as I am almost entirely free of the bad symptoms I had before taking your remedies, and all is pleasure and happiness in my home."— Mrs. Jonas Hall, R. F. D. 1, Box 22, Shamrock, Missouri.

WALKERTON

Before going to the front with the first contingent, Frank Halley, a former Walkerton boy who enlisted at Toronto, stated to his friends that he hoped never to return until he had set foot in the midst of Germany. His wish had been granted in a way he little expected, for the news comes that he has been captured by the Germans and conveyed to one of their far inland camps.

The Walkerton Electric Light Co. expect to have their wires connected up with Formosa on Monday next and in turn on electric lights there for the first time on Tuesday, August 10th, when a big celebration will be held. The Formosa Co. expect to connect up some eight or ten farm houses along the route.

Not often does it fall to a minister to officiate at the cradle, altar and the tomb the same day, but Rev Thos Wilson had this unique experience on Wednesday last. In the morning at 10 o'clock he administered the rites of baptism to Mr Walter Rawand's infant son, whom he christened as Donald Walter. At high noon he officiated at the marriage of Mr Donald Murray and Miss Lillian Rawand and about three o'clock in the afternoon performed the last sad rites over the grave of the late Joseph Bergman. United day of sorrow and mirth was brought to a fitting close by the reverend gentleman officiating at a prayer-meeting in the evening.

The marriage of Miss Elizabeth Lilian Rawand, youngest daughter of Mr Wm Rawand of Brant, and a graduate nurse of the Bruce County Hospital, Walkerton, to Mr Donald Murray, son of Mr Angus Murray of Brant, was solemnized at the home of the bride's father on Wednesday last at high noon, Rev Thos Wilson of Knox Presbyterian Church officiating.

Vogan's hardware is having some close calls these days. Last week we recorded where an autoist getting gasoline there lit a match to light his pipe and caused an explosion that almost burnt his car and fired the place. Last Saturday Mr Ray Vogan became again alarmed by the smell of burning rags, and on investigation saw Mr Amos Hoover, a local retired farmer, sitting in the store with his pocket burning. It seems that Mr Hoover who is an ardent smoker has the habit of putting the burnt matches in his pockets, and on this occasion neglected to extinguish a match that he had laid away in his coat. This ignited several other unused matches and resulted in a fair-sized blaze developing in his clothes. Like Nero fiddling while Rome burned, he was comfortably puffing at his pipe, when Mr Vogan discovered that he was on fire. There was some tall hustling when the alarm was given and although he broke the speed-limit in getting off his coat yet the garment was badly burned before the blaze was extinguished. Luckily Mr Hoover was not sitting on a barrel of powder at the time or they would never have got enough of him together to hold a funeral over.—Herald and Times.

WHAT THE GERMAN SOCIALISTS WANT

In 1912 the Social Democratic party in Germany polled four and a quarter million votes out of a total of more than twelve and a quarter million. Besides being by far the strongest party numerically in Germany, it was the leading member of the international union of European Socialists. With the beginning of the war its adherents naturally gave their support to the imperial government. The ties of nationality held them as strongly as they held the dwellers in every other country concerned in the conflict.

It was not to be expected, however, that the German Socialists, for all their loyal devotion to the fatherland, would abandon their own ways of thinking. They have their theories about the purpose of the war, and about the part that their country should play when Europe is again at peace. What their views are they have recently been disclosing in a manner that has attracted world-wide attention.

Following a debate in the Reichstag, during which the Socialist leaders expressed themselves anew, ironically, the Socialist journal "Vorwaerts" printed a full-page official manifesto of the Social Democratic party. It was largely a protest against the opinions of those who hold that one of the objects of Germany in the war is expansion. "We protest again with all possible emphasis against all efforts looking to the annexation of foreign territory and to the oppression of other peoples—measures now demanded by the great business organizations and the influential political leaders." In voting the war supplies last year, the Socialists demanded that when the war was brought to an end it should be done "on conditions admitting of friendly relations with neighboring nations." To annex territory, the Socialists believe, is merely to plant the seeds of new wars. By opposing at this time those who would foresee a policy of conquest, they show that they are becoming mindful again of their brethren of the International.

But the manifesto goes even further. Besides declaring that "the people want no conquest of land," it asserts that they "want peace." It hints plainly at the danger that the war may be prolonged indefinitely until all the nations concerned are exhausted, and urges that Germany, "which has successfully defended itself against superior forces, and which has frustrated the plan to bring it to starvation, should take the first steps towards peace.

The authorities immediately suppressed the issue of "Vorwaerts" that contained this manifesto, and also the other Socialist papers that published it. How far-reaching in its effects the incident may be it is impossible to say, but at least it seems to show that the Social Democratic party in Germany is resuming its activity in behalf of Internationalism. Such activity, of course, means a well-defined division of opinion within Germany itself in regard to the prosecution of the war.

OUR DUTY TO THE BLIND

From Vienna, from Paris and from Montreal come reports of arrangements that have been made for the assistance and instruction of soldiers blinded in the war. The French report states that a larger proportion of the combatants have been, and will be, made blind in this war than in any previous war, on account of the difference in weapons and in the character of the fighting. Ontario has provided ample for the instruction of blind children, but has not been a leader in preparation for ameliorating the condition of the adult blind. With the added claims of the soldiers who will come home from Europe sightless, action in the matter cannot be long delayed. Our blind soldiers and fellow citizens must not be left to wear out their lives in idleness and sorrow, when timely aid and proper instruction can enable them to resume their places as useful members of the community. The Ontario School for the Blind at Brantford is maintained for the education of children whose sight is so defective that they cannot be taught in the regular public schools. This school is not intended for adults, and it cannot do what is required for the class above referred to, without reducing, if not destroying, its efficiency as an instructor of the young. Runs file residents of Ontario, between the ages of seventy and twenty-one, who cannot see to read ordinary type without injury, are admitted to the school without charge for board, tuition or books. Applications should be made to the principal, H F Gardiner, Brantford, in time to have all arrangements completed before the opening of the session in September.

GRAND MARCH OF ALLIES

The most brilliant and spectacular episode ever staged before the grand stand will be the review of the troops at Calais, on the great march of the Allies. In the former the visitor will see the armies of France in the ancient city of Calais. Massed upon the littoral will be the commanders of the allied armies and the sovereigns of the allied countries. Soldiers from Russia, France, Great Britain and her Dominions, Italy, Serbia and Montenegro, dressed in their national uniforms will march in one great phalanx before those who to-day are making history and changing the map of the world.

When this great military aggregation has passed in review under before kings and generals, a wonderful vista will open before the eyes of the people. On the far horizon will be seen the watch dogs of Great Britain, led by the latest superdreadnaught, the Queen Elizabeth, and followed by twenty-six battleships, battle cruisers, torpedo boats and submarines. In his flagship, the Iron Duke, who will review the fleet amidst a salvo of broadsides. Then at a given signal the whole fleet will be brilliantly illuminated and amidst the strains of Old Hundred will vanish over the horizon.

—While Canadian farmers are complaining of excessive rainfalls this summer, crops in Germany are suffering from drought, and the hopes of a record yield are doomed to disappointment. An unprecedented area was planted, but the grain crop will be less than for 1914, so that breadstuffs may prove a more serious problem than during the past year. Potatoes are reported to be very plentiful, however.

—The German Social Democrat party is getting its collective wits together again, after being stricken almost dumb for a year by the war lords' programme. The Socialists are now condemning their leaders for their failure to protest against the invasion of Belgium and the sinking of the Lusitania, and called upon them to break at once the party truce and begin an active campaign for peace. Even the Kaiser can't fool all the people all the time.

LIONEL WALTER ROTHSCHILD

PREFERS ZOO TO HIS FATHER'S FORTUNE.

Would you sacrifice an inheritance of $50,000,000 for the love of a few bugs and animals? Would you be chasing rare specimens of zebras and ostriches and fleas about the world when a few hours a day spent in chasing the elusive dollar in London would have assured you a fortune that would make all except a handful of men throughout the world jealous?

Of course, you wouldn't; yet there is a man in London who has done all this and does not regret it. He is Lionel Walter Rothschild, the new Rothschild, and because he would not concern himself with exchange and finance and company promotion and the other pastimes of the financial world, but spent his waking hours among his unexcelled collection of animals at Tring, in Hertfordshire, his late father has cut him off with a paltry $25,000 a year, leaving the rest of his gigantic fortune and the partnership in the immensely powerful House of Rothschild to his second son.

It was the new baron who acquired an island in the Pacific Ocean for the sole purpose of breeding giant tortoises of which the Tring zoo boasts some remarkable specimens. He it was who issued a wonderful book on extinct birds a few years ago, which it cost $100,000 and many years of labor to produce.

Enthusiast in Fleas.

He it was who sent a scientist to the Cannibal Islands to ransack them at the risk of his life for rare specimens of beasts, birds, and bugs and who offered $5,000 for a perfect specimen of the Arctic flea and actually paid that sum for a rare butterfly from Ecuador, and whose collection of such strange things as birds of paradise, baboons, and deep sea fishes is known to be unique.

It has been common knowledge for years that the new head of the Rothschild family knew little and cared less about the ins and outs of the famous banking business in New Square. It is hard, however, to imagine a Rothchild without at least some aptitude for the business of money getting, and they were probably wrong who fancied that when the Hon. Walter came to St. Swithin's lane it was to buy a Himalayan bear, a wildcat or a rather expensive hawk eagle.

But few persons outside of the Rothschilds family could have anticipated the bombshell of the late Lord Rothschild's will, for out of his enormous fortune, the heir to the title received a legacy of only $25,000 a year, or exactly one-half of what he is said to spend yearly in the upkeep of his famous zoo (his mother received $500,000 in a lump).

Has Other Millions.

Second thoughts, however, make it plain that this explanation of a truly amazing last will and testament will not hold water, for not only has the new head of the Rothschild bank shared to the full in the zoological enthusiasm of his brother, but he has taken the lead in the queerest of all the Hon. Walter's naturalistic activities—namely, the systematic collection of every known kind of flea that vexes the animal kingdom—to the latter's benefit, as David Harum steadfastly believed. The 10,000 fleas of all forms and sizes in the museum at Tring Park are, in fact, the property of the Hon. Charles, but the fact remains that, unlike his elder brother, he had not been obsessed by his devotion to natural history, but for years has been one of the most active and capable members of the firm of which he is now the head.

The late Lord Rothschild took pains to explain in his will, moreover, that his legacy to his eldest son was so comparatively small for the reason the latter already had received annuities both by his great-great and his great-uncle—annuities that are believed to have made him many times a millionaire. The new Lord Rothschild, at 46, is an apparently a confirmed bachelor.

Butterflies and Guns.

In a recent lecture on modern artillery at the Royal Institution, in London, Lieut. Col. A. G. Hadcock compared the life of the big guns now in use in the British navy to the life of a butterfly that is born, lives its full span, and dies of old age, all within the space of twenty-four hours. It takes from ten to twelve months to make a fourteen-inch gun. Its "life," properly speaking, is the length of time that it is in actual use. When not in use it is merely a dead mass of metal. According to Colonel Hadcock, if it were possible to make the gun "live" all the time, by sending an incessant stream of projectiles through it, it would "die" of old age—in other words, would be worn out—in twelve seconds.

Even a politician objects to being shaved with a razor that has a pull.

CANADA'S FIRE LOSS.

At a recent meeting of the Berlin, Ont., Board of Trade the following facts were brought out in a resolution placed on record:

The fire loss per capita in Canada is greatly in excess of that of any other civilized country in the world, and our national position in this regard is constantly becoming worse instead of better, until at the present time our Canadian fire losses, in proportion to population, are approximately six times greater than those of Great Britain, France, or Germany, with a correspondingly high rate of insurance premium; and in the past ten years the average annual loss in ten Canadian cities from Halifax to cents per head as against an average annual loss of $3.55 per head in ten aCndian cities from Halifax to Vancouver, with an average rate of premium in the British cities of but 22 cents per $100 of insured value as against an average of $1.40 in Canadian cities.

The fire losses of $14,000,000 paid by Canadian companies in 1913 would at the British rate of premium, be reduced to $2,300,000, thus bringing about an annual saving of nearly $12,00,000, which, in every decade, would amount, with compound interest, to more than the Dominion Government's contribution thus far for war purposes; it being equally true that this huge sum represents perhaps less than half of the annual losses directly or indirectly resulting from fire, thus justly representing in the eyes of European countries, on the one hand, as a nation of incendiaries, and, on the other, as absolute incompetents, and fully authorizing the verdict that the result is not only a national criminal waste, but also a "burning shame."

In the United States though their rate of loss is considerably lower than Canada's, the National Fire Protection Association of that country, in a recent report, referred to their "reckless and unceasing waste" as an "impoverishment of the nation."

Our own losses are continually deplored and lamented, not only by our insurance companies, but by the public generally, and remedial action is continually urged along Provincial lines, as yet without avail.

The Canadian Commission of Conservation has achieved excellent results in the conservation of our national waterpowers in the great reduction of forest fires along our railways, has initiated a movement for conservation on broad national lines for city planning, and has sought out and applied means to conserve our national resources in other directions, thus making it indispensible that they have the organization to take up this most important and directly beneficial feature of national conservation with every prospect of success.

The Berlin Board of Trade requested the Canadian Commission of Conservation to take up this matter as a special department of its work with expert assistance for formulating recommendations to the different Provinces, and directing an effort in Canada to approximate gradually to the European standard; and concerted action in a movement of this kind is more likely to bring results.

LOSSES IN THE WAR.

The Greatest Conflict There Has Ever Been.

As a military event, what is happening now makes Waterloo look very small. There were fewer than 24,000 British troops at Waterloo, and the casualties, though they made Wellington weep, did not reach 7,000. At Neuve Chapelle, though it was a second-rate battle as the size of battles in this war goes, we lost twice as many. The total number of British lives lost in action during the whole of the Crimean War was under 3,000, and, without being too precise in our figures, the first six weeks of the Gallipoli campaign must easily have topped that number, says the Manchester Guardian.

We have never seen any estimate of our total casualties in the fifteen years of the war with Napoleon, but we should be surprised if they surpassed the number already reached in this war. The American Civil War, which lasted four years and cost 600,000 lives, has hitherto been regarded as the most destructive in lives of English-speaking people, but we have latterly been spending life at a faster rate than both sides together did in that war.

Great as our casualties are, they are small by comparison with those of the other powers engaged. Battles now-a-days last a week for every day that they lasted a hundred years ago; but even so, the rate of slaughter at Leipsic—30,000 a day for three days—has been attained in many battles on the eastern front. There are more Austrian prisoners in Russia than there were men in Napoleon's Grand Army which set out for Russia. More Germans fell in the attacks on Ypres last autumn than were lost on both sides in Gravelotte, the bloodiest battle in the Franco-Prussian War. Every one says this is the greatest war there has ever been. It is at any rate the biggest, and few of us realize by how much the biggest.

TWIN DISEASE BEARERS.

The Mosquito and Fly Are a Positive Menace.

Scientists have made a few startling discoveries during the last few years as that the two most common house-hold insects are the most persistent bearers of typhoid and malaria.

We have long dreaded the mosquito and fly as personal nuisances, but never more. That they are a positive menace to the human race has but recently been fully shown. And now, those conversant with their methods are determined that they should be fought out, starved out, exterminated.

Both are transmitters of disease; and when either typhoid or malaria exists in a neighborhood the common house fly stands ready to carry the one and its musicalcousin the other. The surest way to stamp out the disease is to wage war on the six-footed.

Rain barrels and stagnant pools are the breeding places of the mosquito where it is commonly known in its infant days as "wriggler." In its larval stage it is aquatic, and by covering the surface of the water with a thin coating of oil it is destroyed. Look carefully after the rain barrel. Do not allow rain water to stand long enough to breed these pests and if there are pools of water, drain them or spray frequently with kerosene.

The house fly is the most persistent, more nearly omnipresent. It breeds in filth and the more completely all refuse is kept cleaned up the less persistent will be the battle. Stables in the vicinity of the house always bring troubles unless they are cleaned daily. A lady on the outskirts of a town, wondering at the marked increase of flies one summer, finally traced the source of trouble to the fact that the field across the street, instead of being cultivated, was converted into a horse pasture. Strive to destroy their breding places. Convert the animal refuse in which they lurk into fertilizer on the fields, and half the battle is won.

Screens are so cheap that no one can afford to be without them. This is more than a matter of pleasure and convenience; it is a sanitary measure. If some of the screens are defective, mend them with black cloth. Better, get a piece of wire cloth and with it you can quickly patch up or replace any defective screens.

There are good fly killers on the market for a small sum. But you can easily make one equal to any of them by taking a small piece of wire cloth, double it and then tack firmly on a wooden handle of convenient length. A window stick answers the purpose nicely. It is light and reaches any part of the room without being so large as to prove awkward and cumbersome. With this, one may strike a fly, being almost certain to stun it so that it will fall and yet there is no danger of marring even a fine fabrice in the process. The double piece of wire cloth is sure to injure the insect so that it will fall. It can then be disposed of before it has time to regain its flight. With this device one may, in a short time, rid a room permanently of the pests. That is, you will know that the same individuals will never return.

Oil of lavender distributed about a room by means of an atomizer tends to keep the flies out and at the same time imparts a fresh odor. If you use tanglefoot, place it where no one can get into it.

The poison fly paper is never to be recommended, there being always danger lest the poison be in some way transferred to the food.

Study the habits of the pest and then rob them of their weapons.

A few moments daily spent in destroying flies that enter the home is much better than to spend weeks fighting typhoid.

To help exterminate the mosquito a film of kerosene should be used. After a rain, watch for the places that fail to dry up promptly. Then get quick action on them with the oil sprayer and repeat the dose of oil every ten days or oftener if the film is broken by showers of wind. Rank grass sometimes hides pools of water that make ideal harbors for wrigglers. Cut all such grass as closely as possible and apply oil. If oil does not form a good film owing to the vegetation, use larvacide composed of nicotine solution to kill the wrigglers.

Bodies of water which can neither be oiled nor treated with larvacide can be kept free of mosquito larvae by stocking with fish. Native minnows are best.

THE CAPTAIN OF THE SHIP.

How Matrimony Is Conducted Among the Taghanuas.

That the idea of marriage reminds others besides Anglo-Saxons of the launching of a ship on a sea appears from the habit of the Taghanuas, a people that are scattered over the Calamianes group of the Philippine Archipelago. They, too, have looked upon the ocean, with its calms and its storms, its ebbs and floods, its power and its uncertainties, and have seen in it much that is emblematic of human life.

Accordingly, the agent who carries the initial proposal from the hopeful youth to the hoped-for young lady, or rather from the father of the one to the father of the other, is called, "The Captain of the Ship." If the captain proves successful as a suitor, the girl's parents name the date on which they will deliver the toothpicks. For every toothpick sent, the young man or his parents must produce a dollar.

At the appointed time and place, the captain sends a messenger to the bride's home with the query, "Can the ship enter?" On receiving a favorable response, he sends a second message: "We have anchored." That is the signal for the toothpicks to be produced. Not always is it possible to agree at the first sitting. The Captain of the Ship considers it his duty to beat down the dowry just as far as he can.

The bargain concluded, the family of the groom repair to the home of the bride, where the messengers of the two sides engage in a lusty flat fight, from which the groom's representative always happens to come out victorious. The Captain of the Ship then passes through between the two messengers, who have taken their stand at the door. The guests follow, and each receives a little gift. No one is omitted, lest the marriage be unlucky. The dowry is then paid over to the bride's mother.

During all this time the bride is sitting alone in a closed room. When the door is opened, she is found sitting with her back to the door. The two messengers conduct the bridegroom to the same room, where he takes a seat on the floor, his back to the back of the young lady, and almost near enough to touch her. With a solemn warning to both not to move an inch from the spot, the messengers leave the room and close the door.

At this point the parents of the couple, together with the Captain of the Ship and the two messengers, form a circle among the assembled guests and partake of a meal together; the guests may look on if they desire. A dance follows the meal, in which the groom's messenger designates which of the men shall take part, while the bride's representative gives similar directions to the women. No one may refuse to dance if he is selected. A banquet provided by the bride's parents follows the dance. When everyone is seated, some one remarks that the bride and groom ought to participate in the festivities.

The doors are thrown open and the two are found still sitting back to back, precisely as they were left. They sit together at a small table, where for the first time they eat in each other's company. They rise to dance together, and with that ceremony the matrimonial ship has been launched.

Aliens in French Army.

More than 30,000 foreigners, Americans, Poles, Greeks, Spaniards and even Turks, have enlisted in the French army since the beginning of the hostilities. These 30,000 men form in themselves an entire army corps and still new enlistments are reported daily. "France will never forget these heores who fight by the side of her sons in the defence of France's honor and humanity's freedom from Prussian militarism," is the recent tribute paid to these volunteers by a prominent French General, who also declared that these foreigners had performed many acts of heroism and have helped to win several battles.

When looking for lodgings a man must either inquire within or go without.

WHERE ARE YOU, GOD?

The following poem was written by Elsie Janis, the American actress, after the sinking of the Lusitania, and recited in London:

Where are you, God, in whom I have believed?
Are you in heaven, have I been deceived?
I can't believe you sit up there and do look down on us all
Seeing the horrors on this earth, seeing the brave men fall.
I'm praying to you; are you there?
Can you hear me call? Where are you, God?

Where are you, God? in whose hands the great world
Is like a tiny ball that can be turned and twirled.
I can't believe that you have seen the things that they have done.
With poisoned gas and crucifixions battles have been won.
Get after this upon your earth, there still exists the Hun.
Where are you, God?

Where are you, God, in whom I put my trust?
You must be there, and you are great and just.
Your mighty sea they've turned into a grave,
A little baby slumbers an each wave.
Where are you, God?

Forgive me, God, if I have doubted you,
For in my heart I know what you will do.
Quite soon I feel you'll give us our release;
Quite soon in your own way you'll tell us, "Cease!"
And with one mighty stroke you will send Peace,
For you are there!

ELSIE JANIS

WHEN ARE YOU HAPPIEST?

Which are the happiest five minutes in your day? They are significant, as they reveal character.

The man who goes to bed, gets his book, makes himself comfortable, sighs with content, and can say, "This is my happiest five minutes!" is a man of mental power, clear conscience, imagination, foresight, but possibly inclined to be "nervy."

He who votes for the after-breakfast five minutes, with a pipe and a stroll round the garden, is simple and domesticated. He'll never do anything very great, or anything very mean. He's reliable, calm in an emergency, but not a great man.

He who plumps for the first five minutes of work or business—there are those like that—is of fickle, butterfly disposition, with no staying power. He'll do things well up to a certain point, and then stop. He is not without ability, but lacks ballast.

The man who would frankly confess that his happiest five minutes is when he sits down to a good meal is one who will probably make a success of life.

Love of food goes hand in hand with big ideas and big successes. True, he is not to be absolutely trusted, and he is a hard master, but he'll make his way. He is a fighter, too. The man who "five minutes" is when he gets hold of bat, golf club, racket, or the like, is a man of many qualities. He would lead men. He is truthful, enthusiastic, with a kind heart and a keen judgment.

And he whose happiest five minutes is the last possible five in bed is, contrary to the expected, a strong character, quick to perversion of the truth. But he's generous.

He who loves not his country can love nothing.—Byron.

The progress of rivers to the ocean is not so rapid as that of man to error.—Voltaire.

Sleep, riches and health are only truly enjoyed after they have been interrupted.—Richter.

Trust men and they will be true to you, trust them greatly and they will show themselves great.—Emerson.

The setting of a great hupe is like the setting of the sun. The brightness of our life is gone.—Longfellow.

Wealth is honorable, and may be used most blessedly when men regard themselves as being what indeed they are—stewards of it, and not the owners.—Farrer.

Whatever the number of a man's friends there will be times in his life when he has one too few; but if he has only one enemy he is lucky indeed if he has not one too many.—Lytton.

I know nothing so hard for a generous mind to get over as calumny and reproach, and cannot find any methods of quieting the soul under them, besides being conscious to ourselves that we do not deserve them. —Addison.

Seems a Little Extreme.

England's recent failure to establish total abstinence for the duration of the war led Robert W. Chambers, the novelist, to say:—"It's just as well, perhaps. Total abstinence seems a little extreme. There's alcohol in everything, you know. There's alcohol in the very bread we eat." "Alcohol in bread?" said one of the party incredulously. "Sure!" said Mr. Chambers. "Didn't you ever see men get intoxicated from drinking toasts?"

WAR AND THE BELLS.

Associated With the Hour of National Triumph and Disaster.

When, more than a century ago, news reached England of the Battle of Trafalgar and the death of Nelson in the hour of victory, the bells of Chester Cathedral flung abroad peal after peal of air-borne triumph; but after every peal, deeply, solemnly, mournfully, the greatest bell tolled once, a single booming note of grief.

Bells for many centuries have been intimately associated with the hour of national triumph and disaster. In Belgium, famous as a land of bells and carillons, the ancient tocsin of Antwerp, cast in 1316, and named the "Horrida," has been long disused; it did not, in this year of battle, cry aloud the city's danger or proclaim its fall. Its younger comrade, the Santa Maria, which first rang in 1467 on the entry of Charles the Bold into the city, was also silent, and so was the favorite Carolus, the gift of the Emperor Charles V., richly cast of copper, silver, and gold. Perhaps, like Roland, the great bell of Ghent, they only sound for victory.

The Belgian bells are, many of them, among the finest products of the great bell founders, when their art was in its prime, in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Few French and English bells are as notable for perfection of tone, but a great many are renowned through tradition and association. Many of the most famous French bells, like Jacqueline of Paris and George d'Ambois of Rouen, were melted down for gun and metal during the Revolution. Of the English bells, many bear inscriptions connecting them with famous persons or events.

A Royalist village bell, of the period of the Civil Wars, thus proclaims its association with the execution of Charles I, for which it tolled to its injury, and the restoration of Charles II, which it was repaired to celebrate:

When that my Kinge he suffered
I lust my tonge, as he hys Head.
When that my Kinge returned to reigne
I found my Voyce to ringe againe.

The magnificent peal of bells in the church of St. Helen's, Worcester, was installed to commemorate the victories of the great Duke of Marlborough. Six of the eight bear the names of battles, the other two those of the duke and the queen; and each carries a patriotic inscription.

First is my note and Blenheim is my name
For Blenheim's story will be sung, in fame.

So proclaims the first bell; the last concludes the exultant peal:

When union blest, and all these glories round.

Old Boston possesses one of the finest peals of England, whose hymn of thanksgiving, alternating with wild, triumphant ringing, first told the scattered villages and towns of the wide fens of Lincolnshire that Napoleon had met defeat at Waterloo. Another English bell, recast after it had, on the same occasion, cracked under the joyful strain of its own insistent thunder, is proudly inscribed:

I rang the downfall of Buonaparte, and broke,
with the date of Waterloo.

MEAT AND MEN.

Big Bread Eaters Are of Dominating Character.

The succulence and flavor of a joint of meat depend not only upon careful cooking, but to an even greater degree on what the animal was fed with. Its food influences the flavor of its flesh—"dairy-fed pork," for example. In the same way the meat and food we eat influence our characters. Englishmen are "beef-fed," and to that they owe their stolid and tolerant characters, slow to move to enthusiasm, with a great liking for compromise and toleration, and a big facility for forgiveness, says London Answers.

The porridge of the Scot makes him argumentative and opinionated, and the restless vivacity of the Irishman is due to his potato diet.

A famous actor carried his belief in the influence of food so far as to vary his menu according to the character he was playing; eating pork for tyrants, beef for murderers, and mutton for lovers.

This may have been taking matters to extremes, but it is a fact that mutton lovers are generally of a quiet temperament, and given to sentiment, while big beef eaters are more often than not of a choleric, fierce character.

Observations of regular pork eaters have not justified the allegation that they are tyrannical; but certainly pork is different from other meats, and noted bullies have been extraordinarily fond of pork chops. Fat bacon produces a lethargic character—slow in thought and action.

It is alleged that vegetarianism makes clear thinkers, but moody characters.

To-day, the wheat-eating nations lead the rest!

WEAK, TIRED, DEPRESSED

That is the Usual Condition of Persons Afflicted With Anaemia

Anaemia is the medical term for poor watery blood. It may arise from a variety of causes, such as lack of exercise, hard study, improperly ventilated rooms or workshops, poor digestion, etc. The chief symptoms are extreme pallor of the face and gums, rapid breathing and palpitation of the heart after slight exertion, headaches, dizziness and a tendency to hysteria, swelling of the feet and limbs and a distaste for food. All these symptoms may not be present, but any of them indicate anaemia which should be promptly treated with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills make new, rich blood which stimulates and strengthens every organ and every part of the body. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have made thousands of anaemic people bright, active and strong. The following is one of the many cures. Mrs. Phillips, wife of Rev. W. E. Phillips, Princeton, Ont., says: "Some years ago, while living with my parents in England I fell a victim of anaemia. The usual complications set in and soon I became but a shadow of my former self. My mother, who had been a former nurse of many years experience, tried all that her knowledge suggested; tonics of various kinds were tried, and three doctors did their best for me, but without avail, and a continued gradual decline and death was looked for.

"Later my parents decided to join my brothers in Canada, and it was confidently expected that the ocean voyage, new climate and new conditions would cure me. For a time I did experience temporary benefit, but was soon as ill again as ever. I was literally bloodless, and the extreme pallor and generally hopeless appearance of my condition called forth many expressions of sympathy from friends whom we made in our new home in Acton, Ont. Later a friend urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and although in a condition where life seemed to have little to hope for I decided to do so. After using three boxes I began to mend. Continuing I began to enjoy my food, slept almost normally, and began to have a fresh interest in life as I felt new blood once again running in my veins. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills brought about a complete cure and I am to-day in robust health. My husband is rector of this parish and I have recommended the use of the Pills to a great number of people with whom we have come into contact in the course of my husband's ministry, for we both know what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can do."

These Pills may be had from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MANY UNSOLVED MYSTERIES

CRIMES WHICH HAVE NEVER BEEN SOLVED.

Case of Poor Wee Maggie Nally Recalls Crimes Never Brought Home.

"Wilful murder against some person or persons unknown" is the verdict of the jury, and another great crime is put into that vast pigeonhole which holds so many of the "unsolved mysteries" of life, says London answers.

The latest crime to be put into that category is the sensational murder of the poor little girl Maggie Nally, in a waiting-room at Aldersgate Street Station. All the help of the Press, all the following-up of clues, all the publication of photographs proved futile, and the jury had no alternative but to fall back upon the stereotyped verdict.

This case is almost an exact parellel of another which equally kept the public upon the tiptoe of excitement and expectation for many weeks. It was known as the Starchfield case, and again concerned the brutal murder of an innocent child—a boy—whose body was found in a train on the North London Railway.

Many Points in Common.

Although many clues were followed, no result was ever secured. The man who was accused of the crime, stood his trial, and was acquitted by the jury, was the father of the boy. Today that murder remains an absolutely unsolved problem.

In many ways one crime seems to parallel another, and the incidents of both these child murders are remarkable in their resemblance, not the least of which is that a railway was used as the place for hiding the body.

When one goes back over other unsolved mysteries which Scotland Yard has failed to penetrate there are many which come to the mind of the student of criminology.

Perhaps no greater sensation was ever caused than by the series of what were known as "Jack-the-Ripper" crimes in the neighborhood of Whitechapel, and the newspapers were constantly coming out with placards of "Another Ripper Murder." These crimes took their name from the horrible way in which the bodies of the victims were mutilated, and many asserted that they were the work of a Smithfield butcher. It is said also that the clue to the man was once in the possession of the authorities, and that they just missed getting him. The generally accepted theory of these unsolved mysteries was that the man was an escaped lunatic with homicidal mania.

Guilty or Innocent?

This seemed to be borne out to some extent by the fact that there was a long series of these murders—indeed, two happened in one evening—then they ceased, and after an interval there was another outbreak. Then they ceased altogether, and the criminal was never caught.

It seems very probable that they were the work of an escaped lunatic, perhaps from a private asylum, who was rearrested, and then escaped again, and was then either secured for good, or, as some say, committed suicide.

What was known as the Clapham Common murder remains in the minds of the public—and, indeed, a great many who were present, like the writer, at the trial at the Old Bailey—as an unsolved mystery.

It was a case where a man named Stinie Morrison was accused of the murder of an old man, with whom he was acquainted, by striking him over the head with a bar of iron. The defence was sensational and clever, asking for acquittal on the grounds of purely circumstancial evidence; but the jury held a different view, and brought in a verdict of guilty, with the result that the prisoner was sentenced to death.

They Were Not Satisfied.

The authorities, however, must have had some doubt in their minds as to the exact proving of the case, for, although they did not release the man, the sentence was commuted to penal servitude for life.

It is argued that this must be an unsolved mystery, because, had the Home Office been satisfied as to the guilt of the man, then no one would have more deserved hanging. One of these days this mystery may be solved, as may the other one in the same district of London, where a man was found shot on the steps leading up to his own flat and there appeared to be no reason for the committal of the crime, and there was certainly no trace of the assailant.

Among other remarkable unsolved mysteries was the murder of the poor girl Miss Camp, again in a railway-train, whose head was battered in, it was alleged, with a heavy stone pestle, but no trace of the murderer was ever discovered.

But perhaps the greatest of all sensations in connection with murder mysteries is what is known as the Peasenhall crime, which resulted in a man being twice tried for his life at the assizes. In each case the trial lasted a number of days, and neither jury could make up its mind to a verdict.

After Two Trials.

The man, who was the master of the servant-girl who was found murdered in the house, with her clothing deliberately set on fire by paraffin, was kept in prison for some little time longer, and there was talk of a third trial. But the Crown, deciding that its evidence against him was not sufficient, dropped the case, and the man was liberated.

To-day that mystery is as great as it was then.

In the Births, Marriages, and Deaths column of the newspapers there appears every year on "In Memoriam" notice, referring to the death of a young man who was found murdered in some wood in Scotland. It was a complete mystery who had brought him to his untimely doom, and, although strong suspicion pointed in one direction, no conviction was ever secured. That memoriam notice ends with the quotation: "Vengeance is Mine, I will repay, saith the Lord."

The curious thing which is almost as unsolved mystery in itself, is the peculiar aberration of mind which assails certain individuals in connection with crime, and particularly murders.

What is Their Motive?

It must be some inflated idea of shining in the limelight of notoriety for a few brief moments that makes men give themselves up, self-confessed of some of these diabolical crimes, when it is clearly proved that it was utterly impossible for them to have been anywhere in the neighborhood.

Such happened in the very last mystery of the Aldersgate Street murder, where a soldier gave himself up to the police authorities in the province.

Three Brothers.

The following example of ready wit appears in "The Memoirs of Lord Charles Beresford." When in December, 1897, on the death of Sir Frank Lockwood, the seat of York became vacant, Beresford stood for the election, and was opposed by Sir Christopher Furness, afterward Lord Furness. The contest was close and exciting and eventually won by Lord Charles with a narrow majority of eleven, after two counts, on a poll of over eleven thousand votes. He says:

My brothers, Lord William and Lord Marcus, were helping me. Lord Marcus accompanied me to a meeting, and I told him that he must make a speech.

"I can't,' he said, "I don't know what to say."

I told him to begin, because he would surely be interrupted, and then, being an Irishman, he would certainly find something to say. Lord Marcus thereupon rose to his feet, and a voice immediately shouted:

"Who are you?"

It was enough. The fire was kindled.

"Who are we?" cried Lord Marcus. "I'll tell you who we are. We are three brothers, and our names are Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. And we have come here to put out the burning fiery Furness.'

It has been established that the Duke of Wellington at Waterloo never uttered the famous words, "Up, guards, and at them!"

OVERBLOUSES AND BOLEROS THE VOGUE FOR GIRLS.

There is nothing, perhaps, that harmonizes better with the young girl's figure than overblouses and boleros. These have been exceedingly popular this season, due in no small measure, not alone to their good looks, but to their practicability. A very delightful dress with an overblouse is Ladies' Home Journal Pattern No. 8663, shown above. The underwaist opens in front and has a roll collar, full length plaits at the hips. The overblouse slips on over the head and is held in place by a belt. The pattern cuts in sizes 14, 16, 17 and 18 years, requiring for size 16, five yards of 36-inch material with two yards of material for the underwaist.

Patterns, 15 cents each, can be purchased at your local Ladies' Home Journal Pattern dealer, or from The Home Pattern Company, 183-A, George Street, Toronto, Ontario.

Making No Mistake.

He was an urchin of the streets, but did not lack wits.

One day he saw a well-dressed woman with a benevolent face coming along. At once he dropped in a miserable heap on the curbstone and began to sob pathetically.

The kind lady paused beside him. "What are you crying for, my boy?" she asked gently.

Stifling his sobs with ease, the youngster looked up and replied: "Dunno. What have you got?"

RASPBERRY LORE.

The meanest man in Canada has been discovered, but I dare not give you his name or tell you where he lives, for like all the mean men I know, he is very respectable, and moreover, he is well off and for that reason his neighbors look up to him. It would never do to cast a slur on so estimable a citizen, but let me tell you what he does. He hires the children in the neighborhood to pick raspberries for him, and it is part of the bargain that they must whistle all the time they are in the berry patch. As he is always within hearing he is able in this way to make sure that they do not eat any of the delicious berries they are picking. Now, what do you think of a man like that? I wouldn't consider this man so mean had it not been that for some time past I have been trying to determine the origin of the name "Raspberry." The explanation given in the big dictionaries is perfectly absurd "Rasp—with reference to its rough outside—looking like a rasp" What nonsense. The appearance of a raspberry might remind one of a cluster of rubies, but never of a blacksmith's rasp. But philology, or the science of words, is a mere matter of guesswork in many cases so I feel quite at liberty to guess at the origin of the name raspberry myself.

What does a healthy boy do when he discovers the raspberries are ripe? Anyone can answer that. He comes rushing towards the house yelling "Rah! rah! rah! The raha-berries are ripe. "Rah! an abbreviated cheer, expressive of joy. Hence raha-berries is the berry that makes the small boy cheer because of the joy he feels. Do I hear any objection to that? Of course not. Anyone can see that that is the true explanation. Let the makers of dictionaries take note.

And now that I am at it I may as well set the learned philologists right on another point that has to do with the raspberry. They seem unable to decide on the exact origin of the word "jam" as used in raspberry jam. Once more I am amazed at their blindness. Also once more I go to the healthy small boy for my explanation. What does he say when he gets a chance to steal raspberry jam? If you cannot imagine, just use your memory and recall what you used to say. "Yum yum!" of course. With this starter any learned professor will tell you that by the application of Grimm's law, or some similar law, this ecstatic exclamation in time became changed to "yam, yam!" Still later it was changed to "jam jam!" and then in the hurry of our modern life was abbreviated to "jam!" Do I hear any objection to that? It is all as plain as mud. Say I have a notion to give up farming and go in for philology. The college professors and dictionary makers seem to lack both imagination and knowledge of the small boy.

Now can't you see why I consider the man who makes the boys whistle when picking raspberries the meanest man in Canada? The berry itself and its chief product both take their names from the love of them shown by the small boy. If you do not believe in my derivations just try any healthy boy with ripe strawberries and strawberry jam and see how he will act. If he doesn't say "Rah" and "Yum yum" he is not a normal boy.

A Graceful Hostess.

There are ungracious persons, of whom a certain Mrs. Gomer is one, who cannot do anything for themselves or anyone else without magnifying the difficulties of the task.

If Mrs. Gomer baked a cake or prepared a special dish she always remarked at the table, "Land sakes, it ought to be good! It was a turrible job! I nearly roasted myself over the stove baking it!"

If she set up with a sick neighbor she spent the evening telling about what a "turrible mess" she had left her house in, and how difficult it was for her to get away, and how hard she would have to work the next day to make up for it. One afternoon while Mrs. Curtis, her next-door neighbor, was away, her sister unexpectedly arrived from another city.

Mrs. Gomer, seeing the visitor and her grips on the Curtis front porch, and knowing the Curtis house was locked, invited her to come over to her house and wait for her sister's return.

That evening, when both families were on their front porches, Mrs. Curtis called across:

"Oh, Mrs. Gomer, I must thank you for taking my sister in! She says you entertained her all the afternoon."

"Yes," replied Mrs. Gomer, "and it was a turrible job, too."

Mr. Andrew Carnegie, apropos of the "reprisals" which make the world-war more horrible, said at a luncheon:

"Has it occurred to you that the Germans who ordered these cruel reprisals are old, fat, soft fellows, seated on leather cushions in luxurious offices? They don't suffer themselves so much as a pin prick. They rather remind me of the mother who brought her little boy to school and said, 'This little boy of mine, teacher, is very delicate. So we mustn't whip him. It he does anything bad—and I know he will—just whip the boy next to him. That will give him a good scare and bring him round, maybe.'"

PAISLEY, AUGUST 12th, 1915

Wake Up, Canada!

Considering a Dominion election in sight within a year, The Toronto World (Conservative) points a lesson to its party out of the Manitoba election results, and says some things that might be considered seriously by both parties, with consequent benefit to the welfare of our Dominion. We quote the following:

"But we have not only to fight alongside the empire and against Germany; the affairs of Canada require the highest kind of policy, of statesmanship, of courage, to face the new and far-reaching conditions that are arising in Canada, partly because of the war, partly because of our own mistakes. We have not only to finish our part in the war with credit and success, but our statesmen must be able to lead and deal with the present and coming financial situation, the railway situation and the situation in which Western Canada finds itself. We must maintain the national finances, create a truly national system of banking based on the national credit and upheld by a national currency; and a thorough-going policy of retrenchment must be adopted throughout the public administration. The departments at Ottawa must be overhauled, extravagance dismissed from every branch, more scientific methods of appointment to office, purchase of supplies. Patronage must go, absolute civil service reform must come in. The country has been landed in a railway situation the like of which was never experienced by any other country. We have overbuilt of railways and we have three transcontinental lines where two would do and where a national one would be better. We have unnecessarily duplicated lines; surely we must stop the extravagance of maintaining these unnecessary duplications. The country has paid for most of these railways, but others own them. Why should we not take them over, co-ordinate them, administer them by a national commission removed from politics and by officers and men who can only do justice to their duty when deprived of the franchise? Canada has now an opportunity of leading America in nationalizing the railways on the basis of public service and not on the basis of exploitation of the public. We are leading America to-day in fighting for liberty and we have the chance of leading in effecting a still nearer freedom for our people in railway service. The new banking and financial policy, and the new railway policy, must be designed to meet the requirements of the west. Farming there must be regenerated, more settlers of a still better type must be attracted to our wheat fields and to our live-stock opportunities, the public resources and franchises must be conserved. And these things, finances, railways, reorganization of the west, are only three of many other things that call for statesmanship, for courage, for new and progressive ideas, for new conditions, and for men who believe in these progressive ideas and have not been afraid of them. There are some who think that the only way out is the reorganization of the government on national lines, of taking in the best men of both parties, and making both parties responsible for the new legislation and policy that is called for, and to carry out which a three years' extension of the life of the present parliament may be necessary. If not this, then in the light of what happened yesterday in Manitoba, the Conservative party must be reconstructed in its leaders and policy and its aggressiveness. Sir Robert Borden is probably doing necessary work in England, but there are very pressing things here at home. It's time to call out, "Wake up, Canada!"

—It is beginning to dawn on the Britisher in general that the motto, "Business as Usual," should never have been adopted.

—Our peaceful Johnny Canucks seem to be making good in their short training course for active warfare. A retired major writes in The Daily Express, London, England: "I was present at the review at Shorncliffe when Bonar Law and General Hughes saw the Canadian troops march past. As an old soldier I can say I have never seen finer troops than the thousands who passed in review under the command of Major-General Steele. It was a revelation. Among them was a regiment of French-Canadians. The men had stood in a deluge over an hour and a half, but they went by like old soldiers. Not one of them had been a soldier ten months ago. There were enough six-footers among them to make a Guards' brigade."

—The electors of Manitoba gave Roblinism the grand hoist in the election on Friday last. In 45 constituencies there were only 5 Conservatives returned for the next Legislature. The Liberals won 39 seats and Social Democrats one in Winnipeg. Such a verdict was not altogether unexpected. In the interests of the province possibly it would have been better were the parties more evenly divided, but the voters had no other way of expressing their indignation against a corrupt government than by giving Liberal majorities nearly everywhere. The danger of the 39 to 5 standing is that with the patronage system still in vogue the present day clean-handed victors may become as corrupt as their predecessors, and in the course of time deserve the same treatment.

Methodist Church Finances

By the annual statement issued for the Paisley Methodist Church it is shown that the total amount raised by the congregation during the past year was $2208.50 for all purposes. This is an increase over any previous year in the history of the congregation. Many individuals have increased their contributions, and the missionary cause is more generously supported.

Found Hard Stuff

With the object of curbing the illicit trade in wet goods that is apparent at times, Constable Leitch and nightwatchman Stewart searched the dwelling of a citizen on Tuesday afternoon. Their efforts were rewarded by the discovery of six bottles of whiskey and a case of beer. The wet goods were seized and are held as evidence in the prosecution that is to follow. At the time of writing it is not known when a court will be held.

For Bruce and Grey Bowlers

The Harbor House, Wiarton, and the Patterson House, Owen Sound, have presented a cup for competition among the bowlers of Grey and Bruce counties. The playing must begin at Wiarton, so Wiarton will have the honor of being the first defenders. Those competing for the cup must bring two rinks. The cup is a beauty, and if it is here and there and all over like the Bowman trophy it will be to a great many paces.

A Plucky Little Fellow

Sam M. Leland's little boy took good care of himself one day recently when a team he was driving on a horse rake ran away. He was thrown off the seat in front but he clung to the rake like grim death while the horses ran around the field, bumping against fences and posts, until they were tired out, then he climbed up and fell back off the rake without injury. His father was a witness of the runaway and unable to help in the rescue of the plucky little fellow.—Kincardine Review.

Bowling on the Green

The singles competition for the Fisher cup is well under way on the local green, and should soon be down to the final rounds.—The Bowman trophy lately went from Owen Sound to Port Elgin, and on Thursday last a Walkerton rink skipped by O. H. Klein took it to the county town. The clubs next in order for games are: Cargill, Teeswater, Arthur, Orangeville, Paisley, Southampton, Owen Sound, Wiarton, Port Elgin.—Three rinks are preparing to compete at Cargill tournament, which opens on Wednesday.

More Recruits Enlist

The recruiting office is still open in Paisley, under the charge of Major Hay and Dr. Houston, so that none in this district who desire to soldier for their country need miss the opportunity. During the past week seven new men have enlisted here, viz:

George Woolmer, of Port Elgin
James Elder, "
Wm. Geo. Overton, "
Percy D. G. Ferguson, "
Robt. Geo. Greenaulock, Orillia
John S. Price, Grey Co.
Augustus C. Jenkins, Walkerton

Greatest Garden Party Yet

The Centre Bruce garden party had to be postponed from Thursday to Friday night of last week, on account of rain. This circumstance did not in the least detract from the success of the function, however, as the total proceeds rolled up to $332, which is the largest ever known for a garden party in this part of the country. The programme was a lengthy and varied one, contributed by talent from Paisley, Tiverton, Underwood and Bruce Tp., with the Kincardine pipe band as the big attraction. Arrangements for accommodation of the people, the auto and the horses were as perfect as could be for such an occasion, credit for this being due to Mr Geo Brown at whose home the gathering was held.

Death of Mr. Andrew Malcolm

The death of this prominent citizen of Kincardine and the county took place on Monday morning. As a leading manufacturer Mr. Malcolm formed a business connection extending over the greater part of the British empire, it may be said, as the products of the Malcolm factory were sold in all sections of the English-speaking world. Mr. Malcolm was born in Stirlingshire, Scotland, and came to Kincardine after having lived on the Island of Jamaica and in the Central States for a time. In the political affairs of his town, county and province Mr. Malcolm filled a large place, being chosen for various public positions, including the mayoralty of Kincardine and representative to the Legislature as candidate of the Liberal party in Centre Bruce. He is survived by two sons and one daughter.

From the Boys in England

In his last letter to his parents here, Pte. T. H. George, of the 16th Batt., who is in bed in Margate hospital since he was wounded in action, says he is going about freely on crutches, but he does not expect to be able to do without the sticks for some time yet. When his leg is fully healed he will likely have to go into training again before being sent to the front. Pte. Thos. Babcock wrote on date of July 24th to Lieut Eckel here. At that time there was no word of any of our lads being sent to the front. He is in the Pte. 2463, No. 2 Co., Reserve Battalion, reinforcements for the Princess Pats. While visiting his brother Sergt. A. E. Babcock of the 18th Batt., he met Geo. Purdy, who is with the 28th Batt. All the Bruce boys at Shorncliffe got together and had their photo taken.

Circumspection

"My boy," said the editor of The Belleville Bugle to the new reporter, "you lack caution. You must learn not to state things as facts until they are proved facts —otherwise you are very apt to get us into libel suits. Do not say 'the cashier who stole the funds,' say 'the cashier who is alleged to have stolen the funds.' That's all now, and—ah—listen in a stick full about that Second Ward Social last night."

Owing to an influx of visitors it was late in the afternoon before the genial editor of The Bugle caught a glimpse of the great family daily. Halfway down the social column his eyes lit on the following cautious paragraph: "It is rumored that a card party was given last evening to a number of reputed ladies of the Second ward. Mrs Smith, gossip says, was the hostess, and the festivities are reported to have continued until to-day in the evening. It is alleged that the affair was a social function given to the ladies of the Second Ward Cluch Club, and that with the exception of Mrs James Bilwilger, who says she comes from Lewvis Junction, none but members were present. The reputed hostess insists that coffee and wafers alone were served as refreshments. The Smith woman claims to be the wife of John Smith, the so-called 'Honest Shoe Man' of 315 East State Street."

Shortly afterward a whirling mass, claiming to be a reporter on The Bugle, flew fifteen feet into the street, and landed with what bystanders assert was a dull sickening thud.—Puck.

A MATTER OF NECESSITY

Of discussion over the sentence, "I didn't raise my boy to be a soldier," there seems to be no end, and as is usual in such cases practically all of the debate is beside the point. Of course women do not raise their boys to be soldiers. The women who did would be a monstrosity. But neither as a rule do they raise them to be cowards or mollycoddles. They intend and hope that they will sometime be men. Now, unfortunately, men by reason of their manhood and by force of circumstances are sometimes called upon to be soldiers, and to defend the mothers who raised them. In their hearts most normal mothers would have it this way. There are fates more deplorable than the fate of the man called upon to fight for his country and his home, the fate, for instance, of the man who lacks the opportunity to fight when his country and his home are threatened.—Detroit Free Press.

—"If the newspapers were all suppressed I believe that crime and sin would increase 100 per cent. over night and all hell would hold a jubilee." That is what Billy Sunday says about newspapers.

—The clouds have disappeared at last, and it's ideal weather for haying or harvest. With their large crop to handle farmers will be almost too busy to follow out news for the next month.

—Mr. Geo. Spavin happened with a painful accident on Monday. He was running the binder cutting wheat and was in fact of fixing part of the machine when his hand caught in the needle of the binder, lacerating the hand between the thumb and first finger. Three stitches were required to draw the tear together.—Tara Leader.

—Whiskey and brandy cannot be taken as "medicine" after January 1st, 1916, in the United States, and, as a result, every druggist who proposes to sell either intoxicant after that date will be forced to take out a license as a saloon keeper, paying the high retailer's tax and putting his place under all local and state regulations. This situation was brought about by the decision of the Revision Committee of the United States Pharmacopoeia to drop both whiskey and brandy from the publication. The elimination of these intoxicants from the book has the effect of withdrawing recognition of them as medicines. It is believed that the recognition of whiskey and brandy as medicines has had a tendency to make the drug store a "blind tiger." This is especially true in "dry" territory.

Headquarters for

PLYMOUTH Binder Twine

"Yes, I am having a lot of trouble with it, and I have tried ever so many kinds of Binder Twine, but it's no use. It simply won't work."

"Well, I don't wonder at it not working for you. Why, you are using twine of inferior quality. No binder would work satisfactorily with that Twine."

"All Twine is the same, is it not?"

"That's what I thought, until I used Plymouth Twine. I had the same trouble with my binder as you are having now. I was advised to use Plymouth Twine. I did so, and now I never have any trouble. One ball of Plymouth Twine will convince you that it is the best Twine on the market."

"I hear a lot of talking about Plymouth Twine, but always thought all Twine was the same. I believe you're right, Bob, the next Twine I buy will be Plymouth."

Use Plymouth Binder Twine. We sell it.

Subscription Arrears to The Advocate

THERE is several hundred dollars still due us on arrears for subscription to The Advocate. We have quite regularly sent our accounts out in an endeavor to collect all. Some, however, have neglected to respond to our requests for payment. Subscribers who neglect the little matter of remitting regularly do not, perhaps, understand the position we are placed in because of not receiving from them what is due us. We do not believe the are are more than only a few who would deliberately beat us out of our dues, and we do not propose to treat delinquents as rogues unless we actually find they are such. Nevertheless, we are obliged to make a special effort to collect all arrears, and we have handed over to The Publishers' Ad justing Association a list of behind-handers who will hear from them immediately. Prompt attention to the first notice of indebtedness will save additional expense.

We derive no particular pleasure from the pursuit of delinquents, but it seems that it is a necessary part of the business of managing a newspaper office, so we must, that's all.

Kindly avoid all unpleasantness by remitting the amount of your account at once.

Yours truly,

THE FIGHT FOR HUMANITY

There is only one lesson to be drawn from the German victories in Russia. The stronger the Germans are, the more necessary it is for humanity to resist the Prussian domination. If we were fighting smallpox or cholera we should say that the prevalence of smallpox or cholera was a stimulus to action. No one would dream of submission. So it is with Prussianism. Prussianism is a moral disease. The world must fight it or perish. It would be better if the human race should be annihilated than that it should succumb to the devilish and beastly ideas for which the Kaiser stands.

Belgium was invaded at the beginning of the war by the flower of the German armies, the men whom the Kaiser delighted to honor. They signalized their invasion by a series of beastly and cruel orgies. They were drunken and lustful beasts. They converted a beautiful, civilized, refined, industrious country into a hell—or what would have been a hell but for the soul of Belgium.

In Asia Minor the Germans have encouraged the Turks to massacre the Christian population. In other words, they told the Turks to act as the flower of the German army acted in Belgium. All this shows what the world may expect from Prussian rule. It will be the rule of something lower than the beast. The sanctities of home life, the honor of women, the lives of human beings, will count for nothing. Everything is to be a prey to beastly appetites for lust and murder.

Men say that the Germans have shown military strength and skill. No doubt. The tiger is strong and crafty. So is the gorilla. But mankind did not choose to submit to the tiger and the ape. If mankind had so submitted, there would have been no progress of civilization, and we should not be enjoying the fruits of civilization. As we enjoy the fruits, it is our duty to sow the seeds of civilization. We are the heirs of all the ages. It is our duty to improve the estate.

There is nothing surprising in the fact that the Kaiser and his vassals, having despised all the moralities and all the affections of life, should nevertheless be strong and crafty. The beasts of prey, the birds of prey, have the same strength and craft. Yet mankind has subdued them. We see an eagle or a tiger now, not as the master of man, but as his servant—a show in a cage. Our ancestors did this great work for us. It is our duty to continue the great work. If we fail in this duty, we deserve a fate even worse than that which befalls the sheep. We are in danger of becoming not only the prey of the pests, but their slaves. Shall we be bossed by Prussian gunmen and Prussian white-slavers?

It is not only a duty, it is a glorious privilege, to fight against this attempt at bestial mastery. This is no mere international rivalry. It is a fight for the home and the family against the beasts of the jungle. The Canadian pioneers of old, your ancestor, used to hear wolves howling outside his log cabin. Did he give up the fight and abandon his mother, his wife and children to the wolves? Had he done so there would have been no Canada. We are faced with the same danger to-day. The Prussian wolf is bowling outside our doors. Are we to submit to be his prey or his slaves?—Daily Star.

Johnny was worried about Washington's greatness. He turned to his mother and said, "Washington's all right, but Grant's more like me."

"How is that?"

"Well" (throwing out a diminutive chest), "he could tell a lie when he had to."

"But, Johnny, you never tell lies, do you?"

"Why, mamma, you know I do. You always find me out."

A moment of silence.

"Mamma."

"Well, Johnny."

"When you were a little girl, didn't you ever tell a lie?"

Mamma was stumped. Then she answered, "I always tried to tell the truth."

"Well, why don't they celebrate you?"—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The traveling men were talking about hard luck, and one of them said: "Did you hear about Murray? He went over to Jacksonville on his first trip with his little speech all ready, but with fear and trembling as to the result of its delivery. His first visit was to a newspaper office, and he rattled off in good style his lines.

"'What can you sell me that paper for?' asked the newspaper man, producing from a pile a sheet of paper.

"'Now,' thought Murray, 'is the time for me to make a name for myself as a man of discretion.' And he quoted the price at 2½ cents.

"'There and a half cents!' repeated the newspaper man. 'Well, here is the bill from your house at 5 cents. Will you kindly see that it is corrected?'

"Murray fled in disgust."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

In Columbia Double Disc Records

is due to the PATENTED and EXCLUSIVE PROCESS of Manufacture

Columbia Records are BUILT-UP. Instead of economising and using one mixture for the whole record, Columbia records are made in THREE LAYERS, using the cheaper material in the centre only where it doesn't count in the reproduction. The best and most expensive material the world can provide is used on the outer surfaces on which the sound wave or music is engraved. THAT'S WHY COLUMBIA RECORDS SOUND BETTER and WEAR LONGER —the same difference in value as there is between an ordinary pine and an expensive built-up oak door.

You are not getting the utmost value for your money or the best out of your machine—no matter of what make—unless you use Columbia records.

The Planter's Daughter;

Or, The Queen of Belle River.

Mrs. Sutherland had two grounds of hope. The first was, that her son, restored to home associations and influences, might change his views and purposes before they should become known to his uncle. The second ground of hope was, that in the event of Mr. Sutherland's intentions becoming known, the powerful motives that would be brought to bear upon him—the threatened loss of his uncle's favor, and of his promised bride's hand—might irresistibly impel him to renounce his project.

But her present wish was to arrest the disclosure of her son's resolution until she could gain time to use her influence upon him to induce him to abandon them.

Her fit of deep thought was interrupted by the entrance of Mrs. Vivian from that front parlor.

"My dear Valeria, who have you left in the other room?"

"My dearest Valeria," said Mrs. Sutherland, drawing her to the opposite extremity of the room, "do me a favor; return to the room, and, not only while you remain here, but after you go back to Cashmere, prevent as long as possible any private conversation between those two young people; interrupt them; stay with them; circumvent them."

"Helen, you astonish me! Me play Madam Detrop! You positively shock me!" exclaimed Mrs. Vivian, and her eyes asked, "What can you mean?"

Mrs. Sutherland answered both words and looks at the same time, by saying, gravely:

"Valeria, I ask a very strange favor, taking upon yourself a most ungracious duty; but, dear Valeria, in this at least the end will justify the means. I do not wish to separate my son and niece, but to prevent their separation."

"I do not comprehend."

"I wish to prevent a quarrel. Young people will not quarrel before others, any more than they will make love before them. There is a point of controversy between Mark and India, and I do not wish them to have an opportunity of discussing it until both their heads are cool."

"Ah, I think I know the point of contention," said Valeria, with a bright look of sudden intelligence.

And the thoughtless little lady imparted to her the contents of Mark's letter to India, and the indignation she had expressed at its contents.

Mrs. Sutherland heard the story with a thoughtful brow, and at its close said:

"And do you not think the discussion of this subject between them would end fatally for our hopes?"

"I do not know. I cannot estimate the strength of Mr. Sutherland's convictions and purposes."

"But you think that India will never yield to them?"

"Never!"

"And so think I. Yet Mark, dear, deluded child, would stake his soul on what he calls her heroism. Well, Valeria, now will you promise me to prevent an interview as long as you can, to give me an opportunity of trying to bring that poor boy to reason?"

"It is a thankless task, but I will undertake it. But you must give me an assistant, to relieve me sometimes. Confide in Uncle Billy, and let him be on duty while I am off."

"I intend to have a talk with my brother, but in the meantime I rely upon you. Promise you will be vigilant."

"As vigilant as I can; but you know my first duty is to Rosalie, dear child! I reproach myself for having left her last night, but the housekeeper promised that she would watch over her."

"Do you not think that you watch over her too much? That she is made too much of a hothouse plant?"

"Rosalie? What, when even a slight change in the weather, or a draught of air or a piece of fruit not ripe, is sufficient to make her ill for a week, and to bring her to the brink of the grave?"

The little lady's voice broke down, and her sparkling eyes melted into tears; then she said, in a faltering tone:

"Do you think she will die? or do you think there is a blessed possibility of her health being restored?"

"That which she never possessed and never lost, cannot be restored. But I think a different manner of treatment would strengthen the child."

"I am sure I do the very best I can for the dear girl; I take her out twice a day in the carriage; I never suffer her to go alone; she never has a bath until I dip the thermometer into it, and yet, with all my care, she droops and droops——"

"Like an over-nursed exotic. But, hasten in there, dear Valeria, and prevent an eclaircissement, while I speak to my brother."

"Why, is he here?"

"Certainly; he came while we were at breakfast and went upstairs to change his dress."

The flighty little lady went singing into the room, just in time to overhear, with her quick ears, Mr. Sutherland say to his betrothed:

"Dear India—(Oh, heavens, here comes that widow again!)—but I must have an uninterrupted talk with you: when and where shall it be?"

"In the library, at twelve. Hush! She's here——"

"So," thought Mrs. Vivian, "I just got here in time enough to hear for myself that my efforts to be useful and impertinent will be totally fruitless."

In the meantime Uncle Billy had changed his dress, and had come down in a jacket and trousers of linon, white as "driven snow," and took his seat at the breakfast table. While she waited upon him, Mrs. Sutherland cautiously communicated the news that so burdened her mind. Gradually, as she proceeded, the truth burst with the suddenness of a thunderbolt upon Uncle Billy, who dropped his roll and cup of coffee, turned pale, fell back in his chair, and gasped—"Good gracious!"

"Don't make a noise, brother. James is coming with your eggs." And then she directed the servant who came in to set down his salver and leave the room. When he had gone, she turned again to her brother, and said:

"Yes, this is true, and nothing remains now but to try to overrule his purpose."

"I—I am overwhelmed with astonishment; though, to be sure, they are fools who at fifty wonder at anything."

Mrs. Sutherland then expressed a wish that her brother would aid her designs, both by delaying the opportunity of an explanation between the young people, and also by using all his logical powers upon her son to convert him from his purpose.

Uncle Billy dug both his hands in his pockets and dropped his rosy chin upon his chest with an attitude and expression of deep cogitation. At last he said, with an air of great deliberation:

"Item! in the first place, we must essay every possible means of persuasion and coercion, to move him from his purpose. The end justifies the means."

"Yes, my dear brother, I agree with you perfectly."

"Yes," said Billy Bothsides, shaking his head, and glancing keenly at his sister, "at the same time, we are not to use any unfair influence over the young man."

"Oh, certainly not," said Mrs. Sutherland.

"I would go to any justifiable or even unjustifiable lengths, to cure the boy of his folly. You understand me? You follow out my line of reasoning?"

"Women seldom do! But never mind! I'll bring him round—I, though I confess I do not believe it will be in the power of mortal man to do it," rising and sauntering into the front parlor.

He found Mrs. Vivian monopolizing the attention of Mr. Sutherland, by making him translate for her a sonnet of Petrarch. As soon as Uncle Billy appeared, Mrs. Vivian lost all interest in Italian, and left the room, passing Mrs. Sutherland, to whom she said:

"A pretty commencement I have made of it! First, heard myself anathematized; next, made myself and three other people wretched—Sutherland, who was dying to speak to India; Lauderdale, who was longing to talk to me; India, who wishes to listen to Sutherland; and myself, who was quite willing to hear what Lauderdale had to say."

"Mr. Lauderdale seemed quite pleased with you."

"Well, I should not be surprised. Perhaps he means to make love to me this morning. If he does, perhaps I mean to make love to him, pour se divertir;" and waving her fan playfully, she glided off.

Ennuyee with the dolce far niente of the morning, Miss Sutherland ordered her carriage to return home. Uncle Billy begged a seat inside, and (at the invitation of the latter) Mr. Lauderdale mounted horses to attend the party.

They were but few minutes in reaching the other bank of the river, and landing at Cashmere.

Arrived at Cashmere, the party passed up the winding road leading through the groves and shrubberies of the lawn, to the foot of the marble steps leading to the rose terrace, and there alighting, passed through the veranda into the house.

Mr. Sutherland, senior, happened to be in the house, and Mark immediately introduced his friend Lauderdale. The old gentleman welcomed the stranger with the stately suavity habitual to men of his day and station; but he received his nephew with an earnestness of affection scarcely restrained by the presence of a third party—pressing his hand with much warmth, and detaining it lingeringly in his clasp.

Mark Sutherland could hardly repress a groan, to think how soon all this must be changed. After the first compliments were over, and when the planter arose and politely excused himself, expressing a hope that Mr. Lauderdale would consider his house, servants, and stables, entirely at his commands, Mark Sutherland laid his hand solemnly upon his arm, and said:

"My dear uncle, I must have a conversation with you this morning."

"My dear Mark," said the old man, smiling, "I know what you are about to ask, and I answer beforehand, just as soon as India pleases. Consult my daughter! You know her will is law in this affair."

"My dear sir, it is upon another subject that I really must consult you, at your very earliest convenience," said Mr. Sutherland, with such earnestness of manner as to enforce serious attention.

"Well, sir, to-day you must really excuse me. Young men know little and care less for the anxieties that make their elders slaves." And smiling and bowing, the old gentleman withdrew.

And Mark Sutherland, seeing no opportunity of breaking his mind to either father or daughter for the present, invited Lauderdale for a ride over the plantation.

Mr. Sutherland rang, and ordered horses, and he and his friend mounted and commenced the ride.

First winding round the foot of the rose terrace, they entered the grove which surrounded three sides of the back of the house. Half a mile's ride led them to an elevated clearing on which was situated the negro village, called, in plantation parlance, "The Quarters."

"Pharel what do you think of that?" asked Mark Sutherland, with a slight dash of triumph in his tone.

Lauderdale's eyes were roving leisurely and attentively over the woodland village. It was certainly a most lovely scene. A few large trees were left standing at intervals in the clearings and under these, and scattered at irregular distances through the area, were the neat white cottages with their red-painted doors. Each cottage had its small vegetable garden, and some few of the better-kept houses had their fruit trees, and even flower gardens. The village was deserted now, except by the children and the old people. All the able-bodied men and women were out in the fields.

"Well, my friend, how do you like that?" repeated Mr. Sutherland.

"I will give you my opinion later in the day," replied Lauderdale; then he added, "I have been told that you have the best stud and best stables in Mississippi; will you favor with the sight of those also?"

And taking another path, they rode in a circuit around to the site of the stables, to the right of the mansion-house, concealed from the latter by an intervening arm of the grove. The stables were built in the most approved modern style, with much architectural beauty, and possessed every requisite for the health and comfort of the noble animals for whose accommodation they were designed. Here again Lauderdale expressed no opinion, but asked to see the pigpens. Mark conducted his guest to the desired premises; and also, without waiting to be solicited, introduced him to the cow-sens, the hen-house, etc. All these buildings had been constructed under the direction of a celebrated English rural architect.

Half an hour after, when they met in the drawin-room, Lauderdale advanced to his host, and said:

"Sutherland, I must thank you again for the sight of your plantation arrangements! and I must say that all your stock—horses, cows, and pigs and slaves—are probably the best accommodated of any in the State! but that no amount of physical comfort can or ought to compensate an immortal being for the loss of liberty!"

The entrance of other members of the family and the speedy announcement of dinner ended this conversation for the present.

Haggard, care-worn, as he was, the ever-springing fountain of gladness in Mark Sutherland's heart dispersed all his gloom; and, during dinner he was as usual the spring of wit and humor to the party.

ALL LEEDS IS DOING WAR WORK

WOMEN AND GIRLS MAKING MUNITIONS FOR ARMY.

Even the Very Old Occupants of the Poor-Houses Are Working.

She was very old, with as kindly a face as I have ever seen. She bobbled up to the gateway of the munitions works and enquired if there was any chance of a job, writes James Sherliker from Leeds, England.

"Sorry, mother," said the doorkeeper. "We turn a hundred women and girls away every morning. We'll till the new wing is finished. That'll be your time."

"A German killed my son," she explained in a shaky voice. "I want to make a bullet to kill a German. . . . 'Appen I'm wrong . . . 'appen it's wicked to 'ev such a wish . . . but a German killed my son."

Hope lit up her eye as she hobbled away with the renewed intimation that an opportunity for work would come with the addition of the new wing.

By the courtesy of the management I was permitted to see the women and girls of Leeds making the war material for the men at the front. They work day and night in turns, and they work on Sundays as well. There is a keen competition in the matter of output. The winners hold a challenge shield, which is decorated with the flags of the allies and hung in a prominent position over the machines at which sit the successful girls.

Soldiers' Wives Work.

If a girl is taken ill or feels faint she is at once helped to a cosy rest-room, where a charming matron and a trained nurse wait upon her. Up and down the big yard tramp armed sentries in khaki, and a Boy Scout conducts the visitor to the official whom he wishes to see.

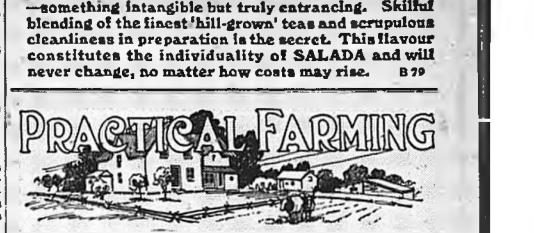
All sorts and conditions of women come here. It is difficult to-day in Leeds and the surrounding districts to get a servant because domestic servants are giving up their work to go and make bullets. Girls of good middle-class families are here. Soldiers' wives are here and soldiers' mothers; and it is fine to see the smiles of satisfaction when they increase the output. Ladies in all parts of the country write asking to be allowed to help in the work. A clergyman's wife has offered to come along and bring her daughters, and applications come from places as far distant as the Channel Islands.

I am glad to learn that a film has been made showing the women and girls at work in this munitions factory. I trust that it will be thrown on every kinema screen in the country. It will help recruiting, I am sure. These women are not working for money alone; they are working to help save the lads who are saving them.

"What about the men?" I asked.

Paupers Helping.

"Well," said my local friend, with a laugh, "if you can find a man under eighty out of work round about here you will have done more than I can do. The war was not very old when the workhouses were appealed to, and now hundreds of men who were paupers are helping to serve the guns. Hundreds of men who left their work years ago have returned to it. Tinkers and fitters who believed that their working days were gone seem to have found a new lease of life and energy. The habitual loafer, the street-corner man—they are all missing from their customary haunts. They are too old to join the colors but they are young enough to make things that matter most to-day."



His face reddened as he spoke of the charges of slackness made against the working man.

"There may be a few men who slack," he said fiercely, "but I'll swear we've got none in Yorkshire. We've got men here working regularly 110 hours a week. That isn't slacking. Take, for example, the men who work in the Canary Cage."

Rush young birds towards maturity if you wish large profits.

Select breeders early and dispose of all other male birds.

Unless you give your flock regular care, they do not pay to keep.

Very few poultrymen know so much that they can learn nothing from the experience of others.

Hens are Profitable Assets.

Possibly no farm live stock pays as big a profit for food as do hens. Seems strange, but true, that one egg will pay for the keep of a dozen hens one day.

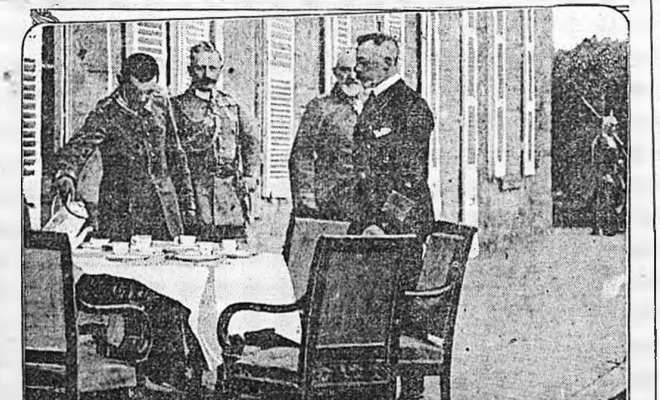
A hen if given a chance to forage will find a large part of her feed and during certain seasons of the year will be able to lay a goodly number of eggs without any further feed. This fact has caused the hen in a great many instances to be neglected and shift largely for herself. Of course when thus disregarded she cannot be expected to be as profitable as when given good care and attention.

The refuse from the kitchen can be profitably turned into eggs rather than given to some worthless cats and dogs. The table scraps are excellent diet for fowls. Care must be exercised in feeding refuse from the kitchen or the outcome may be fatal. If foods where large quantities of salt were used in their preparation are given to the fowls they may gorge themselves on this salty food and great loss of fowls may be encountered. One party who had salted a quantity of sweet corn found late in the spring that this corn was no longer wanted for cooking purposes and thoughtlessly threw it to the chickens. An excessive amount of it was eaten and in a few hours many of the fowl had died. In much the same way a farmer lost a fine bunch of young chickens by feeding them salted mash potatoes.

I smiled.

"Never heard of 'em? Well, the Canary Cage in the room where we make lyddite. If you remain inside it for long your skin becomes as yellow as a canary's wings. But we don't grumble, never fear!"

Did a Marathon.



"So papa jumped from his chair when you asked him for my hand. And what did he say?"

"I'm not sure he said anything."

"Not sure? Didn't you hear anything?"

Few tips come to the waiter who sits down while waiting.

A GERMAN "TEA PARTY" ON THE WESTERN FRONT

Meals Without Meat.

The food supply is a serious problem in the European nations involved in the present war. Frances Keyzer contributed to the London Chronicle an interesting communication under the heading, "Eat Less Meat." Her suggestion may prove of value in countries happily free from war, but none the less disturbed by high prices. The article is as follows:

Less meat! How is it possible? is the question that becomes an assertion made by the average man and woman. The fact is neither knows anything about the matter. In the middle and lower classes meat has become an essential factor in their lives, irrespective of the necessity or the advisability from a health point of view. They do not know the good it may do in some cases, nor the harm it causes in others, but they eat it in ignorance of any substitute, merely because they consider it sustaining and because they think nothing can replace it. "It goes farther," says one. "It keeps me going longer than anything else," says another. And this is the general belief and the general experience in this country, where so little is known among the people of the relative values of food, of the nutrition derived from the cereals, vegetables, fruits, that grow on this and other lands, and that are imported so freely; of fish, the birds, the wonderful supply of nature of all that man requires to build up a sound body and mind without worshiping the fatted calf.

Health-Giving Vegetables.—Half the population of the world lives on rice, and works as hard as the British, who think they must have meat to give weight to arms and brain. Did the ancient Greeks and Romans owe their strength to meat? Neither were meat-eaters, as we understand the term to-day. Yet muscle and brain must have been well fed to have achieved the work of these acknowledged athletes and philosophers. Did these men want their meat meals a day? Birds, fish and fruit sustained them, and sustained them well, if we can believe the story of their deeds. As for the Chinese, the Japanese, the Indians, their powers of endurance are proverbial, and they live almost exclusively on rice.

To-day, when it is a matter of importance to the nation, it is seen how little the people of Great Britain know of the health-giving properties of vegetables, eaten in England as an obligato accompaniment to the meal, not considered of sufficient importance to take the first place in the menu.

We read in scientific articles, dealing with the important subject of the requirements of the body, of how much fat, sugar, etc., is necessary to make blood and bone. This is said in technical language, but if the relative value of each article of food were clearly stated, it would be of greater use to the million. They would learn that there are vegetables chiefly composed of water, such as marrows, that have no nutritive qualities, and that there are others, like spinach and globe artichokes, full of iron. These are questions that a scientist might deal with to the advantage of the woman in her home. But those who come by their knowledge from experience, and men from study, will agree that there is nothing more sustaining than rice, beans in every variety, lentils, eggs, that replace the ordinary butcher's meat, if eaten in sufficient quantities, with a green vegetable or salad, cooked fruits, milk puddings, cheese, to satisfy a large appetite.

The raw material is the same in England as it is in France, but how is it prepared? All the average man or woman knows of macaroni is what is called macaroni cheese, with a crust as hard as a brick. Vegetables, boiled in water, flat and flavorless; rice, an unsavory mash or only considered food for children. The Englishmen, as a French chef once explained, clings to his meat because it is the only article of food English cooks know how to prepare.

Dinner Without Flesh.—The French have made a study of dining without meat, for the majority abstain from it, on religious grounds, once, and sometimes twice, a week, but nobody complains of the substitute in France. The menus are made with as much care for a "maigre" dinner as for one where butcher's meat may figure. There will be either a vegetable soup or macaroni to start the meal, a dish of vegetables, an omelet, a salad, a sweet; and the variety is endless. Color, as we know, is an important factor in the making of menus, for we have to please the eye without any apparent striving for effect, just carefully studying the green, red, and white in vegetables and sauces that constitute the scheme of the ordinary dinner, varying bringing forward these colors to make an appetizing, anticipatory sensation. To make my meaning clear, a cauliflower covered with a bechamel sauce should not follow a dish of macaroni a l'Italienne, for both dishes are white. Tomatoes, ripe and red, green beans, spinach, salads, take their places at the meal, like the composing of a Bakst stage picture, with a touch of black in the truffles to help the modern note.

The Potato Omelet.—Who has not eaten the savory potato omelet at a country inn in France and wondered why it was not known in England? Could anything be simpler than the preparation of this homely, classical dish, extolled by Brillat-Savarin, magistrate, artist and culinary expert, in his delightful "Physiologie du Gout"? Small slices of potato, lightly browned in sufficient butter to make the omelet when the beaten eggs are poured upon them, surrounding them like a golden stream, mingling their softly clinging natures with the more resistent potato, embodied and folded in the warmth of the leveling frying-pan. And this is only one of the many ways of preparing eggs in a condensed form that appeals to the traveler, and would be welcome at home if the cook would use her brain for her own and her employer's good.

I am told that servants, as a class, do not understand economy, and are not interested in a scheme that touches their mistresses' pockets. Meat is their god. They even fail to imagine that there might come a time when there would be no meat obtainable.

Useful Hints.

Don't forget to close the refrigerator door each time you use the box the ice will last much longer.

Melted butter poured on the top of canned tomatoes before they are sealed will keep them sweet.

Ham soaked in milk over night will be exceedingly sweet and tender for breakfast next morning.

The bone should be left in a roast; it will help to keep the juice and will add flavor and sweetness.

If the aluminum cooking utensils turn black, try boiling tomato pairings in them and they will brighten.

It is best not to serve the same dish twice a week unless it be a vegetable, as every one likes a variety.

"Rainbow jelly" may be made as you do marble cake, by pouring several different kinds of jelly into the same mold. Of course, each should harden before the next is put in.

Children's shoes should be half-soled after being worn three weeks, they will be in better shape and wear much longer than if first worn into holes and then half-soled.

An ordinary funnel will make an excellent holder for the ball of string. Hang it up by its ring and put the ball into the upper part, drawing the string through the funnel.

A charming serving tray is made of the printed blue and white towelling from Japan, covered with glass and framed in soft grey. Richer trays are made with precious Chinese embroideries used in the same way.

When you wash lace curtains, don't rub them. Put into cold water with borax; bring to a boil and boil fifteen or twenty minutes. Rinse through and stiffen in a final water, which has five cents worth of gum arabic in it.

Wind a piece of paper around a pencil and fill the tube so formed with Persian powder. Stand it in a dish of sand and burn it an hour before bedtime. It drives the mosquitoes away and so insures an untroubled night's sleep.

Precipitated chalk is excellent for cleaning tarnished silver. Place a little in a saucer and add just enough liquid ammonia to moisten it. Rub this lightly over the silver, and the stains will quickly disappear. Then wash in hot suds, dry carefully and polish with a clean chamois leather.

MANY USES FOR GUNS.

They Have Even Been the Means of Saving Lives.

Guns would not go even if warfare were abolished. For example, the signal gun of a ship is used to announce her arrival on a coast. It would be difficult to find an equally effective substitute. The o'clock gun, too, which is fired by electricity from Greenwich Observatory, is the most effective means possible of announcing the exact time to surrounding towns, while nothing more impressive could be found than the minute guns fired for public mourning and the salute given on occasions of public rejoicings.

Guns save lives as well as take them. In desert countries, where it is difficult to collect water out of a mere dampness of sand, gun barrels are often sunk into the ground. By this means moisture is collected in the bore and many lives have been preserved by a timely draw at the muzzle.

A slaver, captured with a crew of slaves in the tropics, was once put in charge of a prize crew. During the voyage water ran out and slaves, slavers and prize crew were all dying of thirst. Then a sergeant hit on a brilliant idea. Taking all the available gun barrels, he plugged up the breech ends of a few of them, filled their bores with sea water and set them end up among the coals of the galley fire. Then as the steam rose he ran it through the other gun barrels till it cooled. The cooling stream collected in the shape of excellent fresh water and by this means scores of lives were saved.

THE HAMS OF WESTPHALIA.

Elaborate Process of Curing By Expert Workmen.

The famous Westphalian hams, which are eaten without cooking, are cured by an elaborate process that has been worked out patiently and skillfully by generations of expert workmen. A writer in the New York Sun thus describes the process:

After being rubbed thoroughly with a solution in which there are one hundred pounds of salt to one pound of saltpetre, the hams are placed on cement floors, or in vats, and thickly strewn with salt. They lie under salt for two weeks, and then pass to a vat that contains a twenty-two per cent. solution of brine. They remain in that solution for eighteen days. Every day they are shifted in the vat; the hams on the bottom are brought to the top, and vice versa.

At the end of the eighteen days the hams are packed, one upon another, in a cool, dry cellar, where they remain for four weeks, in order to ripen—that is, to take on color and become tender. Then the salt is washed off with a stiff brush dipped in lukewarm water, and the hams are put to soak for twelve hours in fresh water. After that they are ready for the smokehouse.

The smokehouses are two or three stories high, with holes bored in the flooring. The fires are kindled on the ground floor, and the meat is hung on the second and third floors. The fires are made entirely of beech wood, but the workmen constantly throw juniper berries and juniper twigs on the embers. The fire burns brightly; it is checked with beech wood sawdust whenever it burns too briskly.

The smoking continued for about eight days. Under the ancient curing methods, however, the hams were often kept in the smoke rooms for six weeks, and it is by this latter method that the best hams are still made by the country folk of Westphalia.

Happiness.

Happiness is the shortest distance between two disappointments. It is the background of Hope, the reaction from Despair, and the illusion of Forgetfulness. Happiness is a brief moment after something attained. It is something we remember to have had after it has gone. Happiness is what we often envy in others who make us think they have it. It is a transient in the house of your mind who is gone before you have shown him to his room. You are always waiting for his coming. When he comes you never know how to treat him.

Occasionally we meet a man who has sense enough to do the very best he can.

MOST ACCIDENTS ON MONDAY.

Enormous Number of Workers Accidentaly Killed Yearly.

The enactment of laws in various States on workmen's compensation for injuries has aroused increased interest in the statistics and physical and psychic conditions of industrial accidents. The lowest estimate places the fatal accidents to adult workers in the United States at 35,000 a year, with an additional 1,250,000 non-fatal accidents.

The Massachusetts Industrial Accident Board, on the other hand, placed the number of workers killed by accident yearly at 75,000, which apparently includes not only adults, but also workers of all ages, while the number of injured of the same classes was placed by this Massachusetts authority at 3,000,000 or over.

A greater proportion of accidents occur on Monday than on any other day of the week. Accidents are said to be due often to fatigue. As, after the day of rest on Sunday, workmen should be less fatigued than on other days, some other factor must be sought to explain this feature of the statistics. It has been suggested that the "blue Monday" accidents are really due to the fact that workmen take more liquor on Sunday, and thus become unnerved and more liable to accidents during the following twenty-four hours.

Large Number of British Government Employees at Front.

Postmaster-General Herbert Samuel astonished the British House of Commons the other evening by revealing that 36,000 post office employees have enlisted in the army and navy since the start of the war. More, he said, are anxious to go and so soon as their places can be filled by women, wounded or invalided soldiers or sailors, they will be allowed to go to the front. Still others are receiving leave of absence to help in the harvest fields. Mr. Samuel said the only departments from which men cannot be spared in proportionate numbers are the telegraph and linemen sections, where only trained substitutes can be utilized.

Speaking further of the enlistments he said that during the war no competitive examinations will be held, so that the men who return from the front will be restored with their old numbers. In the meantime they will receive their regular pay, but must pay the wages of substitutes.

Another innovation announced was that any person desiring to send books or magazines to the soldiers and sailors without reference to a particular person may hand them in at any post office, where they will be forwarded free of charge.

DIPLOMAT AND DANDY.

And Was Much Too Indolent to be of Any Service.

That some of the African tribes possess an idea of the diplomacy governments is illustrated by the account given in "The Land and Peoples of the Kasai," by Mr. M. W. Hilton-Simpson, of Pongo-Pongo, who is a sort of minister of foreign affairs, and acts as a buffer between the chief and the state.

The ruler of the great Bushongo nation is Kwete Peshanga Kenn, the nyimi, or king. To facilitate the government of his people, he, or rather one of his ancestors, has appointed viceroys of the outlying subtribes. Isambula N'Genga is the viceroy and real ruler of the Bangongo subtribe. In order to save himself trouble, the viceroy has appointed Pongo-Pongo to act as his representative in dealing with the Belgian government. When an officer went round the country to meet and officially recognize the local chiefs, he met Pongo-Pongo, Isambula keeping in the back-ground.

Pongo-Pongo represented himself as the chief, and received the official medallion. Should the Banongo incur the displeasure of the government, Pongo-Pongo would have to bear the brunt of it; should the representative of the state give him any presents, he hands them over to the viceroy. Pongo-Pongo, therefore, has a somewhat thankless task, for he would have absolutely no power to prevent Isambula N'Genga doing anything for which he himself would be punished.

Of all the dandies of Mbumba, Isambula N'Genga was the most exquisite. He was always faultlessly tukulased; his hair evidently gave his wives infinite trouble every morning; he was scrupulously shaved, and his dress, a long loin cloth of raffia cloth, arranged carefully in many folds, was invariably clean and neat. He appeared almost too bored to live, and was much too indolent to be of any service.

Oldest Vessel Over a Hundred.

Some discussion has recently taken place as to which is the oldest vessel afloat. The Ceres, built in 1811, is said to be the oldest sailing in and about the Bristol Channel. But the Jenny, which was built 128 years ago, with timbers of the old wooden wall type, i.e., British oak, is regarded as the oldest steamer trading under the Board of Trade regulations. Her certificate of registry shows that she was built at Nevin, Carnarvonshire, in 1787. This ancient craft has weathered many a storm. More than once she has been driven shore, but she is so stoutly built that she never sustained serious damage.

It takes a man who never did anything to tell you how it ought to be done.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON. AUGUST 15.

Jeroboam Leads Israel Into Sin—I Kings 12. 25-33. Golden Text—Exod. 20. 4, 5a.

I. Jeroboam's Jealousy of Rehoboam (Verses 25-27.)

Verse 25. Built Shechem—In the early days Shechem was a strongly fortified city. It was overthrown by Abimelech (Judg. 9. 45). Jeroboam did not build it. He restored it. He strengthened it by walls and made it his royal residence.

Built Penuel—On the east side of the Jordan. Jeroboam had subjects on both sides of the river. It was highly important that both places be strongly fortified. Penuel was undoubtedly near the fords of the Jordan, so that an outpost stationed there could defend the land from invasion. Penuel was anciently called Peniel (Gen. 32. 22, 30.)

26. Said in his heart—The Feast of the Tabernacles was approaching and many of his people would go to Jerusalem. The City of God, or Holy City, still had strong attractions for the faithful. It was usual for the people not only to attend the feast, but to remain in Jerusalem many days.

Kingdom return to the house of David—Jeroboam's "fear was well grounded." If Jerusalem was to continue as the centre of religious unity, Jeroboam could not expect to hold his people. His own life would be insecure (see 2 Sam. 4. 7, where Ishbosheth was killed by his own subjects).

II. Jeroboam's Sin (Verses 28-31)

28. Two calves of gold—In Egypt, the Israelites became familiar with the worship of the sacred ox. It was natural that not only in the wilderness (Exod. 32. 4, 8) but here also the calf was used in imitation of Egyptian idolatry. But Jeroboam, just as much as Aaron, knew the wrongfulness of idol worship.

It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem—Not because the journey would have been fatiguing. The Israelites were used to such foot travels. Jeroboam meant, as the margin says, that his people had "gone up long enough." They had chosen a new king and kingdom; it was incumbent upon them to choose a new religion. Why go up to Jerusalem to worship when they could do so at home?

29. Bethel . . . Dan — Bethel was at the extreme south of the new kingdom and Dan, formerly Laish, was at the extreme north of Palestine. These places had been associated with religious rites in former times (Judg. 18. 30; 20. 18, 26; 1 Sam. 10. 3).

30. This thing became a sin—In violation of the second commandment.

31. Houses of high places—Like the Acropolis in Athens, so in Palestine the molten or carved gods were set on high.

Priests from among all the people—In the kingdom Jeroboam was founding the priests were not all taken from one tribe (for example, the tribe of Levi). He instituted a new order of priests.

III. Jeroboam's Feast (Verses 32, 33)

32. Ordained a feast—As a counter attraction to the Feast of Tabernacles and for the purpose, of course, of keeping his people at home.

In the eighth month—A month later than the Feast of Tabernacles. This feast was a harvest feast. As the harvest was a month later in northern Palestine, Jeroboam could set his feast (also a harvest celebration) that much later.

33. Went up into the altar—As Solomon dedicated his temple, so Jeroboam personally consecrated his altar in Bethel for worship. He evidently let some of the new priests (verse 31) dedicate the altar in Dan.

Devised of his own heart—Jeroboam's religion and worship were man-made. They had not the sanction of God. They were his personal, unauthorized, and wrongful innovation. They therefore became stigmatized as "Jeroboam's sin."

Pests of the Tropics.

The pestiferous insects that infest the region tributary to the headwaters of the Amazon make life miserable for anyone who may venture into the region. Commander H. A. Edwards of the Bolivia-Brazil Boundary Commission declares that there is no escaping them, and that you are always scratching or slapping your body, except when you are under your mosquito net; and then if you are not asleep. In camp, ants are a continual nuisance; they eat your clothes, gnaw the softer parts of your boots, and ravage the food. Many kinds bite savagely. One kind, which the natives call itashi, lives in palosantos, or "holy posts"—trees that they hollow out themselves. Their bite is like the touch of red-hot iron; and if anyone inadvertently leans against a palosanto, the little red demons swarm out upon him instantly, and so bite him that for an hour afterward his life is almost unbearable. Most dreaded of all are the tucandeiras—black ants with bodies one and one-half inches long that live in the forks of trees.

Mr Timothy Foley, an old pioneer of Brant Township, died at his home opposite the Biscuit Factory here on Saturday last, from the effects of a paralytic stroke taken three weeks previously. The deceased, who was in his 74th year, was born in Ireland, and after coming to Canada and settling near Georgetown, moved about fifty years ago to Brant township, locating on the 12th con., about 1½ miles north of Eden Grove. Here he continued to farm until his retirement to Walkerton about two years ago. He was twice married. His second wife and a daughter, Miss Nellie Foley of town, survive him. The funeral, which took place to the North Brant R C. cemetery on Tuesday morning, was largely attended by old neighbors and friends.

Mr Gilbert Liddel, who about two years ago worked at Fraax's mill here, was the victim of a serious accident in Hanover on Monday of last week. Gilbert, who was employed in Rahn's tinware store, was filling moulds with hot molten solder, when one of the moulds, which had been damp, exploded, and skatted the molten metal into Liddel's face burning out one of his eyes and seriously injuring the other one, besides inflicting some painful facial wounds. A doctor who was summoned, has hopes of saving Liddel's remaining eye, and thus preventing him from becoming entirely blind by the mishap. So great, it seems, was the force of the explosion that particles of solder were scattered about the ceiling and walls of the room.—Herald and Times.

Made the Clyde Themsels

The River Clyde has been brought to its present draft by dredging, and the Scotch are very proud of it. A party of Americans scorned it one day. "Call it a river?" said they. "Why it's a ditch in comparison with our Mississippi, or St. Lawrence, or Hudson" "Aweel, mon," said a Scotch bystander, "you're got Providence to thank for your rivers, but we made this one ourself's."

AN EASY RETURN

At the 6 at meal on board the ocean liner Smvir e was beginning to feel like as ing his bread upon the waters. His friends had told him that when he began to feel that way he should stuff himself. He tackled a cutlet first, but it didn't taste right. He observed to the waiter, "Waiter, this cutlet isn't very good."

The waiter looked at his whitening face, then replied, "Yes, sir; but for the length of time you'll 'ave h'it sir, it'll won't matter, sir."

Fair Sick to Hear Him

An old gelzaled warrior sat in a tramcar one day facing two Territorials who were discussing the war. "Bah!" he exclaimed contemptuously. "You youngsters know nothing about fighting. See this hand, with a finger missing? See this scar on my brow? They were got in the brunt of battle." "Wot about that scar on your nose?" asked one of the Terriers. The veteran appeared disconcerted, blushed furiously, and hung his head. "Now, then Tom," said his wife, who was sitting next to him, "Tell th' company 'ow ye got that 'un." "Shut up, Maria!" growled the old man. "Shan't!" she snapped. "If I makes me fair sick to 'ear ye blawin' o' the scars you got in the battle, and never a word about th' 'ole I 'ped ye wi' ta' coal-scuttle."

Mandy Was Particular

In a boarding house for bachelors, Amanda, typical "Mammy," looked after the guests' comfort in true Southern style so well that one of the men thought he would take her away with him in the summer in the capacity of housekeeper. Toward spring he waylaid her in the hall one day and said:

"Mandy, do you like the country?"

Mandy reckoned she did.

"Would you like to go away with me this summer and keep house for me?"

Mandy was sure she would.

"Suppose I get just a bungalow. Do you think you could take care of it nicely by yourself?"

Mandy gasped and rolled her eyes. "Deed, no massa. Reckon ye all better get somebody else; I don't know nothin' about taking care of any animals!"

WOMEN FROM 45 to 55 TESTIFY

To the Merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound during Change of Life.

Westbrook, Me. — "I was passing through the Change of Life and had pains in my back and side and was so weak I could hardly do my housework. I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has done me a lot of good. I will recommend your medicine to my friends and give you permission to publish my testimonial." — Mrs. LAWRENCE MARTIN, 12 King St., Westbrook, Maine.

Manston, Wis. — "At the Change of Life I suffered with pains in my back and loins until I could not stand. I also had night-sweats so that the sheets would be wet. I tried other medicine but got no relief. A friend spoke to me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I began to improve and I continued its use for six months. The pains left me, the night-sweats and hot flashes grew less, and in one year I was a different woman. I know I have to thank you for my continued good health ever since." — Mrs. M. J. BROWDELL, Manston, Wis.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled in such cases.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

TERRIBLY BURNED

On Saturday morning Mrs John McLean, of Ripley, met with a terrible accident which nearly cost her her life. She was lighting a fire in the stove and took the coal oil can and poured some oil upon the wood." There was fire in the stove at the time and an explosion followed, bursting the coal oil can and enveloping the unfortunate woman in flames. She had presence of mind to rush to the bedroom and roll in the bed clothes. This saved her life, but her body was terribly burned and she now lies at death's door. Two small children were slightly burned.

After dinner Mrs. Vivian forestalled him, by carrying off Miss Sutherland to examine a box of goods, lately arrived from New Orleans for the bride-elect. And Mr. Bolling, leaving Sutherland, Sr., to entertain the guest, ran his arm through that of Mark, and marched him off.

"Well, Mark," he said, "I cannot understand it! how a young man of your strength of character should permit yourself to fall a prey to these adventurers."

"I really do not see how I am their prey, Uncle Billy, or why they should be adventurers."

"Dear Mark, you want experience of the world; and no amount of moral or intellectual excellence will stand you in stead for that."

"Uncle, you wrong them! You have never seen or heard but one side of the question, you are bitterly prejudiced."

"Me prejudiced! when everybody knows that I am the most impartial person in the world!"

"You certainly are prejudiced in this matter. Once, there was never such a scoffer as I was."

"Yes, and that's just what raises the hair of my head with wonder! And now! Ah, Mark, I call to mind the poet's line:

'First endure, then pity, then embrace.'

You begin by enduring, and end by embracing their doctrines. Ah, Mark! Mark! how came it so?"

"Uncle, did you never hear of a man or woman of the world, but with a certain light, satirical way of treating serious objects, going into a religious meeting to scoff, but returning home to pray? Well, very much akin to that was my experience. I went to the convention in New York, just to fulfill a promise made to my friend Lauderdale, and next to have a laugh at them! At the first meeting—well, I laughed, or rather tried to laugh it off.

"At the second meeting, there were some still higher, purer souls, and more eloquent and commanding tongues; lips touched with fire, whose words were flame consuming the wrong principle, that pinnacled up before it. It is enough to say that the speakers in that meeting gave me the heartache, and I wished in my soul I had never entered their hall. Yet a fascination drew me there the third evening. And then, whether 'the master minds' of the cause had said all they had to say for the time, or whether they had not yet arrived upon the scene of action, I really cannot say—(for the room was crowded, and not by friends of the cause, as you will hear, but by conspirators, who had come there to break the meeting up)—and in an incredibly short time there was a hailstorm of stones, and battered walls, and smashed windows, and the meeting was broken up in a row; and my Celtic blood boiled up and while laying about me valiantly in defence of freedom of speech, I lost myself. And when I found myself, I was lying with a broken arm and broken head in the watch-house!"

"Good gracious, Mark! what a dishonor! What would my sister, what would my niece, say to that?"

"They do not know it, and they need not."

"Well, really, one would have thought that would have cured you!"

"My good uncle, it did—of indecision. I lay very ill for two weeks. I was ministered to by some excellent men, and women also—persons whose disinterestedness, benevolence, gentleness, and perfect sincerity, gave me such a deep impression of the Christian character as I had never received from book or pulpit. It was the silent influence, even more than the spoken words of these, which fixed me forever in my good purpose."

"It may be true, Mark, that there are such, or it may only have seemed so to you. What I know is that if there are such disinterested souls in the cause, they are, at best, only the instruments with which the party leaders work for their own individual ends."

"No, it is not so; wisdom and goodness could not become the tools of selfishness and worldliness."

"Now, Mark, don't stand there and try to dazzle your old uncle's intellect. You must either be a blockhead, or take me for one, when you tell me that the teachers of that party are not a set of self-seeking agitators, whose motives range from the mere getting of daily bread, up to the getting of political power."

"You speak of that of which you know nothing."

"Oh! don't I know nothing?" interrupted Mr. Bolling. "Where is that Mr. Grab, who came down here as a traveling preacher, to preach abolition to the poor whites and the blacks? Goodness knows what excitement would have fallen on him from our incensed planters, if he had not been offered an asylum in the house of your cousin, Mrs. Tilden, who, being a compassionate young woman, and finding herself the protectress of a persecuted young preacher, began to count him. When all her brothers and brothers-in-law came in force to turn him out and lynch him, they met the pair coming home from the minister's—married! The pretty widow, the plantation, and the negroes had converted him. And now, he says, 'Oh, the erroneous sentiments of his youth were the effects of ignorance and enthusiasm!'"

"Uncle, it is a point that I must meet. It has given me much, deep pain. But why should it make you scornful and incredulous of the disinterestedness of these reformers, or why should it give me sorrow? Why do we reject Christianity because among the Saviour's chosen twelve there was one Judas, whose covetousness made him sell his master? Or, even now, do we all refuse to hear the Gospel preached, because there have been some most unworthy ministers in the pulpits? And shall we stop our ears, and close our eyes, and fold our hands before the cause of reform, for the reason that there are some Grabs in the party? Nay, God forbid!"

...ary Sutherland paused as in painful thought some time, and then, with more than usual emotion, he exclaimed:

"I would to God there were no Achans in the camp! For this work requires so much wisdom and goodness to carry it on aright."

Addressing his uncle and taking his hand, he said:

"Uncle, I am about to sacrifice all I have in the world, to principles. Well, sir, believe me, for it is God's holy truth, there are hundreds who have sacrificed as much."

"Indeed, Mark, you are very wrong and foolish. Nevertheless, I am constrained to say that you are perfectly sincere and right in persevering in your duty! And now, what do you mean to do further?"

"I shall go to the West."

"Yes—yes," said Uncle Billy, meditatively: "do so. Go to the West. It will be the easiest thing on earth for you to rise in the world there, and success in the end is almost certain—though you will find you'll have to struggle very hard, and be very apt to be disappointed at last. You must not be sanguine! I make it a rule never to give advice, Mark, notwithstanding, my best counsel is at your service. And I really think that with it you could not possibly go wrong."

"My dear Uncle Billy," said Mark, with a quiet smile, "believe me, I know how to appreciate your fine, impartial judgment, and feel convinced that I never should come to harm in following your advice."

With this proof of his high-minded nephew's affection and confidence, Mr. Bolling's blue eyes filled with tears, and he seized Mark's hand.

An hour after the end of this conversation, Mark Sutherland was seated in the library, impatiently awaiting the entrance of his uncle. He was anxious, restless, and unable to occupy himself with anything, and finally went to the door to listen, and reached it just as it was swung open in his face, and old Clement Sutherland entered. The planter walked to the centre of the room, and threw himself into his leather-covered chair at his writing-table, saying, in a curt voice:

"Well, sir, what is your business with me?"

Startled by the unusual sternness of his manner Mark Sutherland turned and looked at him inquiringly. The planter's countenance wore an aspect of severity that at once told his nephew that by some means he had been led to suspect the nature of the communication.

"Will you oblige me, sir, by opening your business at once?" said Clement Sutherland, looking at his watch.

The young man bowed, drew a chair to the opposite side of the table, took a seat, excused himself, and deprecated his uncle's displeasure for the painful subject he was about to introduce.

Here Clement Sutherland waved his hand impatiently, begging that he would cut his introduction as short as possible.

Then the young man commenced to relate the history of his life and experiences for the last preceding three months; he told how he had been induced to attend the colonization meetings, first merely in the spirit of bravado; how, in hearing the subject freely and ably discussed, the conviction had forced an entrance into his soul.

Here Clement Sutherland wheeled his chair round, so that his back was presented to the light, and his face cast into deep shadow, and from this instant to the end of the conversation Mark Sutherland could not watch the expression of his countenance.

But he went on to relate how, long and stoutly, he had struggled against this conviction; how his pride, his selfishness, his interests, his passion, and affections—all had yielded in the conflict between them and his sense of duty.

"Facts, sir! facts! Let us have no sentiment, but actual facts! What do you intend to do?"

Mark Sutherland answered calmly:

"To free every negro on my plantation, and at my own expense to send every one, who is willing to go, to Liberia."

"And after freeing them, I must do all in my power to place them in a situation of happier circumstances."

Silence ensued between the young man and planter for several minutes, during which the latter passed his hand slowly back and forth over his bearded chin. At length Mark Sutherland said in a troubled voice:

"My greatest trial in this affair has been connected with the thought of India."

Again he paused for a reply or comment. But the planter only caressed his bristling chin.

The youth spoke again:

"It has been a subject of deep regret to me, that I can no longer hope to offer India a fortune or a position equal to her just expectations. I feel assured that within a very few years my position will be a higher one than it is now, or than it would be were I to retain my present wealth. I believe that my India will have no cause to blush for her husband, or you for your son-in-law."

Still the old man did not make a single remark, and so deep remained his face in the shadow that the youth could not read his thoughts. He concluded by saying:

"Although I have long enjoyed your approbation in my addresses to your daughter, I thought it proper to take the very earliest opportunity of informing you of my purpose, and the consequent change they must make in my fortune and circumstances. And now, sir, I wait in much anxiety to hear what you have to say."

"What do you wish me to say?" dryly inquired the planter.

"Just what is on your mind, my uncle."

"Humph! this is rather sudden, sir. It is true that a few words dropped by Mr. Bolling, and unexpectedly overheard by myself, in some degree prepared me for the strange communication you have just made. Still, it is sudden, sir! It is sudden! What may I inquire, did you expect me to say? How did you anticipate that I should meet this?"

A strange smile sat upon the face of the planter. At last he said:

"You, doubtless, expected me to withdraw my consent to the marriage of yourself and my daughter. Did you not?"

"Sir!" said Mark, coming forward, "I had my doubts and misgivings about that. It would have been unjust to you to have seriously entertained them."

"You were right, sir! I shall not interfere. I refer you solely to her. If, under the new aspect of affairs, she is willing that this engagement between you and herself shall stand, and that the preparations for marriage proceed, I shall throw no obstacles in your way."

"Pardon me, sir," he said, laying his hand gently and respectfully upon the arm of his uncle, as the latter was rising to leave the library. "Do I understand you to say that you approve——"

"You will please to understand me to say, sir, that I refer you to my daughter, Miss Sutherland, and that I shall indorse her decision, whatever that may be."

Mark walked up and down the floor in great disturbance of mind; at last he seized his hat and hurried from the room, to seek the presence of India.

Gloomy Observation.

"Do you think the world is getting better?"

"I don't know anything about it," replied the melancholy observer. "It seemed to be doing very well for a time, but judging from the European news, I should say it is suffering a terrible relapse."

On the Farm

Prevent Soil Erosion.

One of the gravest problems of the farmers of to-day who are living on hilly lands is how to prevent soil erosion. Much of the washing of farm lands can be prevented by plowing deep, so as to make a subterranean reservoir for the storage of precipitation. The water penetrates readily through the loose soil, and its movement through the underlying soil is very much slower than over the surface. Frequent crops of clover or grass which are plowed under make the surface soil spongy with humus and retard the washing of the soil. All hilly lands liable to wash should have a cover crop during the winter. A warranty deed will not keep the soil of the careless farmer from washing away.

Oat Hay.

If, for any reason, you will be short of hay this season or a wind has smashed the oats down so you can't bind them, why not make them into oat hay?

Cut when in the early milk stage of the grain and cure as you would other hay. Barley and rye can be used in the same way to help out a short hay crop.

A ton of oat hay contains 86 pounds of digestible protein and a ton of red clover 133 pounds—only 50 pounds in favor of the clover, so you see this makes a very good hay for growing stock or dairy cows.

Feeding Geese.

Geese require plenty of green food, which they pluck from the growing plants and plenty of water as a swimming pool during the summer. When they have this, the old geese and ducklings that are past four weeks old, will not need to be fed during the summer. A feed of moistened meat once a day hastens their growth, but where there is plenty of herbage green and fresh, from which they can pluck their food, it will not be necessary to feed them, providing there is plenty of water for them to swim in.

Our Bird Friends.

Nothing has a more potent attraction for birds during hot weather than drinking and bathing places. The birds' water supply should be a pool not more than a few inches deep, the bottom sloping gradually toward the edge. Both bottom and edge should be rough, so as to afford a safe footing. A giant pottery saucer is an excellent device or the pool may be made of concrete or even metal, if the surface is roughended.

The bird bath may be elevated or on the ground if in an open space where skulking enemies can not approach too near. A water supply is appreciated in winter as well as summer.

A Good Side Line.

A profitable side line of farming is to raise a few nice sheep every year for men who are willing to pay a bit extra for the sake of improving their stock. To do this, one should have good stock and good pastures and good barns, as well as a good man to care for them.

In disposing of such stock, be fair about it. A reasonable profit is all right. If you try to overdo the matter you will break down, and be driven out of the business.

Cause of Bad Habits.

Feather eating and feather pulling are caused by confining the fowls and leaving them idle. To prevent their getting the vice or to cure them when they have acquired the habit, give them plenty of green food and meat scraps and give them plenty of exercise by making them work for their food. Keep them busy. Rub the fowls that have been plucked with carbolated vaseline.

Protect the Birds.

The birds cost millions of insects that, if left alone, would destroy millions of dollars' worth of fruits and grain. Of course, some kinds of birds are pests, but you need not have many of those kinds on your farm if you will spend a little time studying birds. Study their habits of feeding and nesting. Prepare homes for only the helpful kinds, the ones that feed chiefly on insects and worms.

THE PERFECT PIE.

(By Peter McArthur.)

Probably no dish that ever appeared on our tables has caused so much burning as the pie—and I do not mean by that to suggest the connection between heartburn and indigestion. The pie with the hunting case crust has eclipsed many a honeymoon. The unsuccessful pie has been the uncharted rock on the sea of matrimony, the slough of respond on the straight and narrow path. But the good pie, the perfect pie has been from time immemorial the peacemaker, the healer of lovers' quarrels. The great outstanding fact of married life is that man wants pie. As Scott did not exactly say:

Lives there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to his wife hath said:
"I wish that you would learn to bake Pies like my mother used to make."

But I have known a man to do even worse than that. I have known a man to say to his wife: "I wish you could make pies like your mother used to make." In that way he rebuked her and made friends with his mother-in-law, a feat of diplomacy never equalled in the chancelleries of Europe.

But the question has been raised: "What kind of pie was it that mother used to make? What was her masterpiece?"

There is no need of any dispute on this subject. Just wait till you find one of those old fashioned pie-making mothers and listen to what she is singing to the grandchildren on her knee.

"Can she make a cherry pie?
Billy Boy, Billy Boy!
Can she make a cherry pie,
Charming Billy?
She can make a cherry pie
While a cat can wink its eye
But she's a young thing and can't leave her marry-O'."

When the biggest cherry trees that are now laden with ruddy fruit were mere seedlings, that song was as popular as Tipperary is to-day, and there are still merry grandmothers who sing it to their marriageable grandsons when they go a-wooing. In the good old days before there were pie factories where pies are made by machines and should be eaten by machines the making of a cherry pie was the ultimate test of a housekeeper. No girl was accounted worthy of a home who could not make a perfect cherry pie.

And this is the season of the cherry pie! Let me whisper something. Every girl should show that she is able to make cherry pies. Every love-lorn boy should see that the girl he loves is able to make them. A word to the wise is sufficient—though in this case a word to the foolish might be more appropriate.

The humor of Scotland (according to an English writer)—An old gentleman arrived in a hot and breathless state at the railway station. "I say, porter," he panted, "why do they put the station so far away from the village?" The porter replied—"Weel, sir, I could...s say; but I think it was to be near the line."

KEEP CHILDREN WELL DURING HOT WEATHER

Every mother knows how fatal the hot summer months are to small children. Cholera infantum, diarrhoea, dysentry and stomach troubles are rife at this time and often a precious little life is lost after only a few hours illness. The mother who keeps Baby's Own Tablets in the house feels safe. The occasional use of the Tablets prevents stomach and bowel troubles or if troubles come suddenly—as it generally does—the Tablets will bring the baby safely through. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE 'PHONE IN WAR.

The role played by the telephone wires in the war, to say nothing of the barbed variety that protects nearly 300 miles of battle front, is prodigious. With aircraft the telephone wire has largely replaced reconnoiting parties and vedettes. There is scarcely a skirmish, battle or artillery attack in which the wire doesn't participate, sometimes in co-operation with aeroplanes, sometimes without.

Every corps of the French army has a certain number of motorcar telephone shops, each equipped with two complete installations with four miles of wire and an adequate number ground stakes and forked pickets that may be stuck in the bayonet socket of a rifle, serving as a temporary pole. Each of these outfits has also its wireless equipment, with antennaes to reach a height of 60 feet, and a dynamo connected with the motor of the car to set up the wireless energy and put it in operation. The enemy's artillery is constantly on the watch for these motoring wireless, and occasionally gets them.

Projectors and aircraft ordered from Ypres by wireless played a great role in the first battle of Ypres. The airmen were able to ascertain just what troops the Germans were bringing up, while the projectors arrived in time to discover the Prussian Guards attempting a surprise attack, and to enable the British to cut them up.

ORIENTAL MENDACITY.

If Orientals have one fault more than another it is a disregard for truth. In the early days of the English occupation of India, the English Judges were astounded at the conflicting stories told by witnesses, and they soon learned to set them all down as unworthy of credence.

In American courts it is also well known that the Chinese are very penurious of the truth, and that no oath will prevent them from giving false witness. In Egypt it is also very easy to get native witnesses to swear to anything, true or untrue.

For instance: Ahmed, a native of Cairo, had a slave who peeped over a wall into Suleiman's harem, and the ladies considered themselves insulted. Suleiman wanted revenge, but he could not bring his wives into court to testify, so it was agreed that Suleiman should accuse Ahmed's camel of walking on Suleiman's land. A crowd of witnesses came forward and for two days testified about the camel and the land, until the English Judge decided in favor of Suleiman.

It was not until a week afterward that the Judge discovered, to his great surprise, that Suleiman had no ground and Ahmed had no camel.

NO IDEA

What Caused the Trouble.

"I always drank coffee with the rest of the family, for it seemed as if there was nothing for breakfast if we did not have it on the table.

"I had been troubled for some time with my heart, which did not feel right. This trouble grew worse steadily.

"Sometimes it would beat fast, and at other times very slowly, so that I would hardly be able to do work for an hour or two after breakfast, and if I walked up a hill, it gave me a severe pain. (The effects of tea are very similar to those of coffee because they each contain the drug, caffeine.)

"I had no idea of what the trouble was until a friend suggested that perhaps it might be coffee drinking. I tried leaving off the coffee and began drinking Postum. The change came quickly. I am glad to say that I am now entirely free from heart trouble and attribute the relief to leaving off coffee and the use of Postum.

"A number of my friends have abandoned coffee and have taken up Postum, which they are using steadily. There are some people that make Postum very weak and tasteless, but if made according to directions, it is a very delicious beverage." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Postum comes in two forms:

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

OLD DISEASE MYSTERY.

British Officer Finds Cause of 4,000 Year Scourge.

Lieut.-Col. Leiper, of the London School of Tropical Medicine, has just returned from Egypt, where he had been investigating bilharziosis, and has communicated an important discovery respecting this disease to the Royal Society of Medicine.

The disease, which has been a scourge to the Nile delta for thousands of years, has been discovered to have been the cause of death in mummies dating back to 2,000 B.C.

In his report Col. Leiper cited a village where 90 per cent. of the children are infected. It has long been known that the disease was transmitted by water, but the life and history of the parasite have remained unestablished.

It has been discovered that the disease is started in a worm which lives in the human body. The eggs of this worm pass from the body into canals and pools, where they enter molluss and there undergo certain evolutions. They emerge from the molluss in a form enabling them to enter the human body through the skin. In this way the disease is commonly contracted while bathing and washing.

Don't sleep on your left side, for it causes too great a pressure on the heart. Don't sleep on your stomach, for that interferes with the respiration of both lungs and makes breathing difficult. Don't sleep on your back, for this method of getting rest is bad for the nervous system. Don't sleep sitting in a chair, for your body falls into an unnatural position, and you cannot get the necessary relaxation. Don't sleep standing up, for you may topple over and crack your skull. POWER FROM VOLCANOES.

Italians Are Using Steam From Craters to Generate Energy.

Italy's newest product is electric energy from volcanic steam. Not far from the little city of Volterra, in Tuscany, is a region of volcanic hot springs that for a century have been a source of boric acid, and that in addition supply heat for drying the crystals and for the power needed in preparing the material for market. Borings of 30 or 40 feet are said to yield an unfailing supply of steam at pressures up to more than three atmospheres, and of temperatures up to more than 700 degrees Fahrenheit. The steam has been wastefully used in small engines of an old, non-condensing type, but in recent experiments the heat of the springs—on account of the impurities contained—is made to generate steam from fresh water, and this is employed in low-pressure turbines for driving electric generators. The large area to be served with electric energy from the earth's own heat, if present expectations are realized, will include the neighboring cities of Volterra, Siena, and Leghorn.

BULLET WOUNDS INFECTED.

"Clean" Punctures Unknown to Man Who Treated 10,000 Cases.

Clean wounds apparently do not exist, said Dr. H. S. Souttar, late surgeon-in-chief of the Belgian field hospital, in a lecture before the Royal Society of Medicine in London. Much has been written about the clean wound left by the modern bullet, but the doctor never met one in his experience in Flanders, and a colleague who had treated 10,000 wounds in the present campaign confirmed this opinion. Every wound is infected, although not all the organisms produce disease.

Doctor Souttar found it was a mistaken idea a wounded man could apply his first idea dressing properly. It required clean hands and non-interference with the actual wound. His instructions were that the skin around the wound should be disinfected with iodine, carbolic, or even soap and water, but the wound should not be touched. External appearances of wounds are often deceptive. Back of a small puncture in the skin may be a cavity as large as a fist, perhaps with a piece of shell or a bullet at the bottom.

Tea in the Trenches.

It is said that tea is the favored beverage of the soldiers in the trenches. It is certain that tea is the most refreshing and sustaining drink under the circumstances, and it has good warmth-giving qualities. It is the first experience of tea for many of the soldiers, and the taste will undoubtedly spread when they return to their homes after the war. In fact, everything points to a greatly increased consumption of tea all over the world, and as the supply is insufficient to cope with it, the high prices now obtaining may continue for some years.

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

Purifying Steel.

Engineering describes the process invented by Lord Chetwynd for purifying steel that a Sheffield foundry has now been using for a year and a half. The steel, which is manufactured in the usual way in the Siemens-Martin furnace, is first poured or "teemed," into a special ladle. Now steel, when poured into a ladle in the ordinary way, draws with it into the ladle a part of the slag? The slag becomes so intermingled with the steel that it cannot separate from it completely and rise to the surface before the molten mass is poured into the ingot moulds. This difficulty Lord Chetwynd's process obviates. Two iron electrodes are fitted to the bottom of the special ladle, and two graphite electrodes are so placed that they can be lowered to rest in the layer of slag that covers the molten steel. As soon as that happens, an electric current is sent through the steel, which raises the temperature of the metal, and makes it rotate. That frees it from the gases and particles of slag that it brought from the furnace. The process lasts about thirty minutes, and the expenditure of current is small.

THE LINEMAN IN THE TROPICS.

The Animals of East Africa Have No Respect for the Wires.

The life of a telegraph or telephone lineman in the tropics is not easy, for a service that uses overhead wires is subject to constant damage both from wild animals and from wild men. The animal culprits are of all sizes, from elephants and giraffes down to white ants and spiders. The giraffes of East Africa, when they find their progress checked by a telegraph line, do not know enough to draw back or "duck" their heads, but push on and carry the wires with them, and sometimes the poles, too. Teak is the only wood that certain kinds of ants respect, so fastenment cases have to be made of that or of metal. Bees make nests in telephone instruments, and spiders attach their webs to the porcelain insulators. When the webs become coated with dew, the insulation is for the time being destroyed. In Argentina spiders breed in millions in the pampas grass. As soon as the egg hatches the young spider spins a single web, which the wind carries across the country. Veils of webs sometimes stretch from pole to pole and cover all the wires. Beetles have been known to bore holes in lead cable and lay their eggs in them. In the region round Victoria Nyanza, the natives tear down the wire to use for personal adornment. Because of the many annoyances that are inseparable from an overhead system in the tropics, the wireless system has superseded it in many places.

Protect Our Homes

We are threatened by cowardly enemies. From these we must protect ourselves.

The Peabodys Overall Factory (Walkerville, Ontario) was bombed on the night of June 20th, because of its activity in making uniforms for Lord Kitchener's Army. The Windsor Armoury's destruction was attempted the same night because soldiers were sleeping there. The same enemy agency attempted to blow the C. P. R. Bridge at Port Arthur, also the Welland Canal. Attempts to kill and destroy in this cowardly manner have been made all over the Dominion.

So—Rally to the Home Guard.

This Patriotic Movement for the protection of our homes and public institutions is sweeping across Canada.

Your King and Canada Need You.

Every man, woman and child of you.

The Paisley Advocate

PAISLEY, AUGUST 19th, 1915

—A scheme to develop two million horse-power of electrical energy by damming the lower Niagara river just above Lewiston, is being promoted by Peter A. Porter, a former Assemblyman of New York State. The plan is to make a dam 90 feet high across the river, the Ontario and New York State governments to jointly undertake the work. It is another big idea that should be worth considering as a public utility, but no private company should be allowed to develop it.

- The public schools of New Zealand, like those of Canada, are entirely secular, but for several years people have wanted the teachers to use the Bible as a text-book for nonsectarian lessons, and the ministers of the gospel to supplement the lessons with doctrinal teaching for such pupils as attend their churches. The question was a leading issue in the New Zealand parliamentary elections, but in respect to it the elections were inconclusive, and so nothing is likely to be done about the matter at present.

—What some farmers and horse dealers of Nova Scotia did in the way of selling horses for military remounts is almost enough to bring discredit to their class in the Dominion. At sittings of the Commission appointed to make investigation many men confessed to selling aged and defective horses. George Porter said he got $165 for a steed 20 years old, also had a leg broken eight years ago, sometimes was bothered in its wind and had a choking in its throat. Sir Chas Davidson, Commissioner, characterized the sale as a shameful fraud, and refused him the usual witness fees. Others guilty of such barefaced fraud were similarly reprimanded.

—Ringed in by the bayonets of the allies, which are pressing mercilessly at the heart of the enemy from east and west, cut off from outside supplies and past the zenith of her fighting strength, Germany with her crippled allies is beginning to turn at bay. With all the advantages on her side at the beginning of the war Germany has been steadily dissipating her strength in frenzied rushes from east to west and from west to east in a desperate attempt to avert the overwhelming disaster which her military experts must now see to be inevitable. In the opening days of the last phase of the campaign the allies stand on more than equal terms with the enemy. Big events, pregnant with hope for civilization, are impending. The formation of a Coalition Government in Britain, the appointment of Mr Lloyd-George as Minister of Munitions, and a general reorganization of the offensive and defensive forces of the British Empire mark the beginning of the end of the great war. For it is only now, it may be said, that Britain has really stripped to the waist for the fight which her statesmen are determined must be a fight to the death against the Prussian peril in Europe.—Globe.

Crops Ruined by Rain

It is said that in two-thirds of the acreage of Essex county the crops are a total loss as a result of the heavy rains of this month. Oats and corn are drowned out, and the farms resemble a morass, even on underdrained land. Mr. O. J. Wilcox, M. P. for North Essex, estimates the total loss to farmers of the county at $500,000. The chief losers will be tenant farmers, he says, and there are many of these in Essex county. Nothing but ruin will result for these, unless government aid is offered.

Drowning at Lucknow

Charlie Lockhart, aged 16, lost his life in Purvis Lake, 4th con. Kinloss, about two miles from Lucknow, on Saturday. The deceased, accompanied by a young English lad, neither of whom could swim had gone to the lake with the intension of having a bath. Lockhart was the first to enter the water, going down in about ten feet. When not arising to the surface after a considerable length of time, his companion became alarmed and rushed to the home of a farmer residing not far distant, but the body was not recovered till about 4.30, being in the water over two hours. Two doctors worked over him for some time, but life was extinct.

Death of Arran Pioneer

Andrew Freeborn, one of the early settlers of Arran Tp., passed away a few days ago at Magnetawan, where he and Mrs. Freebore had been living with their son, Dr. J. S. Freeborn, for four years past. The deceased was a native of Ireland, born in 1829, and came to Arran Tp. when a young man. He became one of the most prominent men of the township, and was for over 30 years reeve of the municipality, also a justice of the peace for 40 years. He was a very active politician, and helped to organize the first Conservative Association in Arran. He was an Orangeman and a member of Christ Church, Invermay. The remains were brought to Tara for interment. He is survived by his aged wife, five sons and three daughters—Dr. J. S., of Magnetawan; Fred, Cleveland; Rev. Robert, Paynesville, Ohio; John, Seattle; and William, Manitoba. The daughters are: Mrs. Emily Thompson, Magnetawan; Mrs. W. Wright, Owen Sound; and Miss Mary, Paynesville.

Mammoth Patriotic Picnic in Paisley

THURSDAY, AUG. 26th

Arrangements are under way to hold a monster patriotic picnic in Riverside Park, Paisley, on Thursday afternoon of next week, under the auspices of the ladies and citizens of the town. The proceedings will be as interesting and entertaining as they can possibly be made. A procession to the grounds will be headed by the band, boy scouts and decorated auto cars. At the park there will be a baseball match, Cargill vs. Paisley, lacrosse match, and a programme of other games, speeches, etc. It is proposed to erect a large tent, which, with the fair building, will give shelter from weather, if needed. This will be the greatest holiday event in Paisley for many moons, and everybody is invited to come out and do their little bit in providing funds for the help of the wounded soldiers. While the people of Paisley and surrounding country have responded readily to the calls for assistance to this cause, other places have done a great deal more, and a GREAT DEAL MORE IS NEEDED RIGHT NOW. A large body of Canadian soldiers are being sent to the Dardenelles, where the conditions will not be as favorable for sick and wounded to recover, so that the call for succor will be more urgent than at any previous stage of the war. Men who are ready to shed their blood and sacrifice their lives deserve the best that can be provided for them by their home government and fellow countrymen. Have you done all that you can? Come along to the picnic on Thursday next and contribute another bit to the big fund that is needed.

Bowling on the Green

The P.P., G. & B. bowling trophy was won from Wiarton first by Port Elgin, then two rinks generalled by Dr. Hough came down from Wiarton on Friday last and scooped the silverware up to Wiarton again.

Home on Wedding Trip

Rev. Jos. W. Stewart and bride were up on their honeymoon trip visiting for a week at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Stewart, of Fortal, and were in receipt of the heartiest congratulations from many friends in this locality.

Kincardine Plant Destroyed

Fire believed to be of incendiary origin completely destroyed the three-storey brick building and plant of the Hunter Bridge and Boiler Company early Saturday morning. The company was about to start manufacturing shells. Patterns of the special machinery being installed were burned. It is thought that German sympathizers were responsible for the fire. The loss is estimated at $20,000.

Baseball Broke His Jaw

Dick Grant, a lusty young farmer of 14th con. Elderslie, has to take his nourishment in liquid form, through a quill, since Friday evening, when he met with a mishap that put his mastications out of business. He was playing baseball, and was at bat, waiting for a favorable time to lambast the sphere into the other side of the township, when the pitcher handed out a swift one that took Dick on the jaw. The bone is broken at or near the joint by the impact, and the batter is out for some time.

Nearly a Crash

Confused by the presence of a buggy between them on the road, the autos driven by Messrs. W. J. Hyde and Wm. Irwin almost ran into each other head-on while passing on Queen St. south on Saturday. It was the instantaneous decision of Hyde to take to the ditch that averted a collision that would have meant a fatality in all probability, as Mr. Hyde had his wife and a couple of others in the car with him. Mr. Irwin's car went to the fence in front of Mr. J. B. Fleming's residence, doing no more serious damage than uprooting a shade tree and bending a panel of the fence.

Cargill Bowling Tourney

The larger towns where bowling tournaments have been held have nothing on Cargill after last week, when the bowlers and citizens of that neat little burg made a splendid success of their first attempt to accommodate and entertain a large number of visiting trundlers. The green was fitted up with seats, refreshment tent and electric lighting, and was thronged with spectators while the weather was fine on the first day. Unfortunately the heavy rain of Thursday completely shut off the playing, and the finish was not run off until Saturday. Allin's rink from Lucknow won the first prize in the trophy competition, and Fowlie's rink of Cargill second. In the Consolation race Zimmerman's rink of Cargill were winners, with Eidt of Walkerton runners-up.

More Recruits

Four more men were enrolled at Paisley recruiting station on Monday, and left on Tuesday morning for London camp, viz:

Fred Courtnell, of Southampton
Robt. Carpenter, of Walkerton
Roy H. Belbeck, of Port Elgin
A. E. Palls.

The Port Elgin recruits of both this and last week have, like the immortal Michael Shea, "left their town in cheers." The lakeside burg is wholeheartedly giving the lie to a "Jack Canuck" story of recent publication. The town council presented each soldier leaving there with a cheque for $15. Belbeck (who is a former Paisley boy) and Palls were given $10 each from their fellow employees in the brush factory, and the Stevens-Hepner Co., proprietors of the factory, will pay the men's insurance premiums, also hold their positions for them in the factory should they return. Several hundred citizens turned out with the band in a send-off demonstration, Orillia, Ont., Nov. 28th, 1914.

In a very short time, I began to feel better, and now I feel fine. Now I have a good appetite, relish everything I eat, and the Headaches are gone entirely. I cannot say too much for 'Fruit-a-tives', and recommend this pleasant fruit medicine to all my friends". DAN McLEAN.

Coal Oil at Flesherton

The residents of the village of Flesherton are quite excited over what they think is a discovery of coal oil in their midst. For some months water in the well of Mr. F. G. Karstedt, a well known merchant of that place, was found to be unsuitable for use by the family, as it had a very oily flavor. The latter part of last week the well was pumped dry three times, then the pumping, if continued, would discharge pure coal oil of a bright amber color, which would give as bright a light in an ordinary lamp as the very best American oil. The natives are now using the oil from the Karstedt well and are enjoying the clinch. On Monday of this week Mr. Karstedt sent a couple of gallons of the oil to the government laboratory in Toronto, to be examined, and the result of the analysis is awaited with great anxiety by the citizens.

Subscription Arrears to The Advocate

THERE is several hundred dollars still due us on arrears for subscription to The Advocate. We have quite regularly sent our accounts out in an endeavor to collect all. Some, however, have neglected to respond to our requests for payment. Subscribers who neglect the little matter of remitting regularly do not, perhaps, understand the position we are placed in because of not receiving from them what is due us. We do not believe there are more than only a few who would deliberately beat us out of our dues, and we do not propose to treat delinquents as rogues unless we actually find they are such. Nevertheless, we are obliged to make a special effort to collect all arrears, and we have handed over to The Publishers' Adjusting Association a list of behind-handers who will hear from them immediately. Prompt attention to the first notice of indebtedness will save additional expense.

We derive no particular pleasure from the pursuit of delinquents, but it seems that it is a necessary part of the business of managing a newspaper office, so we must, that's all.

Kindly avoid all unpleasantness by remitting the amount of your account at once.

WAR MAKES A NEW ENGLAND

The Mother of Nations is Still in Process of Evolution

People who think they believe that England before the war was a tired nation need to be reminded that the mother of nations is still in process of almost primitive evolution. The war has not galvanized a weary people into an outburst of unusual life to be succeeded by national torpor when the war is over. At every great turn in world events England becomes a new nation. The change she is undergoing now is only a phase of the transformation that began within the memory of living men. And the difference between the England of 1914 before the war and the England of the first half of the 19th century during and after the wars with Napoleon is a greater transformation than can be traced in Germany or Russia or France or any of the other nations at war.

What England was during the last great continental war in which she was the leading belligerent against a would-be despot is graphically pictured by Mr. Arthur Mee, in an article in "My Magazine." The picture he draws is one of tremendous gloom, compared to which the worst picture of modern England is a dream of optimism and social evolution. The writer says:

"We talk proudly of how England beat Napoleon long ago, and how she will beat the imitation Napoleon who stalks across the Belgian wilderness. But how many of us know how England really beat Napoleon? A proud story it is as we read it in the history books; as it will read in the Book of Judgment there is nothing more terrible in the story of the human race.

"Those who have read Mr. Thomas Hardy's great poem on 'The Dynasts' will remember the fear of the English mothers that the Corsican Conqueror lived on human flesh. It was not literally true, but it is morally true that Napoleon consumed the lives of countless little children in these islands.

"We are not slow, I hope, to realize the amazing effort of the people of those days, who poured out their money for freedom in a way that surprises us even now. But the time came when the burden was too grievous to be borne, and at last the employers complained that the high wages for men and women made it impossible to pay the heavy taxes.

"Then it was that those who should have known better, those who held in their trust the future life of this land, encouraged the manufacturers to use the children. It seemed, an old writer said, as if there fell upon the manufacturers the terrible words—Take the children. They seemed to fall upon England like the voice of Doom, and the masters listened to them. They took the children. They crammed the factories with machines so close that there was just room for the little bodies to slip in and out of the belts and wheels and spinning shafts. They took them at nine years old, they took them at six, they took them at four; and they kept them in the factories thirteen hours a day. They kept overseers to whip them if, after ten hours of work their little bodies became drowsy or slow; they kept blacksmiths to rivet and chain them if they tried to run away. They made them clean the machinery while they ate their poor meals of porridge made with water; they made them walk as far as thirty miles a day about their work; they killed and maimed them in thousands; in some factories one child in four was crippled or injured, and few of the younger children lived more than three or four years after entering the mills.

"Down the mines, too, these little children went. How many of us have been into the bowels of the earth? Perhaps we should be afraid to go even now, when most mines are healthy and safe. But these little children stood fifteen hours without a stop in the cold, dark mine, opening and shutting trap doors or harnessed to heavy trucks, or standing in black slime from five in the morning till six at night pumping water at the bottom of the shaft."

The writer goes on to say that none of the great popular reformers seemed to care about these terrible conditions enough to change them. There was then no voice of labor that must be respected. In those days it was not possible that a Lloyd George could go and address the miners, asking them in the name of their country to go back to work that the British might win the war through the abundant supply of coal. In fact English labor in those days was more under the iron hand of government and economic usage than modern labor in Germany is under the bossism of the war lords. Apparently Gladstone did not care, neither did John Bright who declared that the Ten Hour Bill was one of the worst measures passed through Parliament, and proposed an amendment that the hours of labor should be from 5.30 in the morning till 8.30 at night.

"Southey, it is true, wrote that the slave trade was mercy compared with the child trade in the factories; but the first interest of Parliament was aroused, not by shame or sympathy or sorrow, but by fear. The children were dying so fast that there was no room in the churchyards, and an Act was passed limiting the work of children to twelve hours a day."

According to Mr. Mee, it was an aristocrat that reformed the conditions of child labor in England. Lord Shaftesbury was the man who, in his day, did a work as great as that of Robt. Raikes in his foundation of Sunday schools or Howard in his prison reform, or John Wesley in his evangelization work among the masses. This man succeeded in a democratic reform where the great tribunes of the people made little or no effort. "Lord Shaftesbury," writes Mr. Mee, "was more powerful than John Bright. Parliament rose to the mighty height of forbidding night work for children and limiting their Saturday work to nine hours, and in 1842 little girls were saved from the slavery of the mine and only men of ten years old were allowed to go down. In that year one third of all the workers in all our mines were children; for every two men who went down, one child went with them. The battle is not yet won, for there are still 40,000 little children toiling in the mines of England when they should be at school, and Parliament will not stop this shameful scandal until we make it.

"But the days when Lord Shaftesbury could plead in Parliament for the child slaves of England, and have an audience of two, have gone for ever. He saved the children who were being slowly murdered in our mills and factories; he saved the children whose eyes were hardly ever allowed to see the sun. He saved the little chimney-sweeps who were forced up chimneys from three in the morning till ten at night, and allowed to sleep the other five hours on a sack of soot in the cellar.

Mr. Mee goes on to describe the average British soldier who broke the power of Napoleon at Waterloo; such a man as Wellington himself, fourteen years after the battle of Waterloo, described as "the worst drunkard and probably the worst workman in his town," and less than fifty years ago, the Minister for War told the House of Commons that it had come to be a question whether the British army should collapse or not. We could not get men.

"After the French wars were over, when huge sums of money were being voted to Wellington and the officers, it was proposed to reward the men, too, and what do you think was to be their reward for Waterloo? It was proposed to reward them by limiting their flogging to a hundred lashes! The flogging of soldiers was so bad that the floggers would take it in shifts, and a doctor would stand by to say how much a man could stand without dying. Well, you may not believe it, but it is true, that Lord Palmerston opposed this concession to the men who beat Napoleon. It was rejected, and the flogging went on: sometimes a man would get a thousand lashes.

"At last, when the Victorian Era was well on its way, a soldier was flogged to death, and Parliament then reduced the flogging to fifty lashes. And when do you think this flogging was stopped by the Mother of Parliaments? With a woman on the throne these things could hardly last long. Well, I am not forty years old, and I was a boy at school when the British Government proposed to abolish the flogging of soldiers. Through all the years till then the men of our army were treated like dogs, or worse than the law would allow any man to treat his dog now. Yet, when the end of this cruelty came Queen Victoria wrote to Gladstone earnestly begging him not to stop flogging, as it would deprive officers of the only power they had of keeping young troops in order.

"It is to the everlasting honor of the British Government that it replied to Queen Victoria by abolishing flogging, and the abolition was followed by a rush to the colors.

"Only nine years before, again in the teeth of Queen Victoria and the House of Lords, the Government had deprived rich men of the control of the army by abolishing the purchase of commissions. 'The nation, said Mr. Gladstone, 'must buy back its own army from its own officers.' But for this Sir John French could never have been commander of our troops in France.

"Similar conditions, or worse, were rife in the Navy. Jails were deprived of criminals that the Navy might be supplied with men. The men that won the battle of Trafalgar would never be tolerated in the Navy that now serves under Jellicoe in the North Sea. The British Navy has been transformed even more than the Army or the conditions of the workers in England. In the days of Nelson and Wellington it would have been a chimerical dream to imagine any cabinet minister or parliamentary orator addressing the workers of England as though they were free men and soldiers upon whom the saving of the nation depended as much as upon the men in the trenches.

"That was the world that the fathers of living Britons remembered; almost recent history in the minds of living men. And the great social evolution is still going on.

"Fifty years ago," said Mr. Mee, "the cause of disease was as unknown to men as it was 5,000 years ago; now we are conquering disease by conquering the cause. Plague, which in one year sent half the people to their graves, has disappeared; small-pox and leprosy have followed it; diphtheria can be cured wherever it can be found in time; and whatever ignorant people may tell you—a guarantee against typhoid fever is offered to every allied soldier fighting in France.

"And of course we are going to stop alchohol, the enemy of every land and every man within it. We are going to stop drinking it and make it drive our engines; we shall make it build up instead of pulling down. Perhaps the greatest moral service that science has rendered the world in these last ten years has been to prove that the teetotalers have always been right. There is no doubt about it at all, and only ignorance and interest can now defend this social use of a poison which consumes the strength of men and women, robs children of their birthright, and strikes through the normal life of a people as the German army strikes through Belgium.

"And poverty will go. Our children will be ashamed of it. Parliament is beginning to put on the statute book the old-fashioned gospel that the laborer is worthy of his hire.

"This shame is passing away. We are all agreed that the smallest wages must be high enough to keep human beings in comfort. The principle has passed beyond controversy, and only the details have to be arranged. Already every miner in this country has a legal minimum wage, as every factory worker in Australia has; and four other trades in England have wages fixed by Government, which can fix all wages when it considers it necessary."—The Canadian Courier.

WOMAN IN TERRIBLE STATE

Finds Help in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Cape Wolfe, Canada.—"Last March I was a complete wreck. I had given up all hope of getting better or living any length of time, as I was such a sufferer from female troubles. But I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am in good health and have a pair of twin boys two months old and growing finely. I surprised doctors and neighbors for they all know what a wreck I was.

"Now I am healthy, happy and hearty, and owe it all to Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies. You may publish this letter if you like. I think if more women used your remedies they would have better health."—Mrs. J. T. Cook, Lot No. 7, Cape Wolfe, P.E.I., Canada.

Because your case is a difficult one, and doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has remedied many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, and it may be exactly what you need.

The Pinkham record is a proud and peerless one. It is a record of constant victory over the obstinate ills of women—ills that deal out despair. It is an established fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has restored health to thousands of such suffering women. Why don't you try it if you need such a medicine?

TENTH CON. BRUCE

Programme of sports, music, speeches, etc., at mammoth patriotic picnic in Riverside Park, Paisley, Thursday afternoon, Aug 26th, and concert at night.

The heavy showers of the past week has been quite a hindrance to harvest operations but has done wonders for the root crop. Those who are lucky enough to have a field of alfalfa or second cutting of clover should be assured of a good crop of feed.

Rev Mr Facey, of Paisley Methodist church, and Rev Mr McNab, of Centre Bruce, visited amongst the members of their respective congregations last week.

Miss Stella Sinclair, accompanied by her friend, Miss Andrews, returned to the Queen City on Saturday after spending a couple of weeks' vacation with the former's parents here.

This year of 1915 seems essentially to be a patriotic year and every event that marks its progress breathes most the spirit of patriotism and imperialism. The patriotism and generosity of the brethren of Underwood L O L No 1122, was fully shown at their last meeting when $5 was donated to the tobacco fund for Canadian soldiers. It is to be hoped that every Orange lodge in the County will follow their example in providing a few smokes for the boys who are fighting our battles at the front.

Mr and Mrs Otto and family, of Wolverton, motored up and spent the week end at Mr Neil McDonald's.

BRITISH METHOD OF EMPIRE-BUILDING

WISDOM OF COLONIAL GOVERNMENT PROVED.

Germany Has Suffered Loss of Almost All Her Colonial Possessions.

Nothing in the actual war news of recent date was so significant as the confirmed report of the surrender of all the German forces under arms in German South-West Africa to General Botha, Commander of the Forces of the Union of South Africa. By the supplementary terms of surrender signed by the Imperial Governor of German South-West Africa, the entire property of the Colonial Government, as well as all military forces and all munitions of war in the colony, are ceded to the Union of South Africa, says The Outlook (New York).

General Botha's campaign has been one of the most remarkable in the entire war. Despite a rebellion in his own forces, which he had first to subdue, he travelled almost 1,200 miles, most of the way through a practically waterless desert swept by blinding sand storms, won three pitched battles, captured eleven important towns, and finally rounded up the Germans as a collie rounds up sheep, forcing them to surrender in a body, and thus obviating a prolongation of the struggle by guerilla methods.

General Botha's victory releases much of his contingent for service on the Continent or on the Dardanelles. Of all the overseas possessions which she had a year ago Germany now retains only Kamerun and a part of German East Africa. British, French and native forces are now operating against these territories, and it is probably only a question of time before they too will be lopped from the German Empire.

	Area in sq. miles.	Population.
Africa.
Togoland	33,700	1,000,000
Kamerun	192,000	3,500,000
S.-W. Africa	322,450	200,000
East Africa	384,000	7,000,000
Total	910,150	11,700,000
Pacific.
German New Guinea	70,000	110,000
Bismarck Archipelago	20,000	188,000
Caroline Islands, etc.	800	41,600
Solomon Islands	4,200	45,000
Marshall	160	15,000
Samoan Islands	985	33,000
Total	96,145	432,600
Asia.
Kiaochau	117	60,000
Total	1,006,412	12,122,600

Togoland and German Samoa were made British before the first month of war was out; Australians captured New Guinea and the Bismarck Archipelago early in September; on October 7th the Japanese seized the Caroline, Solomon and Marshall Islands; while on November 7th a combined force of Japanese and British-Indians captured Kiaochau.

This latest triumph of British arms is most noteworthy because it is one more proof of the wisdom of British methods of colonial government. Fifteen years ago General Botha was fighting Britain, and Germany was openly in sympathy with the Boer cause. Yet so wisely, so kindly, and so tolerantly have the British ruled in Africa since the end of the Transvaal War that, when the crisis came last August, General Botha and most of his race did not hesitate in their choice between Britain and their ancient friend Germany, but threw in their lot with Great Britain with such zeal that they first put down a rebellion by a minority of their fellow-colonists, and then turned to the direct attack on the Teutonic forces in Africa.

The action of Botha's men, like the action of the Canadians at Ypres, and like the conduct of the Australians on the Gallipoli Peninsula, is a vindication of British methods of empire-building.

THE "CANNON FACE."

Men Under Fire Assume a Hard, Foreboding Look.

Medical science, according to a writer in the Vossische Zeitung, has learned the are of frequently diagnosing disease from the appearance of a person's countenance. In this connection Dr. Max Lowy, chief medical adviser in the Sixth Austrian Landsturm regiment, has made an interesting study of human physiognomy before and after a battle, and his observation of what he terms the "cannon face" is attracting considerable attention.

"After being for days under fire from the enemy's artillery," says Dr. Lowy, "without being ourselves in action—simply waiting under orders—the faces of the men gradually assumed a hard, foreboding look. It was as if the sorrows of the whole world were depicted in the pale faces of the men.

"The bombardment of our position began with the dawn, continued throughout the whole morning, and even during our meagre luncheon the shells 'spat in our very soup.' All afternoon there was no rest, and often far into the night we were harassed. It was then that I observed the peculiar pallor of the face and the hard lines forming under the eyes and around the mouth. The appearance of the countenance resembled very much that of a pneumoniac."

Dr. Lowy, who has the chair of doctor of medicine in the Prague University, adds that he has observed this "cannon face" even among the tried veterans of the German army. He says it is so distinctive that he can tell at once by the face of a soldier whether he has been under heavy artillery fire.

And many an otherwise good man is not on speaking terms with his own conscience half the time.

We want an Agent in every town.

Adding Insult to Injury!—A Lying German Photographer.

After the German army has for months been employing the devilish torture of asphyxiating gas upon our troops—an outrage which it alone devised and inaugurated—a German illustrated paper has had the effrontery to publish the illustration reproduced above with the description quoted above: 'Protection against English gas-bombs"! Against this it is not inappropriate to quote, by way of example, from a report by Sir John French regarding recent operations near Hooge: "As a result of the fighting in this neighborhood during the week we have captured 213 prisoners, including 2 officers, and have taken 3 machine guns and a full gas-cylinder." It is true that Lord Kitchener recently indicated that some form of retaliation against the German poison-gases would be necessary to save the allies' troops from being placed at an unjustifiable disadvantage, "if we take no steps to meet on his own ground the enemy who is responsible for the introduction of this pernicious practice." On the same occasion Lord Kitchener said: "The enemy (near Ypres) employed vast quantities of poisonous gases in defiance of the recognized rules of war and of their pledged word. Our soldiers and our French allies were utterly unprepared for this diabolical method of attack, which had undoubtedly been long and carefully prepared by the enemy."

UNIQUE FEATURE OF THE WAR

GERMAN FLAG BANISHED FROM THE SEAS.

Britannia Has Shown That She Rules the Waves, Says American Expert.

A high naval authority at Washington has given the following summary of the first year's achievements of the European belligerents on the sea:

"The most important accomplishment of the war up to date has been the banishing of the German flag from the seven seas. Germany had the greatest investment of any country except England in ocean shipping at the outbreak of the war.

"Germany was making serious inroads on British commerce. This great investment has been ruined, and with it have gone many German industries that were dependent upon ocean commerce for their existence. Aside from banishing the German flag from the seven seas, the accomplishments of the war so far have not been at all decisive.

"Aside from the spectacular attempt of the British and French fleets to force a passage of the Dardanelles, which they had to abandon until supported by land forces, not a single decisive battle has been waged on the sea.

The Various Losses.

From the best figures available, the total loss to the belligerents in naval ships of all classes to date has been 158. Germany has suffered the loss of fifty-six ships; England fifty-four; Turkey, thirteen; France, twelve; Austria, seven; Russia, six; Italy, four; and Japan, three. England has lost eight battleships; France, one; and Turkey, one. Germany has not lost a single battleship, her heaviest losses having been ten protected cruisers. England and Germany are credited with having lost eight submarines each.

"Naval officers feel that Great Britain has vindicated herself on the sea. She has transported an army variously estimated at from 50,000 to 2,000,000 men, across the English Channel, together with all of the supplies of war munitions required for offensive and defensive operations. Although the destruction of these troopships would be of the greatest possible help the German navy could render, not one of them has been attacked by a submarine or otherwise destroyed.

Subs. Ineffective.

The sea operations which have made the greatest impression upon the public mind, of course, have been the attacks by German submarines on merchant ships. Out of the many hundreds of ships which go to and from British ports every week the German submarines have taken a toll averaging eight or ten.

"While it has resulted in considerable loss of life among non-combatants, including American citizens, this submarine warfare against merchant shipping has had little or no effect upon the war as a whole.

"The Allies have stopped all German and Austrian trade on the sea and are more and more confining them within their own boundaries. It is for this reason that we believe that the greatest single achievement of the war has been the banishing of the German flag from the seas and confining Germany and Austria within their own boundaries."

ERRORS OF HISTORY.

Where Official Reports Were Needed in Ancient Days.

William Tell was a myth.

Coriolanus never allowed his mother to intercede for Rome.

Blondel, the harper, did not discover the prison in which Richard I. was confined.

Alfred never allowed the cakes to burn, nor ventured into the Danish camp disguised as a minstrel.

Fair Rowamond was not poisoned by Queen Eleanor, but died in the odor of sanctity in the convent of Godstow.

The Duke of Wellington never uttered the famous words, "Up, guards, and at them!"

Charles Kingsley gave up his chair of modern history at Oxford because he said he considered history "largely a lie."

Chemists have proved that vinegar will not dissolve pearls nor cleave rocks, inspite of the fabled exploits of Cleopatra and Hannibal.

Charles IX. did not fire upon the Huguenots with an arquebus from the window of the Louvre during the massacre of St. Bartholomew.

The siege of Troy is largely a myth, given according to Homer's own account. Helen must have been sixty years old when Paris fell in love with her.

The number of Xerxes' army has been grossly exaggerated, and it was not stopped at Thermopylae by 300 Spartans, but by 7,000 or even, as some authors compute, 12,000.

The Abbe Edgeworth frankly acknowledged to Lord Holland that he had never made the famous invocation to Louis XVI. on the scaffold, "Son of St. Louis, ascend to heaven."

Philip VI., flying from the field of Crecy, and challenged later before the gates of the castle of Blois, did not cry out, "It is the fortune of France." What he really said was, "Open, open: it is the unfortunate King of France."

If the man who gives advice freely knew it was good he would probably use it himself.

THE LIGHTNING ROD.

Very Questionable Whether It Protects a Building.

Even to-day really few people understand what occurs when there is a flash of lightning, or the part played by the lightning rod. Some very interesting and valuable information on these matters and on the protective range of lightning rods is given by J. and J. S. B. Larmor in the Proceedings of the Royal Society. Among other things, they say:

"Electric discharge in a gas is a rupture along a line of force, and not over a surface. The initial rupture is to be expected at a place of maximum force, and spreads in both directions along the line of force through that point. In the case of a lightning rod the discharge would start at the summit of the rod, the place of most intense strain and strike away from the rod. Once a line of disruptive discharge is established the neighborhood of a lightning rod can have little effect, and a simple mathematical investigation shows that a thin isolated rod will draw the discharge hardly at all unless in the region around its summit, and that the modification in the field due to a thin rod is negligable along its sides unless close to it.

"It is the building carrying the rod which modifies the field and directs discharge to its own upper parts, which, therefore, need protection by conductors adequate to draw off this discharge to earth, and vertical rods, joining together, if need be, lower down, but rising from the corners of the structure to a height which need not exceed about half its breadth, will lift up the field of concentrated electric force from the region directly above the building to the region above their summits, and will so take the discharge. The rods may rise from an earth connected network spread over the roof, but unless the meshes are fine enough to approximate to a complete metallic covering it is questionable whether it would in itself protect a building from a discharge striking down upon it.

"A spread of connected metallic points some height above the building would appear to be more effective and might even by themselves suffice to take up and guide away any likely stroke. In fact if we neglect the discharge from the rods into the field their effect is merely to provide the easiest and most probable path for such discharge as may be attracted by the structure. The discharge from the pointed extremities of the rods adds, of course, to the protective effect by slowly but continuously reducing the strain in their neighborhood, and, therefore, the liability to disruptive discharge."

HEAVENLY VEAL.

We have been lying here—by no means resting—for weeks and weeks. The trenches approach very closely; one can hear the enemy's commands, but woe to the head that shows itself above ground. "Under cover!" is the constant reminder we are rave dwellers of the twentieth century. In some places hardly fifty metres separate us from the enemy. Although we call this space the neutral zone, neutrality is constantly violated by whistling bullets, so that safety cannot be looked for. And yet, would you believe it, in this forbidden area we noticed the other evening an adventurous intruder. With stately deliberation, innocent of any fear, strolled a good sized calf. Escaped from somewhere, he came along and calmly surveyed the situation midway between the trenches. Both sides, for the time oblivious of hostilities, called the animal, holding up bundles of hay as bait. Master Calf opened his eyes wider, but would not be tempted, standing immovable—a deadlock veritably—but when it began to grow dark the Germans lost patience and opened fire, and the bold fourfooter paid the price.

The corpse lies between the hostile lines, sharply guarded from each side. Who would be foolhardy enough to risk his life for a veal cutlet? It is a prize most likely to remain unclaimed.

Toward dawn, everybody tired with the night watch and relaxing, our "gamin," the youngest in the company and a wakeful daredevil, had obtained a rope, cautiously crawled to the carcass, fastened the line and returned. It required no command to haul in. Across the post thought the calf again had come to life, and aimed a shot—no particular harm done from it.

That day our rations—we do get tired of the field kitchen cooking—was enriched with roast veal. With the general "ris" over the successful coup, the officers enjoyed a doubly piquant "ris de veau."

Ready to Risk It.

"Mr. Jones wants a windy-pane twelve inches by fourteen," remarked young Patrick Mulrooney, entering a glazier's shop.

In the shop was a smart young assistant who wanted to have a joke with Pat.

"Haven't any that size," he replied, gravely. "Will one 14 inches by 12 do?"

Pat looked thoughtful for a minute. Then he replied:

"He's wantin' it at once, and this is the only shop in town. Give me wan o' thim. P'raps if we put it in sideways no one will notice."

BRITAIN GATHERS FULL STRENGTH

SPENT FIRST YEAR IN CHAOS OF PREPARATION.

Although She Has Lost Cocksureness Has By No Means Lost Hope.

Britain starts upon the second year of the Great War with decided advantages over her position of twelve months ago, writes Ed. L. Keen from London.

She has command of the seas. She has an army, trained and in training, of nearly 3,000,000 men. Her "expeditionary force" in France is now firmly intrenched in a position regarded as impregnable, even if the prospects of making a successful general offensive movement are not immediate. Her airmen have established beyond question their superiority in skill and daring over those of the enemy. She is building a great aerial fleet. She has at last begun with all the resources at her command, material and human, to manufacture a preponderating quantity of arms and ammunition of the right sort. She has back of her a united nation and a united empire.

Troubles Gone.

Now most of these troubles have disappeared. Some of them remained longer than others, it is true. It has been a year of readjustment. Liberals and Conservatives, Radicals and Tories now sleep in the same bed. So far as the Irish disaffection, upon which the Kaiser counted so fondly—thanks to the lack of understanding on the part of his emissaries—is concerned, that vanished almost over night. It was a short way from Tipperary, Sir Edward Carson, whom they were about to lock up in the Tower, is now Attorney-General of Great Britain, and John Redmond could be in the Cabinet if he wanted to. One hundred and twenty-five thousand Irishmen have joined the King's army. Nationalists and Unionists—75,000 of the former and 50,000 of the latter—instead of drenching Ireland with each other's blood are fighting side by side under the Union Jack.

Canada heard the call to arms and responded at once with 33,000 men to whom she had been adding regularly since. They—or rather what is left of them—are serving in the trenches along with Ghurkas from India. Australians and New Zealanders together with Welshmen and Scotsmen are engaged in the Dardanelles in one of the most valorous campaign in the history of warfare. The guerrilla uprising in South Africa has been suppressed, and the great mass of Boers against whom England conducted her unrighteous war 15 years ago, with General Botha at their head, have conquered German Southwest Africa for England. Labor and capital have joined their forces in the conflict.

Conscription Doubtful.

There has been much talk of conscription of late, both military and industrial. The leaders of the nation still believe England can win without either, and, if the recent response of the manhood of the country is any criterion, they are right. But they are prepared for conscription, if that should prove to be the only solution. The national register scheme looks as if it were a step in that direction. The machinery for conscription is to be created, but only to be utilized in the gravest emergency.

Although she has lost her cocksureness, England has by no means lost hope. She realizes that the struggle may be long and desperate. But the longer the better, for her and her Allies, in the end. Military writers, many of them, say Germany has now reached the maximum of her efficiency, while England has only got a good start toward that goal. With the boundless resources of the British Empire still to draw upon, England believes ultimate victory for the Allies can only be a question of time—if the spirit that now dominates England continues.

If it is to be a war of exhaustion, she says, then the odds are in favor of England and her Allies.

How to Keep Cool.

It is easy enough to keep cool if you will follow any of the suggestions given below:

Buy or lease a comfortable ocean-going steam yacht and go cruising around the shores of Greenland, or

Set sail for Iceland by the northern route and spend the summer on one of its glaciers, or

Get a special car, with a refrigerating plant attached, and go to Mount Rainier or one of the Canadian peaks and live in a bungalow just above or just below the snow line.

But the people who stay at home—how are we to keep cool?

Answer—It can't be done.

Author of "Annie Laurie."

"Annie Laurie" has topical interest just now, since, according to the generally accepted story, it was written by a soldier in Flanders to his lady love at home. The writer was William Douglas, and Annie Laurie was one of the four daughters of Sir Robert Laurie, of Maxwellton. Annie did not marry her ardent lover. Some say Douglas was killed in Flanders, but at all events Annie was led to the altar in 1709 by Alexander Ferguson, of Craigdarroch.

The Housewife's Corner

Don't Cry Over Sour Milk.

At this season sour milk is often a source of unnecessary household waste. Though sour milk has not as many uses as sweet milk, there is no good reason for throwing it away, since there are at least one hundred delicious dishes in the making of which sour milk is better than the sweet. When these dishes are wanted, if there is no sour milk on hand, sweet milk is often sourced by the use of rennet.

In the Southern States, where hot biscuits are found on every breakfast table, only families who keep no cow or are unable to get sour milk use baking powder. These sour milk biscuits, when made by a good cook who knows how to handle soda, are not only lighter, flakier and more tasty when hot than those made with baking powder, but when cold there is an even greater difference. A baking powder biscuit will be dried and more tasteless two hours after getting cold than the sour milk biscuit in two days. Besides, the biscuit made with sour milk may be split and toasted, and so made to taste just as good as when first taken from the oven.

Besides biscuits there are numerous kinds of griddle cakes and batter breads, including those utilizing cold hominy or cold rice, for which sour milk and the proper proportion of soda is to be preferred to sweet milk and any brand of baking powder. There are also two varieties of sour milk pies and two kinds of sour milk raised bread. In one of these corn meal is used, and it is called corn light bread. Doughnuts and gingerbread are almost exclusively made with sour milk.

In the genuine johnny cake baking powder is not to be thought of. Only sour milk with the cream well beaten in should be used for mixing the meal before the beaten eggs are stirred in. Such a johnny cake will be eatable at the end of seven days if kept in a dry receptacle. Of course it must be thoroughly cooled before being set away.

For waffles the Southern cook refuses any substitute for sour milk with a pinch of soda, which, being measured, means an even teaspoonful of soda to each pint of thick sour milk. To get the best results, waffles both light and crisp, the eggs must first be beaten light, then the milk in which the soda has been thoroughly dissolved beaten in; after this comes the flour, also beaten in until the batter is light both in color and weight.

Sour milk salad dressing when properly mixed and cooked cannot be distinguished from that in which sweet milk is used. The same is the case with sour milk ice cream and of fruit cake. Chocolate gingerbread, chocolate crullers and coffee squares are all improved by the use of sour milk. So are sugar cookies and all of the fruit breads in which Graham flour is used.

The one and only secret of using sour milk in cooking is getting the soda in the right proportion. For thick sour milk an even teaspoonful of soda is sufficient for a pint of milk. Where the milk is thin, which means that more of the curd has been eaten up by the whey, slightly more soda should be allowed.

For whitening the hands and face there is nothing better than milk sufficiently sour to bite the tongue. This applied to the face, hands or neck with a soft cloth every three or five minutes is a sure cure for tan, and for sunburn where the skin is not blistered. For removing tan and for cleaning silver the milk should have the cream removed.

Graham bread made with sour milk in this way is delicious: Sift together a cupful and a half of graham flour and one of white. Add a cupful of broken nut meats and a teaspoonful of salt. Then stir in half a cupful of milk and a cupful and a half of sour milk, and lastly, add a teaspoonful of soda. The soda can be sifted into a little of the white flour and added last, if adding it with the flour is easier.

Cake with sour cream is very good according to this recipe: Beat an egg and add it to a cupful of brown sugar. Then add a quarter of a cupful of butter and three-quarters of a cupful of sour cream. Sift half a teaspoonful of salt and the same amount each of mace and cassia, with a cupful and two-thirds of flour, and add to the other ingredients, and then add half a teaspoonful of soda.

Can You Can Corn?

No?
Here's how.
Have it fresh.
Have it very fresh.
Cut it off the cob raw.
Begin with six cups of the corn.
Then add four tablespoonfuls of water.
Next put in a half-cup each of salt and sugar.
Boil this mixture 20 minutes and put it in hot jars.
The jars and the glass covers should be standing in hot water.

Useful Hints.

Vinegar will remove the stain of shoe polish on clothing.

To make sure that the bread pudding will be light, add a little baking powder.

If a gloss is desired on linen add a teaspoonful of salt to the starch when making.

Never leave milk standing in a tin can, but empty it at once into a crockery vessel.

If cold coffee is used in mixing stove blacking, the stove will keep bright much longer.

When eggs crack in boiling, add a teaspoonful of salt to the water. The white will not come through and be wasted.

All cupboards and wardrobes need frequent airing to be healthy. Remove all clothes and open wide on a sunny day, and leave so for several hours each week.

To renovate black kid gloves at small cost mix a few drops of black ink with a teaspoonful of olive oil. Apply this with a feather and dry in sun.

Brooms will last twice as long if they are given an occasional soaking. Dry in the open air and always stand with the heads upward.

A good summer dessert is made by lining a pudding dish with sponge cake and filling the dish with stewed fruit. Put more sponge on the top, press till cold and coat the whole with boiled custard.

The water in bread an excellent cleanser for varnished woodwork. To obtain this, pour water on used tea leaves, and strain through a cloth or muslin. The tea water removes the dirt quite easily.

One way of lessening housekeeping cares in summer is to do away with window curtains and use only shades. It saves both washing and trouble when sudden storms come and curtains are apt to be soaked.

A faded carpet can be much improved at little expense. Add a pint of vinegar to a pan of fairly hot water, and after having given the carpet a thorough brushing, rub this well into every part of it with a clean cloth.

GEN. JOFFRE SUPERSTITIOUS.

Says His Star Was in Ascendant on March to Timbuctoo.

Hard-headed, unsentimental soldier though he is, it is one of the curious traits in Joffre's character that he is a firm believer in luck. He will tell you that his star was in the ascendant on that memorable march to Timbuctoo in January, 1894, when he avenged the murder of General Bonnier and his men and achieved the distinction of being the first French army officer to reach Timbuctoo.

It should be remembered at that time Timbuctoo was a sort of Lhassa of the tropics. Only four white men had set foot within its walls. Joffre himself has related in his story of the expedition how he set out from Segou on Christmas Day, 1893, to the conquest of Timbuctoo, then in the hands of the Tuaregs, the terrible "veiled men" of the western Soudan, who had the worst reputation of any brigand race on the face of the earth.

The expedition was divided into three parts. Colonel Bonnier went up the Niger by water, preceded by Lieutenant Boiteux in a gunboat, while Joffre commanded the land column, a small force of some 30 Europeans and 200 natives, who took an arduous route along the Niger banks.

Bonnier and Boiteux reached Timbuctoo and occupied the citadel. But unfortunately, Bonnier himself, setting out a day or two afterward against the Tuaregs, was surprised by night and massacred, with all his men. Meanwhile Joffre was pushing ahead with his little force, and although harried by the Tuaregs, who hoped to surprise him as they did Bonnier, they never caught him asleep.

Through deadly swamps and waterless desert, under a blazing tropical sky which caused the death of many men and horses, they steadily pushed ahead, and Joffre relates how he not only took the precaution of making friends with the local chiefs but he brought them along with him whenever possible, even at the price of much-regretted delay, due to having to "sit up all night" in friendly palaver.

NEW GERMAN TORPEDO.

Enemy Using a Lighter One With Shorter Range.

According to the latest information, the German torpedoes have a range of from 1,000 to 1,500 yards. Instead of carrying 250 pounds or 300 pounds of guncotton or other high explosive, the instruments have a charge of but 100 pounds or less. Because of the shorter range and lighter weight, the ordinary intricate mechanism is simplified. Indeed, some of the propelling parts necessary in the greater torpedo are omitted. Probably the most valuable saving is in the time of construction. These torpedoes are built and completely tested in five months, while ten months or a year is required to perfect a long-range instrument. The new torpedo costs about $2,250. This does not include the explosive charge. The German long-range torpedo, 10,000 yards, costs $1,500, while the intermediate range torpedo, 4,000 to 7,000 yards, costs about $6,000.

THE ANNIVERSARY

A year of war has re-discovered the world. It has shown all revealed the spirit of British freedom. By the old, old method many accumulations of dusty stupidity have been blown clear away and we are back again in the Age of Heroism and the Cycle of Sacrifice. The final test of nationhood has been applied and this great free federation of self-governing States which we call the Empire has held firm and stood steady before the blast of cannon.

The year ends with a passionate protest from Emperor William that he did not will this war. Yet he is the responsible Governor of Germany, the final authority for every national act. He is as much an absolute monarch as any Oriental in the history of Islam. In the face of facts that will damn Germany for generations, in the face of records which cannot be denied, the Emperor is willing to lie to the world and, worst of all, to lie to himself. He will find out the meaning of the old Carlyle creed "That a lie is unbelievable."

In emphasizing the extraordinary moral flight of Germany down the steps which lead to Avernus there is no desire to minimize the bravery of her soldiers. The German troops have fought with a sustained energy which has proved not only their discipline but their spirit. And yet we pay them no tribute of admiration, for their bravery has not been touched by gallantry or chivalry.

History does not record any exploits of savagery which approach the rape of Belgium. They talk still in Antwerp of the Spanish Fury, but it was rapine and murder confined to a single city. The German Fury swept from Vise to Louvain, from Aerschot to Dinant, from Dinant to Ypres. It touched at Scarborough and off Kinsale, where the Lusitania took her plunge. By these acts of hellish lust and infernal cruelty, utterly divorced from the business of fighting, the German army is dishonored for all time, and the stain on the name of Hohenzollern is fixed forever.

We find after a year of war a temper in the Allies which prevents any inconclusive peace, a determination to strain every nerve to bring this Chaos to a satisfactory end. It is already apparent that only by wholesale slaughter can this end be achieved. The price is appalling, but it must be paid for the sake of generations to come and for the sake of the generation still living. The world cannot be delivered to the mercies of deter-ors, envy and of remorseless murder. The Allies have thoroughly digested the scriptural motto, He that endureth to the end shall be saved.

It is not fitting yet to prophesy the duties of the day following the end of the struggle. Yet one may confidently expect a wider freedom, a better understanding of the real requirements of Government. One may look for a better co-ordination of the powers and aspirations of this Empire. One may anticipate a better lot for the average man both in peace and war. Best of all, one may find a diminution of the evils of materialism which have been too apparent in late

450 HORSE-POWER ZEPPELIN.

Three Motors Are Installed and High Speed is Possible.

A Zeppelin has a rigid framework of reinforced aluminum and eighteen "supporting" sections, each containing a gas-tight bag, a total gas capacity of 661,600 cubic feet. Over the framework is stretched a heavy cloth covering that is impervious to rain or snow. Upper and lower decks furnish surfaces that serve the same purpose as do the wings of an aeroplane when it is desired to drive to a higher or lower air level.

The individual gas-bags are not fully inflated before the ship starts on a voyage. Slack is left to accommodate the expansion of the gas in the upper air. Safety-valves with indicators on the pilot's desk make it almost impossible for any one of the gas-bags to explode, but six of them might come to grief at one time without endangering the airship, so great is the ballasting power resulting from speed.

The "Viktoria Luise" is just short of 500 feet in length and has a breadth of 46 feet. It has three 6-cylinder Diesel motors with a combined horse-power of 450. A speed of fifty miles an hour has been made with atmospheric conditions normal. If, by some rare accident, two of its motors should be rendered useless, the third would be sufficient to give headway against a twenty-seven-mile wind.

Captain Haecker, who commanded the "Viktoria Luise" in the trip from Düsseldorf to Berlin, has little fear of storms while his ship is in the air, though Germany's excellent weather forecast service makes it possible for flights to be so timed as to avoid the ordinary wind-storm. Each Zeppelin carries a wireless outfit, and from land stations obtains reports of weather conditions.

10,000,000 JEWS IN WAR.

Zangwill Says Only Those in America Have Escaped Conflict.

Israel Zangwill, historian of the Jewish race, points out that only the Jews who are in America have escaped the war. Ten million Jews are engaged in the war, three million of them in Poland alone.

Twenty thousand Jews are fighting for England, 50,000 for Germany, 170,000 for Austria, 350,000 for Russia, and 2,500 for Servia.

The French Zouaves are twenty per cent. Jews. Jewish soldiers and sailors also come from Morocco and Tripoli, Australia, New Zealand, Canada and South Africa.

In England the Lord Chief Justice, who raised the financial situation for the allies, is a Jew, and the late Lord Rothschild presided over the Red Cross fund.

The racially Jewish Enver Bey is Turkey's man of the hour. Baron Hermino, the son of a Jew, helped to persuade Italy to join the allies.

LITTLE SLIPS.

Some of the Tragedies They Have Caused.

"I quite forgot all about the local train."

In this tragic sentence a young signalman named James Tinsley admitted at the Board of Trade inquiry that he was responsible for the greatest railway disaster of modern times, when, recently at Gretna, 162 people lost their lives, and over 200 others were injured. It was a little thing, this act of forgetfulness on the part of the signalman, but on it hung a terrible issue.

In many walks of life trifles lead to tragedies.

Some years ago a young man of twenty-two was tried for murder. While out walking with his sweetheart he suddenly turned round and stabbed her. The wound proved fatal, and he was convicted and sentenced to death.

The young man had been employed at a big brewery, and had left at his own discretion. When applying for another berth he gave his previous employers as a reference. His old firm telegraphed him an excellent character. A grievous mistake, however, was made by someone, as the word "honest" in the telegram, on arrival at its destination, read as "lowest." This completely ruined his chances, and drove him to his mad act.

When the head clerk of a Parisian jeweller arrived at the shop one morning, he discovered to his horror that a window was broken, and the whole place in confusion. He was running to the telephone to call up the police when he stumbled over a man lying flat on the floor. Beside him was a bag containing a huge quantity of jewellery which had been stolen.

Investigation showed that the prostrate man, who was the burglar, had, in climbing over some cases, inadvertently grasped an electric wire. The shock had upset his balance. He had crashed to the floor, and been stunned by the fall. And this little thing led to a long term of imprisonment.

Some years ago the manager of a large tea-garden in Bengal was brutally murdered. The assassin disappeared completely, and for many weeks the crime remained a mystery. The heir of the murdered man went out from England and examined his papers. Among them he found on the binding of an atlas a dark stain.

This proved to be a thumb-mark traced in blood. It was sent to the police bureau, where the thumb imprints of criminals are kept according to the French system, and was soon discovered to correspond with that of a noted criminal then at large. He was tracked, tried, and eventually hanged.

A well-known London business man went for his annual holiday, and the fact that he had left negotiable bonds worth £15,000 in his safe, easy of access, quite slipped his memory till his holiday had nearly ended. Hurrying back, he found the bonds missing, as was also a dishonest clerk. His holiday brought him to the verge of ruin.

Truly trifles lead to tragedies.

LUXURY ON WHEELS.

Some Railway Carriages are Veritable Palaces.

You have surely never seen any railway-train which could boast of a compartment devoted solely to beautiful statuary! Even on our finest luxurious Pullman car such an apartment would be regarded as quite unnecessary and superfluous. But the German Emperor always has this addition to his special train in times of peace; for his royal carriages contain a large vestibule, whose sole decorations consist of most charming statues.

Several of the expresses which traverse the Siberian Railway, from Moscow to the Pacific coast, are fitted up with one carriage built as a chapel for divine service. There are an altar, reredos, pulpit, pews, &c., all in due order, and a priest of the Greek Church travels with the train to conduct the services at the appointed times.

The famous Diaz, as President of Mexico, possessed a special carriage on the railways there for his own use. This carriage had not only one of its parts beautifully arranged as a drawing-room, but on each side of this room was a verandah decorated with flowers. Thus the President could sit outside and enjoy the open air when travelling, being at the same time protected from dust and smoke by overhanging wreaths of roses and other lovely plants.

One celebrated railway carriage can boast that it is a regular autograph album. This carriage is now in Denmark, and belongs to one of the royal trains of Europe. On its windows the various kings, queens, and royalties of the continent have scratched their names—usually their "pet" names—with a diamond when they were travelling in it. Now can find there the names of most of our English royal personages; also those of German, Danish, Russian, Norwegian, Swedish, and Spanish kings, princes, and other notable people. Veritably those windows are worth their weight in gold.

"What did Rastus get married for?" asked one negro of another. "Lawd only knows, while. He keeps right on workin'."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, AUGUST 22.

Lesson VIII.—Asa's Good Reign, 2 Chron. 15. 1-15. Golden Text: James 4. 8.

I. The Prophecy of Azariah (Verses 1-7).

Verse 1. Spirit of God—See Num. 24. 2; 2 Chron. 20. 14; 24. 20.

Oded—The father of Azariah was Iddo (or Oded), the prophet and historian of the two preceding reigns.

2. If ye seek him—Finding God is a self-evident fact if he is sought after (see 1 Chron. 28. 9; Jer. 29. 13).

3. Without the true God—Israel became disobedient and repudiated their God several times (Judg. 3. 7, 12; 4. 1; 6. 1; 8. 33; 10. 6).

Without a teaching priest—Israel always had priests and prophets, but sometimes these were false. The expression here, "a teaching priest," means a true priest or prophet.

Without law—See Judg. 17. 6; 21. 25.

5. No peace to him—See Judg. 5. 6. This refers to the time when lawlessness reigned supreme, "when every man did what was right in his own eyes"; that is, what he wanted to do and could do by force of his own strength.

Of the lands — The district into which Palestine was divided, such as Galilee, Gilead, the Jordan valley, Mount Ephraim, Sharon, &c.

6. Nation against nation—The other tribes against Benjamin (Judg. 20. 33-48).

City against city—Judg. 9. 45.

II. Asa is Converted (Verses 8-15).

8. The Prophecy of Oded—Or Iddo, Azariah's father. A prophecy not recorded, but what Azariah doubtless remembered having been uttered by his father.

10. The third month—That is, Sivan, our month of June.

11. Seven hundred . . . seven thousand—The number seven appears often (Num. 29. 32; 1 Chron. 15. 26, 2 Chron. 29. 21; Job 42. 8; Ezek. 45. 23). In the larger sacrifices the number seven is not prominent (1 Kings 8. 63; 2 Chron. 30. 24; 35. 7-9).

12. Entered into the covenant—That is, they renewed the covenant established in Exod. 24. 3-8. Three hundred years afterward, it was again renewed, following a backsliding (2 Kings 23. 3; 2 Chron. 34. 31). It was again renewed in Nehemiah's time (Neh. 10. 28-39).

13. Be put to death—This was one of the commandments of the law (Exod. 22. 20; Deut. 13. 6-15; 17. 2-7).

15. Rejoiced — Because of a free conscience and a full surrender. "They had sworn with all their heart, and sought him with their whole desire."

COMMAND OF THE SEA.

What the British Fleet Has Done in the Year of War.

If any one wishes to know whether the British Fleet has during the last year proved itself worthy of its traditions there is a very simple method of arriving at the truth, writes Mr. A. J. Balfour, First Lord of Admiralty, in the New York World. There are seven, and only seven, functions which a fleet can perform:

It may drive the enemy's commerce off the sea.

It may protect its own commerce.

It may render the enemy's fleet impotent.

It may make the transfer of enemy troops across the sea impossible, whether for attack or defense.

It may transfer its own troops where it will.

It may secure their supplies and (in fitting circumstances) it may assist their operations.

All these functions have so far been successfully performed by the British fleet. No German merchant ship is to be found on the ocean. Allied commerce is more secure from attack, legitimate and illegitimate, than it was after Trafalgar. The German high sea fleet has not as yet ventured beyond the security of its protected waters.

No invasion has been attempted of these islands. British troops, in numbers unparalled in history, have moved to and fro across the seas and have been effectively supported on shore. The greatest of military powers has seen its schemes wrested from it one by one, and has not been able to land a man or a gun in their defense.

Of a fleet which has done this we may not only say that it has done much, but that no fleet has ever done more. And we citizens of the British empire can only hope that the second year of the war will show no falling off in its success, as it will assuredly show no relaxation of its efforts.

BAVARIAN PRINCE DOUBTFUL

Thinks Now That German Victory is Not Possible.

A French news agency is authority for a statement that Crown Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria is no longer hopeful of German victory. The Crown Prince while conversing with a member of the Reichstag who is visiting the German lines in Artois, said:

"I must confess immediately that I am no longer an optimist. It will take some time before the allies can seriously affect our positions in France, but the roles will undoubtedly be reversed in the end. The enemy's strength and resources are now too well organized. He is in a position to hold the balance in his favor.

The happy couple mentioned in the following notice from the Port Arthur Daily Herald of Aug 5th, came down east on their wedding trip, and were visiting in Glamis and vicinity for a few days, guests at W. J. McKeeman's home. The bride is a former Glamis girl, and many friends were glad of the opportunity of extending congratulations and good wishes:

A charmingly arranged summer wedding was celebrated last evening at 7.30 o'clock in the First Baptist Church when Miss Mary Florence McKay, daughter of Mr John McKay, of Port Arthur, became the bride of Mr Harwood Matthews, son of Mr and Mrs I L Matthews, Arthur St, Port Arthur. The church was very artistically decorated with trailing green vines, while the choir seats were outlined in pure white marguerites and everlasting, numerous jardinieres of palms and sword ferns adding further to the beauty of the decorations. The ceremony was performed by the Rev A P McDonald, pastor of the Baptist church, in the presence of thirty or more invited guests, and many friends who practically filled the auditorium to capacity. The bride and groom stood under a most effective arrangement of marguerites and green vines, the central wedding bell being attached by strands of everlasting to the heads of four white pillars twined with the same green vine. The guests' pews were demarcated with pure white satin ribbons formed into soft crushed bows with a spray of marguerites and green everlasting—the motive throughout being green and white. Miss Lois Hesson presided at the organ, and while the ceremony was being signed Miss Blanche White, of Woodstock, rendered with feeling the song "Because." The bride looked very fair and winsome as she entered the church with her father, Mr John McKay, who gave her in marriage. She wore a wedding robe of ivory duchesse satin with long square train, the bodice being trimmed with exquisite Indian lace and pearls. The skirt, gracefully draped, also had touches of lace, the train being caught with sprays of orange blossoms. Her veil of tulle was arranged in dainty cap effect with crown of orange blossoms, and fell to the bottom of the skirt where it was caught with sprays of the same flower. She carried a sheaf of cream roses and lillies of the valley. Miss Annie McKay, as bridesmaid, wore a gown of shell pink crepe de chene, the dainty bolero outlined in hand-made roses. Her hat was of pale pink crepe with touches of pale blue and she carried pink roses. Mr Ivan Matthews, brother of the groom, was best man, and the ushers Mr Leonard Matthews and Mr H McKay. The groom's gift to the bride was a handsome gold bracelet watch, to the bridesmaid and the soloist Miss White cameo rings, to Miss Hesson a pearl pin, to the ushers and groomsmen pearl tie pins. After leaving the church the guests drove to the home of the bride's father, 107 Bay St, where a reception was held. The various rooms were prettily decorated with carnations, sweet peas and smilax, the bride's table being arranged with smilax, roses and sweet peas, white tulle and ribbon. Mrs Donald MacLean was tea-room hostess, Mrs Arthur Roberts serving the ices, and Mrs Chas MacLean presiding at the tea table. The assistants were Miss Cochrane of Hamilton, Man, Miss Beth McKay, sister of the bride, and Miss Grace Rogers, of Fort William. Later Mr and Mrs Matthews left on the Huronic for Duluth. They will visit Detroit and the Thousand Islands before returning to Port Arthur, where they will take up their residence at 430 Ambrose St. The bride's travelling gown was of Belgian blue gabardine with Belgian clue crepe and white hat to match. Among the numerous gifts received was a cabinet of sterling silver, fumed oak desk and chair and many pieces of crown derby, cut glass and silver.

Old Sol put in his worst digs last Thursday and spoiled the day for the Patriotic picnic which was being got up by the Women's Institute. Not that did not by any means mean that it was to be given up as it was decided to try again next day. Although the morning was not very promising the afternoon turned out an ideal day for a picnic. Everybody seemed surprised that there was such a good place for a picnic and had never been used before as is on Jas Dudgeon's farm around a bend in the old Snake Creek on what was once the old Roadhouse farm. A beautiful arch with flags and bunting opened the way to the grounds. In the afternoon there were several games of baseball played, including a match game between Dobbinton girls and the 10 Con. girls which resulted in a score of 9-6 in favor of the 10th Con. girls. After lunch was served a short programme was given and also a game of baseball between Dunblane and the 8th Con. boys with the score standing 14-8 in Dunblane's favor. The proceeds amounted to $104.25, most of which will go to the Red Cross Society and part will aid in buying socks for the soldiers. The Women's Institute desire to thank all those who took part and helped to make the picnic a success.

WALKERTON

Go to Paisley Patriotic Picnic on Thursday, Aug 26.

Misses Peace and Edith Stait of Vergus and Miss Mabel Stait of Toronto are spending a few weeks with their cousin, Mrs Leonard Long, of Brant.

Inspector McCool returned on Friday from attending a course on pedagogy at Kingston and an agricultural course at Guelph.

The immorality that is rampant on the Bruce Peninsula is filling up the Children's Aid Society at Walkerton with wards and is giving the County such a black eye that, in the opinion of no less an authority than Crown Attorney Dixon, the time has arrived when an inspector should be appointed to constantly patrol the peninsula and rid the territory of those nuisances and cess-pools of vice. Secretary McLennan of the Children's Aid Society, who has been through that country went so far as to say there was no religion above the stable. Although the Peninsula contributes more prisoners to the Walkerton jail than any other part of Bruce, yet for one man that is brought to justice, dozens up there escape. With such a condition of things right in our own country, it is a little presumptious for our churches to be dilating so much on far-away heathen and training their guns for long-distance shots, when sinners abound so plentiful within such close range of the gallant pulpiteers here.

Special Officer Craig of Ottawa, accompanied by Constable Briggs of Walkerton, visited Rev H H Henkel of North Brant on Friday last. Mr Henkel is the Lutheran minister, who made himself offensive to Prof. Reichdorf a few weeks ago when the latter was addressing a patriotic meeting. When Officer Craig was presented with the facts and Mr Henkel had to admit expressing his views, Craig served him with a paper notifying him that he would have to report once a month to Crown Attorney Dixon and to guard his speech in future. He refused to agree to report as requested. Craig simply inquired of Briggs if his buggy would carry three back to Walkerton, as he wished to take Mr Henkel to Kingston for internment until after the war. This had more effect than an hours argument and Rev Henkel was then almost willing to agree to anything, and until the end of the war will report the first of each month to the Crown Attorney at Walkerton, and on failure at any time to report within three days of that date may be arrested and interned in a detention camp. The officers then visited Shealey and interviewed Herman Caarman, who has been offensive with his views. On ascertaining the business of Mr Craig, he wilted at once and agreed to report monthly to the chief constable of Chesley. The German people of this county are all right in sentiment if it were not for certain ministers, who having received their education in Germany, have brought with them all their old country feelings and sentiments.

—Mammoth Patriotic Picnic in Riverside Park, Paisley, Thursday afternoon, Aug/26. Programme—baseball, Cargill vs Paisley, lacrosse match, list of races and games, also music and speeches, etc in Riverside Park, and concert at night. Admission to grounds 15c, to concert, 2 tickets for 25c.

CHAPTER V.

"Rosalie! what is it you are poring over now? Moore's Sacred Melodies! Now, my love, that is not the food for you to be feeding your sick fancies upon! Come, throw aside that blue sentimentalist, and come with me into Miss Sutherland's room, and try to interest yourself a little in healthful external life."

This was addressed by Mrs. Vivian to her step-daughter.

The fair girl closed her book, and smiling gently, arose, and passed her arm through that of her step-mother. And they left the chamber and entered the dressing-room of Miss Sutherland.

A scene of splendid chaos met their view. And the favored mistress of all this wealth sat with an air of extreme languor and indifference. At her feet sat her beautiful hand-maiden, Oriole, with a box of white satin slippers by her side, and her mistress' small foot in her lap. By her side stood Meda, holding a box of white kid gloves, from which she continued to hand out pair after pair to the young lady, who would draw one half upon her fingers, draw it off, let it fall, and drop her hand upon her lap with a look of fatigue, and say, languidly:

"There, take them away; They are all too large, or too small, or something——"

"Dear India, how can you say that?" said Mrs. Vivian, taking up a pair of gloves; "they are all exactly of a size, and all number sixes—your number—and are really beautiful gloves."

"But it is such a bore, Oriole, cease tormenting my feet, and take away those odious slippers."

"How can you call them odious?" said Mrs. Vivian, stooping down, and taking up a pair.

"Can I do anything to serve you?" asked Mrs. Vivian.

"Yes, dear Valeria; just see that they hang the dresses up, and put away the cases and things."

Mrs. Vivian did as she was bid, examining, at her leisure, the magnificent trousseau. Only once she interrupted the repose of Miss Sutherland, to ask her if the wedding-dress had come.

"Meda, tell Mrs. Vivian about it."

And the waiting-woman preceded her into the adjoining chamber, where, upon the bed was laid the magnificent bridal costume of white brocaded satin, the superb veil of Honiton lace, and the beautiful chaplet of orange flowers.

Mrs. Vivian beckoned Rosalie, and when the child stood by her side, they examined it together, and the mother tried to make her daughter understand how elegant, how costly, how recherche was this costume.

"And to think that India is so indifferent about a trousseau that would have turned my head. I believe it is affectation."

"No, it is not, mamma. She is really indifferent to all this. Something troubles her. She was not resting when she sat so still. I saw her lips tremble and her eyelids quiver."

Mrs. Vivian cast a scrutinizing glance at the girl.

"And now, my dear, do you know the programme of these bridal festivities and tour as we arranged it yesterday?"

"No," said the young girl, trying to be interested.

Mrs. Vivian dropped herself into an easy chair at the side of the bed, and Rose sank upon the cushion at her feet, and laid her head in the lady's lap.

"The marriage was long ago fixed to come off on Miss Sutherland's birthday—a week from to-day. The ceremony is to take place in the morning, and you are to be one of the bridesmaids. The bridal pair are to set out upon a tour of the springs and other places. You and I, Rose, are going up into the pine woods, to a quiet farmhouse, to spend the hot months."

"Dear mamma, how much you give up for me!"

"My child, I would do anything in the world to see you restored to health, like other young girls."

"But this, sweet mamma, is too much to sacrifice."

"The noise and confusion would kill you, Rosalie!"

"And then my sweet mamma would really be the rich young Southern widow she is generally supposed to be," said the girl, with a fond, sorrowful smile.

"Oh, Rosalie! why did you say that to me, love? Do you believe in the traditional selfishness of all step-mothers, from the days of Cinderella's step-dame to yours? Or have you read such poetry as:

'There's nothing true but heaven,' till you have lost faith in all things? —poetry that Heaven knows, gives anything but 'Glory to God, and peace and good-will to man.'"

"Dear mamma, I am very sorry I said what I did. Oh, believe me, it was far from my heart to be so cruelly unjust as I see you must think me!"

"Just tell me how you came to say what you did!"

"Nay, never heed them, dear, kind mamma."

"Rosalie, I insist upon knowing what put such a thought into your head."

"Mother, sometimes I hear things not intended for my ear, which, nevertheless, I cannot help hearing——"

"Explain."

"Why, often when I have been reclining in a shaded window-seat with a book, or lying on a distant sofa, and they think I am asleep, I hear them say, 'Poor girl, she is a trouble to herself and all around her. Her death would be a great relief to the young widow, and Mrs. Vivian would come into the whole property then!' Dear mamma do not let it disturb you. It did not disturb me the least. What are you about to do, mamma?"

"Ring, and order our carriage. I will not stay in this house, where you are so cruelly wounded."

"Dear mother, you cannot imagine that it is in this house I have ever been injured, in word or deed?"

"Where, then, Rose? Tell me where it is that such wanton words meet your ear?"

"Dear mother, almost everywhere where you and I sojourn for any length of time; in our own house at New Orleans; at our place in the pine woods—in short, wherever the great world that knows us has entered. But, mamma, you did not finish telling me about our summer arrangements."

"We shall spend two months in the pine woods, where the terebinthine air is so strongly recommended as the great specific for weak or diseased lungs; and where the quiet, regular hours, simple food and gentle exercise will bring back the color to my child's cheeks. And, after two months, I will take her to Charleston, South Carolina, there to meet the married pair. When we join them, we embark across the ocean, and make the tour of Europe together, winter in Sicily, and return home next spring. And by that time, I hope, the sea voyage, the change of scene and of climate, will have completely restored my darling to health!"

CHAPTER VI.

While Mrs. Vivian sat talking with her daughter, Miss Sutherland remained in the adjoining dressing-room, her eyes closed as in gentle repose. It was no deep sorrow that troubled this favorite of fortune. But she had that day been summoned to the presence of her father, and by him had been informed of Mr. Mark Sutherland's whole plan, as he had just learned it from the latter. The planter had told his daughter of all the privations, toils, hardships and humiliations she must endure. He had further assured her, that if she should remain firm in opposing the plan of her lover, his resolution must finally yield to his affection for herself. And at last he had wrung from his daughter a promise that she would make the total resignation of Mr. Mark Sutherland's plans the only condition upon which their marriage should proceed, and Miss Sutherland had returned to her room with little disposition to be amused by the splendor of her newly-arrived trousseau. And, by seeming insolence and nonchalance, had drawn upon herself the unjust censure of Mrs. Vivian, and the wondering compassion of the more sympathetic Rosalie.

India never for an instant doubted her power over Mark Sutherland. That his fanaticism must yield to her influence, she felt certain. She admired and honored Mark Sutherland above all men. And she loved him as those of her clime only love. This spoiled child of fortune was too true a woman to wish to take the position of a dictator to the man she so loved. She felt indignant with all concerned in thrusting upon her such inevitable, yet such repulsive, "great-ness." And now she sat trying to compose her nerves and collect her thoughts for the unavoidable interview to which she momentarily expected to be summoned.

A servant soon entered, and, bowing, informed her that Mr. Sutherland requested the favor of an interview.

"Where is Mr. Sutherland?" inquired the lady.

"In the library, miss."

"Proceed thither and announce me, then."

Arrived at the library, the man opened the door, and merely saying, "Miss Sutherland, sir," held it open until she had passed in, and then retired.

And India found herself alone with Mark. He was sitting at a central library-table, leaning with his head resting upon his hand; his face was very pale, his countenance haggard, his dark hair slightly disheveled, his manner disturbed and anxious, yet withal controlled. He arose and advanced to meet her, led her to a sofa, and placed himself beside her. Taking her hand in his own, and pressing it gently, he looked down into her face, regarding her with a grave, sweet, sad, almost solemn expression of countenance; and, after a brief pause, he said, "My dearest India, you cannot be at a loss to understand my motive for requesting this interview?"

He paused, but she did not reply. He pressed her hand fondly and resumed: "My love, the time has come to put in practice some of those high examples of heroism, which in others so often won our fervent admiration."

She arrested his curious words, hurriedly exclaiming, "I have heard of your purpose of manumitting the people on your various plantations. But I would rather see the plan of benevolence, or philanthropy, from your own lips, unwarped by prejudice, with as little preface as possible!"

The coldness of her words and tones smote him to the heart. Nevertheless he replied, "My purpose is no plan of benevolence, but a simple act of justice." Then gently repossessing himself of her hand, he held it tenderly in his own, while he began and related all the mental and moral experiences that had led him to determine upon the contemplated act of emancipation. She sat very still, with her face pale and impassable, and her eyes cast down. She was no match for him in argument; yet, preferring to convert rather than insult him, she recalled and repeated all the arguments she had ever heard in defence of slavery; she began by saying that she thought the existence of the system of slavery to be the direct will and ordination of Divine Providence. Was not their present subordinate position here infinitely preferable to their former savage and cannibal condition on the coast of Congo? Here at least they were Christianized. They must be blind, indeed, who cannot see in the enslavement of the African race the purpose of Divine Providence to civilize Africa."

Mark Sutherland took her hand, and replied:

"My dear India, we do not deny that God continually brings good out of evil; but is that a justification of the evil? Admitting, for argument's sake, that the reduction of a portion of the Ethiopian race to slavery by the Anglo-Americans is to be the means of Christianizing them, is it not full time, after two hundred years of bondage, that some of this harvest sowed with tears and blood should be reaped?"

"Besides," said Miss Sutherland, "there is a fitness in these relations between the European and the African races;—Europeans could not engage in agricultural labor under the burning heat of our Southern sun——"

"Why not emancipate and hire them?" interrupted Mark.

"The negroes will not work effectually, unless driven."

"Plantation slaves will not, I grant you; but what has reduced them to this hopeless condition?"

"I do not know why you should call their condition hopeless—I think they are as hopeful and as happy as poor white people, or free blacks. And I never heard of a bad master, who was not also a bad son, brother, husband, father, neighbor—in short, a bad Christian. And why not begin at the right end, and Christianize it—and all other reform will follow. Why not do that?"

"Because, my dear India, unluckily the world thinks itself already Christian. 'And if the light that is in it be darkness, how great is that darkness?' I am quite unworthy of the name Christian, and have no presumption to begin reforming the world. I only wish to do a simple act of justice, in a matter between me and my own conscience."

"The system appears to me to be perfectly right. There is a beautiful adaptation in the mutual relations existing between the Anglo-Saxon master and the Ethiopian slave; the Anglo-Saxon is highly intellectual, strong, proud, firm, self-willed, impelled to govern, gifted with great mental independence; the Ethiopian, on the contrary, is very unintellectual, imitative, affectionate, easily controlled, that it seems to need only the spirit of Christianity to make it a beautiful and happy correspondence."

"I think, my dearest girl, that even in that case the 'beautiful and happy correspondence' would be like Irish reciprocity—all on one side."

Both grew serious and emphatic. India became fevered; she brought forward every plea she had ever heard; but she was not his equal in logic. Disappointed and unnerved by the strangeness of anxiety and contention, she suddenly burst into tears, and passionately exclaimed:

"You do not love me! You never loved me!"

ALEXANDER OF SERBIA.

Formerly Crown Prince, Is Preventing a Balkan Agreement.

It is one of the little jokes of fate that the young man, Crown Prince Alexander of Serbia, who was treated with such contemptuous condescension by the exalted personages assembled at London in June, 1911, for the coronation of George V.—that he Prince Alexander, should be, in June, 1913, the arbiter of the immediate destinies of Europe.

Bulgaria's entrance into the war on the side of England, France, Russia, and Italy would, it is quite openly stated in each of their capitals, help to bring about an early termination of the war. It would release Rumania, now fearful of a Bulgarian attack on her flank if she flung herself at Austria's throat in Transylvania. It would furnish the allies with a veteran Bulgarian army to march upon Turkey through Thrace, and it would give the allies the Bulgarian port of Dedeagatch, on the Aegean Sea, for the landing of their own troops to co-operate with the allied navies at Constantinople.

Prince Alexander of Serbia

Bulgaria's Demands.

Bulgaria makes no secret of her willingness to be bought for such assistance. But she has only one price. The Crown Prince of Serbia, Regent in his country, can alone pay it in full. This he persistently refuses to do.

Bulgaria demands, above all else, that part of Macedonia which is inhabited by Bulgarians and which is in the possession of Serbia. To reclaim Macedonia from Turkey, and in pursuance of the ideal of nationality. Czar Ferdinand began the first Balkan War, fortified by a solemn agreement with Greece and Serbia that, in the spoils, Macedonia was to go to Bulgaria. The blood of thousands of Bulgarian patriots was shed in the victorious campaigns of Ferdinand. Greece and Serbia became fearful of Ferdinand's ambitions to dominate in the Balkans. They preferred to entrap and betray him.

Alexander, the twenty-four-year-old commander-in-chief of the Serbian army, captured Monastir from Turkey, thus bringing about the fall of the whole of Macedonia, and from Monastir the Bulgarians were barred by the sword as from Salonika.

Prince Stands Firm.

Rumania is to-day feverishly eager to restore the Dobrudja if thereby she can quiet the dogs of war upon her flank and rush her force of a million men into Transylvania. It comprises thousands of acres of territory and millions of inhabitants, Rumanian in blood, to the thousands of the Dobrudja, Austrin-Hungary, at the present moment, could not defend Transylvania. Greece will not give up Thrace to Bulgaria, but England, France and Russia have offered compensation elsewhere which is acceptable. It is only Serbia which is the stumbling block, because it is Macedonia which Bulgaria demands first and last, and for which she will not be compensated elsewhere.

June 24 of last year King Peter a man of seventy-three and weak in health, left his capital and the Crown Prince was appointed Regent. Alexander has coldly rejected every compromise which included the giving up of a foot of territory now held by Serbia. His father is ensconced at some watering place away from Belgrade. His elder brother, Prince George, has been dancing and dining in the hotels of the Riviera.

Canaries sing best in the subdued light.

Tea is the acme of perfection, being all pure, delicious tea. Black, Mixed or Green.

Hints for the Farmer.

There is big difference between economy and stinginess.

We have seen a man treat a $150 horse as though he was worth only $1.50.

The telephone cannot take the place of a hired man, but it helps wonderfully.

To get white cauliflower tie the leaves over the head as soon as the head is formed.

A hog in a good pasture or one that is fed regularly seldom does much damage by rooting.

Scald the drinking vessels in the poultry yard often so they will not harbor disease germs.

Countries adapted to sheep raising become large consumers of mutton as they increase in size.

A garden is more bother than it is worth unless you get fruits and vegetables that are really better than those you can buy.

Make it a point to have some choice male lambs to sell to your neighbors who would like something better than they now have.

When setting any of the bush fruits the top should be pruned to correspond to the root pruning the plant gets in transplanting.

It is about as profitable to try to do two things at once as it is to try to raise two crops on the same piece of ground at the same time.

The wise dairyman will keep his best cows, and not let the buyer tempt him even with a good price. The better the cows the better the profits.

If the onions are not growing well, a little nitrate of soda or hen manure sown broadcast, before or during a rain, often helps them to fill out.

The cow's udder should be well washed and dried with a coarse cloth before milking, and the milker's hands should be washed after every cow.

Warm weather is the time to make growth in the hogs. Push the shoats along, giving them good pasture range and feeding all they will eat up clean.

There are many rough hillsides and pastures which are now bringing no returns that could be made profitable, were they planted to nut trees, especially walnuts.

Celery, cabbage, and other plants of this sort do much better if transplanted once or twice before going into the field. They will form a much heavier root system, which is desirable in all plants.

A good many farmers who neglected to plant an orchard and shade trees while they were young waste more time now wishing they had them than it would take to plant them in the beginning.

Use the spray pump to whitewash your poultry house. Make a good whitewash, adding a little carbolic acid, and spray the building thoroughly, covering every bit of the surface, and the house will be wonderfully sweetened.

In choosing a breed of cattle or any other class of live stock due consideration should be given to the question of environment. Where one breed would be a failure another would perhaps be a success.

The silo is not the only way of preventing the usual loss from the corn fields, but it is the only way and the best way for preserving the feeding elements of the corn plant. The silo adds nothing to the feeding nutriments. On the other hand, there is a slight loss through fermentation, but it does increase the palatability greatly.

The Housewife's Corner

Dainty Dishes.

Bananas in Casserole.—Peel six bananas, lay in shallow casserole and sprinkle with three tablespoons sugar mixed with pinch of salt. Add a little lemon juice and one tablespoon melted butter. Cook about twenty minutes with cover on, then remove cover and brown.

Blueberry Betty.—Remove crust from slices of stale bread. Butter bread and alternate with blueberries in pudding dish. Sprinkle each layer of blueberries with sugar, a little nutmeg and lemon juice. Bake in covered dish until berries are tender, remove cover and brown top, and serve either hot or cold with cream and sugar.

White Mashed Potatoes.—Butter omelet pan and put into it cold boiled potatoes chopped rather fine. Sprinkle with salt, dot with butter and add a little stock or hot water. Cover and cook slowly until heated through. Turn out upon hot dish without stirring. Do not allow potatoes to brown, but merely to absorb stock and butter.

Creamed Chicken.—One and one-half cups diced, cooked chicken, two eggs, one and one-half cups milk, three tablespoons butter, four tablespoons flour, one-half teaspoon celery salt, salt and pepper. Boil eggs hard. Melt butter, add flour and stir milk in slowly. Season with salt and pepper, add eggs (cut up), diced chicken and celery salt. Serve on toast if desired.

Plum Pudding.—Stew one quart plums. Remove pits, sweeten to taste, add a little grated orange peel or nutmeg and pour into well-buttered earthen pudding dish, or custard cups. Cover with spoonfuls of rich biscuit dough, soft enough to drop from spoon, or with drop batter made of one cup sweet cream or rich milk, one egg, one teaspoon baking powder and flour enough to make soft batter. Steam or bake one-half hour and turn out into serving dishes, with fruit on top. Serve with hard sauce.

Fairy Salad.—Use medium sized potatoes. Wash but do not peel. Scoop out soft part, and slice thin, making rings of red. Take seeds out of green peppers and slice peppers into rings. Slice Bermuda onions and separate into rings. Toss lightly in French dress, to give a shining coat to each ring; being careful not to break tomato rings. Serve in a glass dish, surrounded with ring of parsley. Parsley, by the way, is said to destroy the odor of onions on the breath.

Brisket of Beef With Beans.—Put one quart of beans (or one pint, depending on size of family) to soak overnight. Drain off water and parboil, changing water three times, and to the last water adding teaspoon soda. Boil slowly, until easily pierced, put one-half into stone jar or pot, lay on top, carefully trimmed brisket of beef and follow with rest of beans. Make a mixture of three tablespoons molasses, one teaspoon mustard, one quarter-teaspoon salt and a little cold water, enough to mix. Add enough hot water to make sufficient liquid to cover contents of jar, pour into jar, cover and let cook very slowly seven or eight hours.

Quick Brown Bread.—Two cups graham flour, two cups whole wheat flour, one and three-quarters cups milk, one-half cup brown sugar, one level teaspoon salt, one and one-half cups raisins, three level teaspoons melted butter. Mix dry ingredients thoroughly. Add butter and milk and mix quickly. Add raisins, floured. Bake in well greased pan in moderate oven. Forty-five minutes makes one large loaf. By substituting molasses for sugar and two cups sour milk and one and one-half level teaspoons soda for sweet milk and baking powder an equally good, wholesome and satisfying bread can be made. Nice for picnic sandwiches. Remains fresh for several days.

Just Common Salt.

Salt in solution is an antidote to many poisons.

All skin diseases are relieved by salt added to water.

A pinch of salt added to mustard prevents its scouring.

Cut flowers may be kept fresh by addingsalt to the water.

Salt dissolved in ammonia or alcohol will remove grease spots.

Salt thrown in any burning substance will stop the smoke and blaze.

Around the House.

No matter how clean your home may be, milk will deteriorate if exposed to the air.

Left-over sandwiches especially cheese mixtures, are appetizing if slightly browned in a hot oven.

To make jam or marmalade look clear without skimming it add a piece of butter the size of an egg before removing the fruit from the fire.

With pea soup serve croutons; with mock turtle soup serve lemon cut in quarters and passed separately; with mulligatawny soup serve boiled rice.

Add the grated rind of an orange and a few tablespoonfuls of juice to a sponge cake. It gives it the right flavor and prevents quick drying out.

Dry brown paper that has previously been treated with saltpetre water and a little dried lavender will clear the air of disagreeable cooking odors if burned on a flat tin.

If a mud stain is rubbed with the cut halves of a raw potato, it will come out, though sponging with clear warm water to which a little alcohol has been added may be necessary afterward.

It is unnecessary to spend time in shelling peas. Wash and place the pods in boiling water. When they crack, the peas go to the bottom and the pods float on the surface and are skimmed off.

New agate and tin cooking utensils that require seasoning before use should be filled with a mixture of one teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda to a quart of scalding water, left for two hours and washed and dried as usual.

Sheets of blotting paper slipped in the back of a piano, by raising the top lid, will keep the wires from rusting at seashore or near water or when the house is closed. Let down the panel under the keyboard and put some in there.

If a kettle, to be used for fruit preserving, has been slightly burned on the bottom, or if there is a fear of the syrup burning, put several ordinary china marbles in the kettle and by their movement about this will be prevented.

SMART SCHOOL DRESS.

With the approach of the opening days of the fall semester, the young ladies will have to turn their attention to the provision of their wardrobes with appropriate school clothes.

The Ladies' Home Journal design here shown is excellent for school use for it is simple and practical, yet very smart and up-to-date.

Pattern No. 8908 has a slightly long shoulder and waist with vest effect, having roll collar and full length or shorter sleeves. Skirt in four gores with belt and pockets. Sizes 14, 16, 18, 20. Size 18 requires 6¾ yards 36-inch material, with ⅛ yard 18-inch or wider lace.

ITALY'S KIND QUEEN.

What She Did to Help the Coral Fishers of Torre del Greco.

A kindly little act that shows something of the quick wit and ready sympathy of Queen Helena of Italy in recorded. Some years ago the coral fishers of Torre del Greco, near Naples, were in hard straits. The value of coral had fallen so low that they were no longer able to find purchasers for their harvest. At last in their despair they besought the Queen to come to their aid.

At the first great court ball that was held that year at the Quirinal, the Queen, to the surprise of all beholders, were about her neck a collar composed of six rows of coral instead of her superb collar of pearls, and her black hair was crowned with a diadem of coral and brilliants. From that evening the mode changed. Old coral ornaments that had been hidden away for years and years were again displayed at the jewelers, and were snapped up by eager purchasers. Queen Helena's object was attained, and that court ball marked the beginning of more prosperous days for the coral fishers of Torre del Greco.

Not Hard.

How long did it take you to learn to run a motor car?"

"Oh, three or four."

"Weeks?"

"No, motor cars."

IN BRITISH WOMEN'S PAGEANT.

IRELAND ENGLAND SCOTLAND

The picture shows the representatives of Ireland, England and Scotland in the recent munition workers' pageant in London, when more than 30,000 women marched through the streets demanding that they be allowed to take the places of the men in the munition factories in order to allow the men to go to the front.

A CURIOUS COINCIDENCE.

Newsy Notes of Britain's Fighting Men In the Field.

Soldiers are forbidden by International law to pretend to be dead or wounded with the object of taking the enemy at a disadvantage.

Eight companies of cyclists can carry 256,000 rounds of ammunition as against 72,000 carried by a whole cavalry division of nearly 2,500 men.

The Life Guards are the only regiment who now retain their own medical and veterinary officers and have mounted pioneers, who ride before the regiment bearing the axes.

It is said that one of the newest types of British torpedo has an effective range of four miles and a force sufficient to blow a hole as large as a haystack in the side of a battleship.

A British army corps is approximately, 38,000 men; an Austrian is about 53,000 men; while the strength of French, Russian and German army corps varies from 40,000 men to 55,000 men.

An artilleryman invalided from the front relates that in one 6-inch German shell there was discovered a brass candlestick, whilst another contained a bicycle crank and a quantity of broken glass.

Motor-wagons used by the allies on the Continent have their hoods painted in a gigantic check design of violently contrasted colors, thus making them less easy to "spot" from aeroplanes.

By a curious coincidence, the 15th Hussars, quartered round an old chateau in Flanders, have tethered their horses to stout iron rings used for the same purpose by the 15th Hussars a hundred years ago—after Waterloo.

All our guns at the front are periodically examined by experts, and it is said that though some of these weapons have now fired many thousands of rounds, they are, for all practical purposes, as good as when they left the shops.

THE FUSSY "FATHERLAND."

In Germany Freedom of Utterance Is Not Allowed.

Rules and regulations are paramount in every branch of German life. It would be hopeless for anyone not born and bred in the land not to sin, through ignorance, against some of the innumerable petty laws and customs.

As an example of the absurdity of social etiquette, it is looked upon as the height of bad manners for a visitor to occupy the couch in a drawing-room, unless expressly invited to do so by the hostess, as a mark of special favor. Should a hapless foreigner from a more free-and-easy land commit such an offence she is looked at askance, but never told in what way she has transgressed.

For anyone, except the very poor, to occupy a seat in the gallery of a theatre is, to use the German phrase, "unfine." What must the Germans in London think of the nightly queues of well-dressed people outside of the West-End theatres?

To play a musical instrument or to sing in a room with an open window is an offence against the law, and punishable by imprisonment. Woe on the sea was demonstrated that happened in the Gulf of between Aug. 16 and 19, when Russian fleet sank or damaged over than two German cruisers night torpedo boats, and at the time a British submarine put one of the best German dreadnts. The only loss to the was the loss of one Russian oat.

Sir Wilfred Laurier said in a th at Sherbrooke, Quebec: "I n it with all my power that it le duty of Canada to give to e Britain in this war all the tance that is in the power of

TRIBUTE TO BRITISH NAVY.

"Saved the World From Destruction By Barbarism."

The London Daily Express publishes an interview with M. Augagneur, the French Minister of Marine, who said that the British fleet "saved the world from destruction by the barbarians of the twentieth century; it saved us all from utter desolation. I have no patience with people who hint that France is not satisfied with the British efforts. You promised naval co-operation, you gave it, and you created an army for our mutual benefit. The question of munitions has nothing to do with it. All our ideas of modern warfare were at fault; we based them on what had taken place in the Russo-Japanese war and in the Balkans. We even went back to 1870, and what happened? We had to begin all over again.

"But do not you think that Germany made mistakes too? She thought of a war that might last four months. I know that the enemy was not prepared for a war that will last as long as this one will. If she had she would not have left undone certain things that have been so left.

"I read your British papers and I have seen some of them keep calling on the British to wake up, but what country in the world could have produced a voluntary army such as yours has done?

"After a year of hard fighting I see the path leading to victory.

"What reasons are there for being pessimistic? I know of none. In the Dardanelles we have a hard job before us, but this is no time for faultfinding or for seeking broad shoulders to bear the blame of possible mistakes. We have to force the Narrows, and force them we shall. With your army you have achieved the apparently impossible. Your navy is working in the dark, without a word of its daily doings being chronicled. Victory is in sight. I do not pose as a seer, and when I say that victory is in sight I do not mean that it will come within the next few weeks, or even months, but in the spring, well, you will see."

Most Patriotic Word.

The drill sergeant of one of the crack regiments has discovered that "Lewis" is the most patriotic word in the English language. He informed a body of recruits the other day that "E" stood for England and "W" for Wales, "I" for Ireland and "S" for Scotland. "And what does the 'L' stand for?" inquired one of the recruits. "'L,' oh, that's for the Kaiser," explained the sergeant, rejoiced at getting an opening for the completion of his joke."

LLOYD-GEORGE NOT A SMALL MAN.

Short, But Weighs One Hundred and Eighty-Nine Pounds.

In all his ways Mr. Lloyd-George is very human. To give a little example: Hearing Mrs. Lloyd-George telephoning for one of the maids to go from Downing Street to Walton Heath, he at once said, "I should let her stay at Downing Street to-night. This is the girl's night off. I expect she will want to meet her sweetheart. It would be a pity to disappoint them."

Not only is Mr. Lloyd-George very human, but in his own home he is one of the most domesticated of men. But there is one task he does not like, and that is carving. Mrs. Lloyd-George usually carves, and when she is away her husband's performances with the carving knife are the subject of much amusement in the family circle. No one, however, enjoys the fun more than Mr. Lloyd-George himself. Incidentally, it might be mentioned that on Sunday afternoons he always has a special dish—an apple pasty or turnover—prepared for his tea.

Owing to his shortness in stature many people think that Mr. Lloyd-George is a small man and lacking in physical power. This, however, is quite a mistake. The truth is that Mr. Lloyd-George, who weighs thirteen and a half stone, is a very sturdy, powerful person, with a wonderful physique and nervous system.

Gift of Sleep.

He has a great gift of sleep. When he is tired he will go into a room, lock the door, lie down, pull a shawl over himself, and go to sleep for half an hour. When he awakes he is as fresh as a new pin.

Being by profession a solicitor, it is scarcely surprising to learn that Mr. Lloyd-George takes a keen interest in criminal cases. He will follow the evidence of a big murder trial very closely, and will afterwards describe to you, in course of conversation, what questions he would have put to the witnesses, and what verdict he would have given if he had been on the jury.

Rt. Hon. Lloyd George

He is a great reader of newspapers. Very little escapes him, from foreign news to breach of promise cases, while in regard to books he loves most historical novels. Mr. Lloyd-George is a great philosopher and has carefully thought out most of the problems of life, placing courage above all other virtues. Sometimes, he says, patience is the highest form of courage.

Possessing the Welshman's natural love of music, Mr. Lloyd-George rarely misses an opportunity of going to hear an oratorio. But nothing seems to please him better than to spend an hour singing Welsh hymns, accompanied by his daughter Olwen on the piano. When he has finished one of his favorites, he will usually say, "That is a splendid old hymn; now let us have so-and-so."

Theatricals and Music.

Furthermore, everyone present must join in the hymn, and those who cannot sing Welsh have to do their best in a foreign language.

Theatricals as well as music interests the Minister of Munitions, for he himself is a born mimic. When he returned from a recent trip to Wales he gave a most graphic description of the manner in which the various types of soldiers—the collier, farm laborer, mechanic, shop assistant, etc.—marched, finishing up, however, with the appropriate observation, "But they will all bayonet the Germans the same way. They are all actuated by the same marvellous spirit."

Five times in the history of England the British Navy has stood between the would-be master of Europe and the attainment of his ambition. Charlemagne, Charles V., Philip II. of Spain, Louis XIV. of France, and Napoleon all aspired to universal dominion, but each of them was checked by British sea power.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, AUGUST 29TH.

Lesson IX.—God's Care of Elijah, 1 Kings 17. 1-16. Golden Text: 1 Peter 5. 7.

1. Elijah's Prophecy Concerning Dew and Rain (Verses 1-7).

Verse 1. The Tishbite—A native of Tishbe in Gilead on the east side of the Jordan River. The place has not been definitely identified. Elijah's appearances are always sudden, and he does not remain long. His coming to Ahab is abrupt and his prophecy without any warning whatsoever. Other prophets appeared in the same way: for example, Ahijah (1 Kings 11. 29); Shemaia (2 Chron. 11. 2); Azariah (2 Chron. 15. 1). Where evil is rife the word of the Lord is sure to come with all the force of the unexpected.

As . . . the God of Israel liveth—Elijah spoke not on his own authority, but on that of Jehovah. "God," he said, "will speak through me, according to my word."

3. Hide thyself—His life would be in danger because of the anger of Ahab and Jezebel his wife. They would consider Elijah not the "announcer," but the cause of the drought.

Brook Cherith — Not elsewhere mentioned. It was not a brook in the ordinary sense, but a ravine, down through which the torrent rains of winter were rushed to the Jordan. It was dry except at the place where Elijah was to hide. As it was long and narrow and deep, it would make a good hiding place. Tradition locates Cherith in the neighborhood of Jericho, but "before the Jordan," is now thought to mean "eastward," hence the brook is to be thought of as one of numerous water courses flowing into the Jordan from the east.

4. I have commanded the ravens to feed thee—These birds would make their nests in the coves of the ravines. The word ravens in Hebrew can be made to mean "merchants" or "Arabians." As the "ravens" were "unclean" birds, the Jews have favored the reading "merchants" or "Arabians" (that is, travelling caravans) who gave Elijah to eat as they passed by.

6. And the ravens brought — The tradition is that they brought bread in the morning and flesh at night.

11. The Widow of Zarephath (Verses 8-16).

9. Zarephath — On the sea-coast, about eight miles south of Sidon.

I have commanded a widow there to sustain thee—This was as precarious a source of sustenance as the dried-up brook and the food of the ravens. For with a drought in the land, a widow would not have more than enough for herself and family.

10. Gathering sticks—The poverty of the widow is indicated by the fact she was obliged to pick up every stray bit of wood for fuel.

11. Was going to fetch it — Her hospitality, even with starvation facing her, was as ready as her faith, a moment later, was responsive.

12. Jar . . . cruse—The jar (or barrel) and cruse were the necessary domestic articles of every home, and would thus be particularized.

That we may eat it and die—The last meal, another evidence of her material poverty.

15. She went and did—Faith, the substance of her spiritual riches, was great.

RUSSIAN PEOPLE AROUSED.

Situation Is Looked Upon With Optimism in London.

The London newspapers look upon the Russian situation quite optimistically.

The Times declares: "While the position of certain portions of the Russian forces still remains critical there is every reason to believe the excellent order with which their withdrawal has been executed thus far will be maintained until all have reached the new line of defence."

Little additional news has reached London regarding the Russians' last days in Warsaw. The Times correspondent in that city, describing the retiring Russian troops, says:

"There was no feeling of hopelessness, although disappointment was written on every face. The long Russian retreat, culminating in the fall of Warsaw, has touched the lethargic temperament of the Russian nation and to-day the war has the support of the entire Russian people. There is not the vaguest suggestion anywhere of peace without a decision."

The Daily Mail quotes from the Berliner Tageblatt an account of the situation in Warsaw the day before its fall, written by an eye-witness, who says:

"The main fight has ended, and chaos was left. A ghastly silence reigned in the city, broken only by the thunder of cannon. Shops were shuttered and barred. Theatres were closed, but moving picture houses were crowded. In some places mobs were plundering empty homes and factories. Russian secret police still were busy in every corner, and executions frequently were conducted from the citadel. As I fled I passed thousands of wagons piled with wounded."

Patriotic Picnic Programme

RED CROSS BENEFIT

All arrangements have been completed for the mammoth patriotic picnic to be held in Riverside Park, Paisley, on Thursday of this week.

A procession will be formed at the town hall at one o'clock, to be headed by the band. Decorated automobiles and driving outfits will line up, also the Boy Scouts, citizens and school children and march to the Park.

The lacrosse club had intended holding sports on the same date as that selected by the ladies for this picnic, but withdrew in favor of the ladies' scheme, and have now consented to play a game without any charge to the picnic committee, as well as assisting in other ways in the programme. The lacrosse boys are thus showing themselves to be as patriotic as other citizens in promoting and assisting in the day's proceedings.

The list of sports and games to be run off includes a baseball match between the Port Elgin and Paisley teams, a lacrosse match in which the Paisley Colts will strive to trim the regular team, a relay race and a number of other contests for fleet footed men, boys, ladies and girls.

A patriotic address will be given by Capt. R. T. Cockburn, returned from the front, who served with the 15th Battalion 48th Highlanders, was gassed and wounded at St Julien and is now discharged. He is a Canadian, and was formerly an officer in the Wellington County Regiment, resigning his commission to go to the front. If you want to hear an account of the war operations from a soldier who has been there, don't miss this. Capt. Cockburn has proved himself to be a brave soldier, and as he is a fluent speaker, his address will be a thrilling one.

A recruiting station will be open on the grounds, in charge of Major Hay and Dr. Houston, the county recruiting officers, to enlist men for overseas service.

There will be numerous other features to attract the coin to the Red Cross Fund — an automobile jitney service, for which the use of every car in town has been generously granted; booths for the sale of flowers, badges, buttons, refreshments, etc. Admission to grounds 15c.

The big military tent of the 32nd Batt. is erected on the grounds.

For the concert at night in the town hall there will be a program of drills, songs and choruses, also music by the orchestra. Admission—15c, or 2 tickets for 25c.

Get Ready for the Big Paisley Fair

Nature has been lavish in her favors to the growers of products of the soil this year, and there should be some record-beating exhibits at the fall fairs. Everyone in the district should do their duty towards making the show a success by swelling the list of entries and exhibits in every department. Get a prize list from Secretary Barnett or at THE ADVOCATE office, and prepare to do your bit for the fair of 1915. Take note of the many special premiums offered by business men and others. Discussing fall fairs, the Farmer's Advocate remarks that if rural dwellers remain away from the annual exhibition, the reason is not that they grudge the payment of the admission fee, but too often they consider the loss of the day on the farm is not compensated by the enjoyment and ideas received at the fair, and too often farmers do not attend in a receptive mood. Criticisms are often heard from spectators that they have better live stock, fruit, farm produce and other articles at home. If such be true, they should exhibit or keep their opinions to themselves, for they have not done their duty in making the exhibition a success. The way to have a successful fair is through cordial co-operation on the part of all who have an interest in the development and progress of the community in which they live.

A football tournament is to be one of the special features of the second day's proceedings this year. Suitable prizes are offered for the first and second winning teams competing. The secretaries of clubs that intend to play for these prizes are requested to notify Fair secretary as early as possible, so that complete arrangements can be made for the event.

CONTINUATION SCHOOL RE-OPENING, SEPT. 1st, 1915

FOREWORD

With the re-opening of the Continuation School in September, the attention of the pupils and parents concerned is called to the following courses and points connected therewith:

(a) A pupil may prepare for Entrance to Normal School. This course requires three or four years after passing the Entrance to High School. The time taken, whether three or four years, depends largely on the ability of the pupil and his or her application to the work.

(b) At the end of the second year in Continuation or High School the pupil must write the lower school examination conducted by the Department. Without passing this examination the pupil cannot enter Normal. That is, in order to enter Normal pupils must pass the examinations indicated in (a) and (b).

(c) A pupil may prepare for Entrance to Model. This may be done in two years. If successful in passing this examination the pupil may enter Model School and obtain a teaching certificate valid for five years. This certificate, however, only entitles the holder to teach in a limited area prescribed by the Education Department. Such a certificate is not valid in every part of Ontario. Candidates who have failed on the Entrance to Normal examination, but have passed the Lower School examination for Entrance to Normal, may on application to the Minister be admitted to a Model School, provided they have obtained 50 per cent of the aggregate of the marks for the Middle School examination and 34 per cent of the marks for each question paper thereof.

It is now generally recognized that pupils preparing for Entrance to Normal certificates should spend four years in preparation from the time they pass the entrance. However, it is not desirable for numerous reasons to place a time restriction on any pupil as to when he shall write on an examination. Although the Department specifies four years as the time of the course, if a pupil's work during the term shows that he is reasonably well prepared to write on the examination at the end of three years then the pupil is entitled to take the examination if he sees fit. Whether or not a pupil writes on an examination is largely a matter for the pupils and parents concerned to decide.

In conclusion it may be said that during the present year pupils will have every opportunity for doing successful work. Examination results will depend on the diligence and application of the pupils concerned, and if these are forthcoming no alarm need be felt about the results. Successful results, however, cannot be obtained where candidates shirk their work and fail to show a fair amount of application.

On the opening of school candidates will be advised as to textbooks, courses, etc. Any information as to courses, etc., may be obtained from the principal. For our first year in our new premises we would like good results which can only be obtained largely by co-operation of all parties concerned. With a fair amount of concentration and work we should during the ensuing school year obtain results reflecting no discredit on our modern and well equipped school.

G. B. BELL

—The first harvest excursions to the west on Tuesday carried quite a number from Paisley and vicinity. Among those who went were: George Hepburn, Alex McLean, Thos Rae, Wm Sutherland, Stewart McLaren, Mrs D Hay and son of Paisley; Miss Myrtle Robb, Louis Grant, Arthur Rankin, — Bloom, of Hilderaly; Geo Oldrieve, of Arran; Eldon McGillivery, 12th Bruce; three Stanley brothers and Miss Stanley, 2nd Bruce; — McNally and Wm Reid, of Greenock; Ross Woods and Jas McKay, of Lorne.

Dunblane Garden Party

The Presbyterians of this settlement were highly favored by the weather man on Thursday evening and there was an immense crowd at the annual garden party held on the beautiful grounds of Mr John Scott's home. The programme was contributed largely by talent from Paisley and Port Elgin, and the Kincardine pipe band, which is under the leadership of Mr Wm Young, an old Paisley boy. Under the management the organization is fast attaining a renown equal to the city pipe bands. Proceeds of the entertainment totalled over $160.

Bowman Trophy Again Here

Messrs. Muir, Rae, Shoemaker and Dr. Allen (skip) relieved the Walkerton bowlers of the responsibility of holding this popular piece of silverware, defeating the county town friendlies on their own green by a score of 18 to 16, on Thursday evening last. On Saturday J. Longe's rink from Southampton came down for a try, but the rain shower became such a downpour as to compel even the sailor fellows to quit when they were pulling down a big lead gained by the home players. They blew in again on Monday, when Paisley again piled up an early lead that couldn't be wholly reefed, and the silverware remained here until the next day, when an Owen Sound rink skipped by Rev Mr Rodgers got away with it after a close contest that wasn't over until the last end was played. Score—13—16.

I saw 'Fruit-a-tives' advertised with a letter in which some one recommended them very highly, so I tried them. The results were more than satisfactory, and I have no hesitation in recommending 'Fruit-a-tives'" ANNIE A. CORBETT.

Time is proving that 'Fruit-a-tives' can always be depended upon to give prompt relief in all cases of Constipation and Stomach Trouble.

Now at the Front

In the last letter written from Shorncliffe by Pte. Thos Babcock to his brother Sam here, Tom expected to go to the front on Aug. 2nd, so he is probably in or near the trenches by this time.

Double Affliction

Mrs. (Rev.) McLaren, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. L. R. Putnam for some time, was called to her home in the west last week by the death of her eldest son. The latter had been operated upon for appendicitis, and his death was due to weakness of the heart. Mrs. McLaren was accompanied as far as Toronto by Mr. Putnam. The day following her departure Mrs. Putnam received word that another brother serving at the front had been wounded. While it is hard to bear up under double afflictions such as are coming to this family, there is some consolation in realizing that the wounded soldier is perhaps more likely to survive in the hospital than in the trenches.

An Old Resident Gone

The remains of the late Mrs. George Fraser were brought from Owen Sound on Thursday by train, and laid to rest beside those of her husband in Stark Vale cemetery. Mrs. Fraser had been a resident of Paisley settlement since the early fifties. Her maiden name was Ann McArthur, and she was born in the Isle of Mull, Scotland. When a young woman of 19 years her family came to Canada, first settling in King Tp., but about 1854 came with the inrush of new settlers to Bruce Tp. The only member of that large family now living is Mr Murdoch McArthur. Since her marriage Mrs. Fraser had been a continuous resident of Paisley until about three months ago, when she went to live with her daughter in Owen Sound. She was predeceased by her husband in 1901. A family of two daughters and four sons are living, viz: Mrs. Wm. McFadden, of London; Mrs. T. C. Craig, of Owen Sound; William, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.; Alexander, of Duluth; John, in Minnesota, and Charles, of Elmvale.

TORONTO FAIR BEST ON RECORD

Directors Planning Programme on Scale Commensurate with a Record Attendance

There was never a time in the thirty-seven years of its history when the Canadian National Exhibition promised more real instruction and entertainment than this year. In addition to the marvelous proofs of the manner in which the patriot at home is taking care of his responsibilities in the way of increased production that the patriot at the front may have the wherewithal to keep his place in the battleline, there will be special features of patriotic and historic significance.

The big war spectacle in front of the Grand Stand will be quite the most elaborate pyrotechnic ever presented by the Fair, while the Model Military Camp, aeroplane flights and the mining and torpedoing of ships in the harbour, supplemented by the war trophies will be a revelation.

The new Grand Midway, with its army of spielers, never presented a more diversified list of attractions, while the Hippodrome and Circus in front of the Grand Stand will be a triumph in the amusement line. The Fair this year in all departments promises to excell any previous one ever held at Toronto.

The Directors are looking forward to a repetition of the "Million Year" and are planning their programme on a scale to fit this immense attendance.

Subscription Arrears to The Advocate

THERE is several hundred dollars still due us on arrears for subscription to The Advocate. We have quite regularly sent our accounts out in an endeavor to collect all. Some, however, have neglected to respond to our requests for payment. Subscribers who neglect the little matter of remitting regularly do not, perhaps, understand the position we are placed in because of not receiving from them what is due us. We do not believe there are more than only a few who would deliberately beat us out of our dues, and we do not propose to treat delinquents as rogues unless we actually find they are such. Nevertheless, we are obliged to make a special effort to collect all arrears, and we have handed over to The Publishers' Adjusting Association a list of behind-handers who will hear from them immediately. Prompt attention to the first notice of indebtedness will save additional expense.

We derive no particular pleasure from the pursuit of delinquents, but it seems that it is a necessary part of the business of managing a newspaper office, so we must, that's all.

No More Machine-Guns Needed for Canadians

FUND FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS

Senator Loughead, acting Minister of Militia, makes the following announcement: "Donations for machine guns already have exceeded the expectations of the Government. The Government has placed an order for all the machine guns at present available, and further donations would not result in furnishing any additional equipment of guns to our troops.

In the event of the public desiring to consider wherein they might otherwise exercise their generosity, we suggest the following to your consideration: The Government has appointed a Commission, called the Military Hospital Commission, of which a member of the Government is President, to administer out of the public funds the maintenance of military hospitals and convalescent homes for our sick and wounded soldiers. On discharge from these hospitals and homes the disabled will receive pensions at fixed rates. These pensions, while being larger per man than those allowed the British soldier, will in numerous instances be insufficient to meet the needs of the recipient; and to the end of further assisting them in the making of their livelihood, we are, in response to many suggestions, organizing a fund to be known as the Disablement Fund.

The plan of administering this fund by the above-mentioned Commission would depend on its amount. If a sum is obtained which will produce from investments a sufficiently large revenue, this income would be expended, but if not large enough to enable this to be done, both capital and income would be distributed on well defined lines. Each case will be treated on its merits and assistance given in many ways. For instance, a totally disabled man could have his pension augmented by a sum to enable him to obtain additional physical comforts, while a partially disabled man, if unable to follow his former employment, would be assisted to take up some new occupation with in the scope of his crippled ability. These men, having offered their services to their country, placed their lives in jeopardy, and in so doing have suffered total or partial disablement. This should appeal to the public as deserving the most favorable recognition.

—It is now recognized that the French victory in the Argonne section of the western battle front marked the turning point of the war. The advantages gained by the French in the face of the gigantic offensive directed against them by the German Crown Prince proved the strength of the Allied position. The enemy again failed in his schedule and suffered tremendous losses. His failures at this juncture become more significant than when the French won their first great victory on the Marne a year ago. When the Allies' big drive comes to be made we may look for an advance all along the line, and disaster to fall upon the faces of the foe.

FEELS LIKE A NEW WOMAN

As Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Dispelled Backache, Headaches and Dizziness.

Piqua, Ohio.—"I would be very ungrateful if I failed to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound the praise it deserves. For I have taken it at different times and it always relieved me when other medicines failed, and when I hear a woman complain I always recommend it. Last winter I was attacked with a severe case of organic weakness. I had backache, pains in my hips and over my kidneys, headache, dizziness, lassitude, had no energy, limbs ached and I was always tired. I was hardly able to do my housework. I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound on one other occasion, and it had helped me so I took it again and it has built me up, until now I feel like a new woman. You have my hearty consent to use my name and testimonial in any way and I hope it will benefit suffering women."—Mrs. ORPHA TURNER, 411 S. Wayne St., Piqua, Ohio.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

—What will happen to the German fleet if it comes out of hiding to fight on the sea was demonstrated by what happened in the Gulf of Riga between Aug. 16 and 19, when the Russian fleet sank or damaged no fewer than two German cruisers and eight torpedo boats, and at the same time a British submarine put away one of the best German dreadnoughts. The only loss to the Allies was the loss of one Russian gunboat.

—Sir Wilfred Laurier said in a speech at Sherbrooke, Quebec: "I affirm it with all my power that it is the duty of Canada to give to Great Britain in this war all the assistance that is in the power of Canada. My confidence in the present Government at Ottawa does not ooze from the soles of my boots, but at the outbreak of the war I considered it my duty to support it in its war policy. I have supported it in that policy ever since, and I will support it again. The reason is that this war is a contest between German institutions and British institutions. British institutions mean freedom. German institutions mean despotism. That is why we as Canadians have such a vital interest in this war."

—Sir Geo. Foster on "Duty of Canadians:" "Every other country in the war owns every able-bodied citizen, and it has a citizen-ship trained in the art of war. Germany and Austria have their manhood at their absolute call. Your shirker and your coward could find no place for consideration in Austria and Germany. He cannot hide behind his neighbor, who may possess better qualities than his own. Every man of the British Empire is free. The shirker can shirk, while his loyal comrades go to the front. To-day it is up to the people of Canada and the British Empire to prove that they are worthy of the liberty and freedom that they enjoy. To-day is a testing time for the people of Canada. Do we measure up to the advantages of liberty and freedom that we enjoy, or shall we fall to the level of nations who have conscription and deny full liberty to their own people? Such a test has never been made before, and it is up to us to prove that we have got the spirit and calibre to meet the test."

Children Cry
FOR FLETCHER'S
CASTORIA

The Orillia Packet says:—For fifty years and perhaps a considerable longer period, Orillia, with one brief interval, has had a brewery. By the end of next month, however, it will have none. Mr Wright's decision to sell out and withdraw from the unequal contest imposed upon him by Local Option is no surprise. One after another the conditions which marked the era of licenses change or disappear, and soon nearly every evidence that either the manufacture or sale of strong drink at one time received legal sanction in this town will have disappeared. If anybody asks, "Does prohibition prohibit?" point him to the transformation wrought in Orillia during the brief span which has elapsed since, by an overwhelming vote of the ratepayers, the traffic was put under legal ban. At the end of next month Mr T. H. Crump will take possession of the brewery property, and will begin the work of turning the building into a wholesale and retail grocery and provision store. More power to his elbow.

POPULARITY OF THE KING GROWS

HIS MAJESTY DOING "HIS BIT" IN THE WAR.

His Is Attending to His Royal Duties With Tact and Wisdom.

The following from the New York World, which has never been prone to say complimentary things about British royalty, is as significant as it is interesting:

While the British statesmen are making shreds and tatters of each other's reputation in their public quarrels, King George goes quietly on his way attending to the duties of his position, "playing the game" as far as he himself is concerned with great discretion and wisdom. His popularity with his subjects has wonderfully increased accordingly, which is all the more remarkable because it was only in March, 1914, that the House of Commons witnessed an outburst against the sovereign, led by the Radical and Labor members, which had not been known there for nearly a century. It was at the time of the Ulster crisis.

Had to Coax Kitchener.

When the war began he kept himself in the background except for ornamental occasions, not having the constitutional privilege of his cousin, William II., of being the leader of the army in any sense of the word. It was only after much tactful persuasion that he obtained permission from Lord Kitchener for the Prince of Wales to remain at the front permanently. The King himself has been with the troops for only a short visit of a few days last fall. He has recently returned from a visit to Admiral Jellicoe and the navy.

But not a day passes that he is not engaged upon his humane labors for the soldiers, and these are, after all, of no mean importance in arousing loyalty, patriotism and enthusiasm for the war. The people have also become acquainted with their King through his daily intercourse in a way which before the war would have seemed hardly feasible, since it has meant the removal of many artificial barriers. But King George's kindly, simple nature has stood the test and the warm sympathy he has shown for the soldiers has become an asset for the Government.

Aid for Wounded.

The royal estate in Scotland at Balmoral has been in use as a convalescent home for wounded officers for many months, while Windsor Castle and Buckingham Palace are the centre of numerous arrangements, charitable in their nature, for the benefit of the soldiers. Beginning early in June, the King, assisted by the Queen, began entertaining daily parties of convalescent soldiers at tea at Buckingham Palace, twenty men being invited for each occasion, many of them being allowed to bring along their nurses or their near relatives. Tea is laid out in the gardens with as much careful thought on the part of His Majesty as if he were giving a garden party to the court, and the men remain throughout the whole afternoon enjoying the sunshine and fresh air and talking to the King. For several weeks this hospitality has been supplemented by drives in the royal motors and carriages, as King George has ordered that the royal mews be devoted to this purpose as much as possible. Parties are made up every day at the different London hospitals, and Sir Charles Fitzwilliam, the Crown Equerry, and Capt. Benbaw, superintendent of the mews, send around motor brakes or carriages to take the King's guests into the country.

Caring for Crippled.

The officials of the royal household, whose business it is to follow the King's example, have been inviting the soldiers to their country places for convalescence where hospital treatment was not necessary.

One of the most important charitable projects in which the King is interested is out at Roehampton, where a large residence, Roehampton House, has been fitted up for the soldiers and sailors who have lost limbs in the war. The old custom was to discharge such men from the hospital after the amputation and send the artificial limb after them. Of course, not being properly fitted, they were generally misfits and frequently were useless. Early in the war an appeal was made for a different method in treating these unfortunate men, and the result is now seen at Roehampton House, where the limbless sailors and soldiers are sent to be fitted by the most expert makers of artificial limbs. Fifty thousand dollars was granted from the Prince of Wales Fund, the War Office, the Red Cross and other organizations and King George and Queen Mary gave generously from their private purses. They make frequent visits to the men in the rounds which they take among the hospitals almost every day.

O'LEARY IS THEIR HERO.

Six Germans to One Irishman is Irish Fighting Measure Now.

A British correspondent at the front with the expeditionary force in Flanders sends the following graphic descriptions of life in the trenches:

"This trench warfare is so utterly unprecedented that one often searches the mind in vain for some suitable parallel which will make people realize what it means to have to live for days, sometimes for weeks on end in a narrow ditch.

"I was in some trenches the other day. We were having tea round a table in a dug-out. The German trenches were very close, and if you had a fancy to finish with life all you had to do was to poke your head for an instant above the sandbags of the parapet.

"On the German side an officer had tried to do this that morning. Five minutes afterwards three men with a stretcher had taken the body away.

"Men who live like this, almost en tete-a-tete with the Germans, positively yet to know their enemies by sight. They give the snipers names, and one hears of displays of frightfulness by Karl and Fritz. One of our snipers, a private, who had found himself an admirable spot to operate from, was quite an authority on the inmates of the trenches only a biscuit-throw away. It was he, incidentally, who 'bagged' the German officer that morning. He regaled his mates with fabulous tales of 'old Germans with their long white beards,' who roamed about their trenches.

"The other day I was in a position which is less than 30 yards from the German trenches, where the few men holding the place squat doubled up in a narrow trench with a stack of bombs at hand to repel an attack. I sat down on the ground beside the Irishmen who were in that foul place and chatted with them. In a piece of mirror stuck up on the parados I could see the German trench at a distance considerably less than the width of the Strand at its narrowest point. 'There's an Alleman that comes out o' that trinch one and agin,' they said to me in hoarse whispers. 'Sure, and we often see him pattering about, a gran' big fellow with great whiskers on him. 'Tis a pity not to shoot him. We could get him every time.' I touched the mirror to move it. The next instant two bullets struck the sandbags on the parados on either side of the glass.

"The Germans do not realize that the Irishman is first and last a sportsman to whom fair play is as the breath of life in his body. In the eyes of the Irish soldiers with whom I have talked out here, the German soldier, ravisher of women, slayer of children, and torturer of prisoners, is a foul and unclean thing. Therefore not Roger Casement, but Mike O'Leary, is their hero; O'Leary not so much for his splendid gallantry generally speaking, but for the concrete circumstances that he, an Irishman, alone and unaided, killed six Germans. Henceforth six Germans to one Irishman is the fighting measure of the Irish troops.

"'Down the trinch here,' these Irish soldiers said to me that day, 'you'll find the grave of a French woman whom the Bochos killed. There's another under the bricks in the farm there. The dead lie thick here. You can't put spade to the earth without digging them up.'"

Getting Ahead.

"You've got to be pretty smooth to get to the top nowadays."

"Yes, and you usually get smooth on the top before you get there."

EUROPE SWAMPED IN DEBT.

Britain's Ability to Finance a Destructive War.

England is now paying out daily fifteen million dollars, while the daily war expenditures of all Europe are sixteen times as great. Great Britain is spending the most money, with Germany second, Russia third and France fourth. One reason for England's heavier outlay is the greater pay she gives to her volunteer army of 3,000,000 men. In the other countries the conscripted soldier receives practically no pay.

The end of the first year of this greatest of all wars shows that the banks of the four leading belligerents collectively have over $100,000,000 more gold than when the war began. The banks of France and Russia have approximately $800,000,000 each of the yellow metal, but both have fallen slightly during the year. The bank of Germany has gained $170,000,000 gold since this time in 1914, but its total is still $200,000,000 below that of either France or Russia. The Bank of England gained $70,000,000 gold in the last twelve months.

In discussing Britain's ability to finance a destructive war, Sir George Paish, the ablest economist in Europe, enumerates some interesting facts. First of all England owns twenty billions of foreign securities, of which only one-fortieth has been sold during the year. The nation has built 1,225,000 tons of new ships, exceeding by a vast margin all the tonnage destroyed by hostile fleets and submarines. In normal years Englishmen invest hundreds of millions in foreign stocks and bonds. At present the surplus is going into Government war loans.

At the end of the present year Britain's total debt will reach nine billions. The other countries are accumulating burdens which will be even more difficult for them to carry. For generations half the civilized world will still be struggling to liquidate debts contracted to-day as the sequel of regal pride.

TRADES THAT CURE.

Recommended by Doctors on Hygienic Grounds.

A great deal is written about trades that kill—lead-poisoning in the potteries, "phossy-jaw" in the match factories, and so forth—but few people are aware that there are many trades which are medically recommended by the profession on hygienic grounds.

Thus, men who lay asphalte in the streets rarely suffer from a day's illness, while those employed in places where a large amount of electricity is generated enjoy a surprising abundance of vitality.

Workers in salt-mines enjoy almost complete immunity from rheumatism.

The healthiest occupation of all is said to be that in the petroleum works. Here the men never suffer from sore throats, diphtheria, quinsy, or kindred ailments. Indeed, petroleum fumes are so good for the throat, that it is quite common for sufferers from throat affections to "take the fumes," just as people "take the waters" at Harrogate or Bath, England.

A well-known tenor who was in danger of losing his voice once took on a job in one of the petroleum-refining rooms as an ordinary employee, with the result that he was soon able to resume his work on the concert platform.

Which reminds us that singing is excellent for consumption. Sometimes it assists as a cure, but it is nearly always effective as a preventive.

PERSONALIA.

Chatty Paragraphs About Famous Folk of the Moment.

The Queen has always held strong views about exaggerated styles, and is showing her good sense and taste by holding aloof from the absurd short-skirt fashion. In the words of a famous Court dressmaker, "Her Majesty dresses to look becomingly, and not to endorse the whimsicalities of the inventive designer."

A reasonable claim to be considered one of the best-dressed men in the British House of Commons could be put forward on behalf of a member who is not very well known—Mr. William MacGeagh Maccaw, Unionist, M. P. for West Down, and a great traveller. He affects light clothes, and always look very spick-and-span.

The reason why Mr. Hilaire Belloc, who has been right about the war in most things, except in regard to shells, can speak so authoritatively about the topographical features of the battlegrounds in the West, is that for years he made a practice of spending his holidays in walks through the country lanes of France and Belgium.

If one is interested in contrasts, one should see Lord Ancaster and the Earl of Craven march, arm-in-arm, from the Upper into the Lower House. In the one case the suggestion is that of an old-world country squire who might have stepped out of Dickens's pages; in the other case the suggestion is that of a Beau Brummel modernised.

The cravat exquisites in the British Parliament, of which Mr. "Lulu" Harcourt and the Earl of Craven are the best known, include Lord Farquhar, who these sunny days has been evoking the admiration of all interested in such a minor matter as neckwear by a sumptuous white silk cravat executed in masterly style. Mr. Harcourt and Lord Craven, on the other hand, prefer black.

One's instinct is to picture an Ambassador as a severe, official-looking man who is never seen in the street except in the orthodox tall hat and frock-coat. To meet the popular Italian Ambassador in London, however, is to be disillusionized. He wears a bowler-hat, a lounge suit, and a black tie, carries a smart, silver-knobbed cane, and reinforces his sight with a monocle.

There is a peculiar significance in Lord Robert Cecil going to the Foreign Office in a crisis like the present —he is the new Under-Secretary—for the Cecils have always had a penchant for diplomacy, and it may be remembered his father, the late Lord Salisbury, accompanied Lord Beaconsfield to Berlin when that statesman brought back "peace with honor."

The Archbishop of Canterbury, who delivered such an impressive sermon at the Sheerness memorial service, is unequalled amongst living divines for his ability to deliver funeral orations. He uses the simplest of language, and obtains his effects by what is more a heart to heart talk than a piece of studied eloquence. Speaking extempore, he succeeds where a grandiose and more ambitious sermon would fail.

According to Professor Cole, fleas are very fond of music, particularly that of the trombone.

If a man falls into the water and splashes, a shark will wait until he finishes splashing before trying to eat him.

GERMANS IN RUSSIA.

Why They Are Hated and Feared by the Good-hearted Moujik.

The Russian peasant is good-hearted with the soul of a child. He bears all the repression of the Government as well as of the landlords and officials with such patience that all the foreign students of Russian life were astonished when they became familiar with the nature of the Russian "moujik," says the London Times. His loyalty to authority is extreme, as we can see particularly in regard to the imperial edict suppressing vodka. But let even a private person or even the Government try to touch land or to modify his traditional system of cultivating or administering it and he "sees red." No law, no most radical measure of repression can stop the Russian peasant in the fight for the integrity of his "mother nourish-earth." Laboring Russia lives by the earth; it is bread, existence, everything, and the laborer will die for its safety.

Agricultural Russia hates Germany more than commercial and intellectual Russia does, and that hate has its historical ground. Everybody knows that the greatest part of the most fruitful districts of Russia belonged to the nobles for centuries, and the peasants, until the reign of Alexander II. were slaves of these nobles. In order to increase the income from the lands the landlords, thanks to the German influence on Russia, mostly adopted the German method of agriculture, and for this purpose enormous numbers of German managers were appointed throughout Russia.

They were given such powers that they could even punish the peasants with the knout. Thousands and thousands of Russian peasants were sent to Siberia or into the army in the days when the army was not yet conscript.

Later these German managers gradually ruined their masters and became directly or indirectly the proprietors of the best part of their property. Sometimes the peasants revolted, but they were powerless to defend their rights because the Government always supported the German owners or managers, even with the help of military forces at need.

Thus the idea that "the Germans will possess the whole land of the peasants" has been deeply ingrained in the mind of the Russian landsman for centuries.

If the Government had not defended the German interests in Russia no single German landlord, manager or colonist would have remained alive in the Russian empire. That is a truth, and as a curious fact I can say that whereas a Jew is often welcomed in a village as a keen business man a German has always been hated.

So we can imagine what moral effect must be produced among the Russian peasants when the official news reached the numberless villages of Russia.

"The Germans are marching to take our land, to violate our wives and daughters and to kill our old people." (An old man is the most respected person among the Russian peasants.)

RUMANIA IS GAY UNDER NEW QUEEN

VICTORIA'S GRANDDAUGHTER MAKES COURT LIFE GAY.

Would Have Her Daughter Wed the Prince of Wales, It Is Said.

Rumania does not know from day to day whether or not its Government will plunge the country into war; Bucharest, its capital, is therefore making merry while it may and it is having a season of gayety outrivalling anything in its past experience. To call it the "pocket Paris" now would be a travesty upon the Paris of today, clad in mourning garments, sombre and sad of countenance.

The new Queen, formerly Princess Marie of Edinburgh, the granddaughter of the Russian Czar Alexander II. and the English Queen Victoria, has at last the chance to remodel the Bucharest court after her own ideas, which would make the capital as charming as Paris, as sumptuous as Petrograd, as riotous as Monte Carlo, and as important to diplomacy and society as London.

The most distinguished statesmen in Europe have given Bucharest a great deal of their attention during the past year, playing the game for Rumania's neutrality or for her participation in the war upon one or the other side. Money has been sent into the country from mysterious sources and everybody seems to have plenty to spend upon the pleasures of life.

Dowager Queen Disapproves.

The Dowager Queen Elizabeth (Carman Sylva) is living in strict retirement, and it is said that her health is far from satisfactory. For many years she has been subject to a nervous disease which increases with age, and her eyesight is weak. It is rumored that she is threatened with blindness. She, of course, strongly disapproves of madcap gayeties at the present time.

The King, upon his throne for nine months and fully alive to the gravity of the problems his country has to solve, looks with disfavor upon this carnival of riotous living. Following the example of his uncle, the late King Charles, a Prussian officer and a Hohenzollern prince, he has always sought to make the soldiers lead a Spartan life for the sake of efficiency, and especially at this critical time when Rumania's army may have the opportunity of rendering military services either to the allies or to the central powers so important as to demand almost any price in territory.

Officers are Gay.

But the army officers, doubtless thinking to "make hay while the sun shines," are the gayest of the gay. They make their first appearance for the day in the afternoon drive upon Chausee, where fashionable people crowd one another in well-turned-out motor cars or in carriages drawn by magnificent big horses driven by Russian coachmen in long velvet coats of blue belted in by rainbow-hued sashes. The Queen's carriage or motor is frequently among them, any vacant seating space piled high with white flowers, and for five o'clock tea at the Cafe Capsha, on the Galea Victoria, or at the Athenee Palace Hotel, she mingles with her husband's subjects with the same democratic indifference which she adopted to be herself as a right when Crown Princess in any and all cities of Europe. The army men, in bright-toned dress uniforms resplendent with gold braid, throng the promenade in the Galea Victoria, clicking their spurs and displaying their ornamental swords, dividing the attention of the ladies with the perfumed dandies who send their linen to be laundered, and import London tailors to clothe their corseted figures at fabulous prices. The ladies are profuse in their smiles and in the latest art of Parisian cosmetics —of a year ago, since Paris itself has nothing later than that in her contributions to women of pleasure, while gowns and hats are as bizarre as Oriental Bucharest and about ten times as expensive as Paris in her heyday.

Her Matrimonial Plans.

Queen Marie's sympathies are believed to centre around the future of her children and the matrimonial alliances she has been trying for several years—to arrange for her son, the Crown Prince, and her eldest daughter, Princess Elizabeth. The latter she wants to marry to the Prince of Wales, and the mother's indignation has been intense that the English court did not think the Princess good enough for the match. Queen Mary's paternal grandmother was a little Polish girl, Countess Rredy, while Princess Elizabeth is descended from the Russian sovereigns as well as the English, and is besides quite the loveliest Princess in Europe.

The suggested marriage of the Crown Prince of Rumania to the Czar's eldest daughter, Grandduchess Olga, has been criticised in Russia also as a match not brilliant enough.

The Cynic's View.

"There's something in this world besides money."

"Yep," said the cynic, "there's the poorhouse."

OBSTINATE INDIGESTION CAN BE CURED

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Go Right to the Root of the Trouble.

No trouble causes more widespread suffering and discomfort than indigestion. The ailment takes various forms. Some victims are ravenous for food; others turn sick at the sight of meals; but as a rule every meal is followed by intense pains in the chest, heartburn, sick headache and often nausea. Indigestion assumes an obstinate form because ordinary medicines only subdue its symptoms—but do not cure. So-called pre-digested foods only make the digestion more sluggish, and ultimately make the trouble take a chronic form.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure indigestion because they go right to the root of the trouble. They make new, rich blood, which so strengthens the system that the stomach does its own work and digests the food in a natural way. Many a terrible sufferer from indigestion has found a permanent cure through a fair use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Among them is Mrs. H. Carmern, Locke Street North, Hamilton, Ont., who says:—"Dr. Williams' Pink Pills not only gave me new health, but new life. For five years I was a great sufferer, was almost constantly doctoring, and spent a great deal of money with absolutely no result. My stomach was in such a dreadful condition that frequently it would not retain nourishment of any kind. When I ate I suffered terrible pains, a fluttering of the heart, and often a feeling of nausea. In addition to this I was in a very anaemic condition, and felt as if I was lingering between life and death. One day while sitting in the park a lady got into conversation with me, and I told her my trouble. She asked me if I had tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, saying that they had been a great benefit to her daughter. When I went home I decided to try this medicine. I soon found the pills were helping me, and continued taking them for several months, when I was restored to better health than I had enjoyed for years, and I have since been the picture of health. I hope my experience may be the means of pointing to others the way to health."

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MEDICINES IN VEGETABLES.

They Are Not Only Food But Excellent Medicine.

Onions are excellent blood-purifiers. They are Nature's remedy for sleeplessness, too. An onion poultice is of great relief in rheumatic pains.

Carrots are excellent for sufferers from gout, and those whose faces are without color can get it by eating plenty of carrots.

Spinach is full of iron, and is one of the finest blood tonics known. It is also extremely beneficial in kidney disease.

Tomatoes are exceedingly good for the liver.

Parsley is not only a garnish, but it will cure painful nettlerash if rubbed on the spot.

Celery is a great nerve tonic, and very good for rheumatism. It is a slight sedative, too.

Parsnips are full of excellent qualities, and help the whole system. Those who are martyrs to lumbago should eat this vegetable.

It might be noted that peeling vegetables which should not be peeled, and boiling them when they should be steamed, means the loss of the "medicine" and the disappearance of nearly all their food value.

A UNIVERSAL FOOD

Following Nature's Footsteps.

"I have a boy, two years old, weighing forty pounds and in perfect health who has been raised on Grape-Nuts and milk.

"This is an ideal food and evidently furnishes the elements necessary for baby as well as for adults. We have used Grape-Nuts in large quantities and greatly to our advantage."

One advantage about Grape-Nuts food is that it is partially pre-digested in the process of manufacture. The starch contained in the wheat and barley is transformed into a form of sugar by the same method as this process is carried out in the human body; that is, by the use of moisture and long exposure to moderate warmth, which grows the diastase in the grains, and with long baking makes the remarkable change from starch to sugar.

Therefore, the most delicate stomach can handle Grape-Nuts and the food is quickly absorbed into the blood and tissue, certain parts of it going directly to building and nourishing both body and brain. "There's a reason."

BUMPER CROP ASSURED.

Report Just Issued Indicates Record Yield.

Given normal weather until harvest, the yield of grain per acre along the 5,000 miles of the Canadian Northern Railway in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta is almost certain to average high according to a consolidated report from its agents which has just been received. This gives an estimated average for wheat of 24 bushels; oats 54; and barley 37 to the acre.

In each case, where the agents give a range, such as 25 to 30 in their estimates, the Canadian Northern adopt the lower figure, so that the average may be regarded as conservative. Officers of the company said that had a middle course been followed, the result in all probability would have been 27 or 28 bushels of wheat to the acre. When comparison is made with the figures of the North West Grain Dealer's Association for the average wheat yields in Western Canada for the last five years, the remarkable character of the prospective showing along C. N. R. lines this year is apparent. The figures referred to are: 1910, 12.9; 1911, 16.2; 1912, 18.6; 1913, 17.0; and last year 12.7 bushels to the acre.

The Canadian Northern average for wheat is compiled from reports from 171 stations between Port Arthur and the Rocky Mountains, the International Boundary line and the most northerly area now served by its lines. In the Emmerson District in Manitoba the estimates run as high as 30 bushels to the acre, and in Rapid City District as high as 32. Dauphin reports 25; Portage la Prairie 26; Rossburn 30; and the Swan River District up to 35. Along the main line in Saskatchewan the reports from the Humbolt District run up to 33 bushels to the acre, and estimates up to 30 bushels comes from the North Battleford section. Northwest of that city, Meota, reports 28 to 30 bushels. East of Prince Albert in Saskatchewan on the northern line, Melford estimates are up to 30 bushels. The Saskatoon section estimates go as high as 35, while the Kindersley division, southwesterly towards the Alberta boundary, are estimated at 35 bushels to the acre. The De Lisle division is approximately the same area reports up to 40 bushels to the acre. In Alberta, the Hanna section, in the south and the Athabasca in the north, estimate the yield up to 40 bushels per acre. The Edmonton District forecast runs as high as 35, and Vermilion to 50. In Central Alberta and Battle River District prospects are given as high as 35. In only a few instances does the estimate fall below 20 bushels, and those statements are widely separated. The estimates for oats is derived from the statements of 159 stations and that for barley from 122.

The highest forecast for oats comes from the Elrose District in Saskatchewan. There the expectation is for 100 bushels to the acre. Next is the report from the Hanna District at 90 bushels. The lowest of all is 20 to 30 bushels. In Barley the highest estimate comes from Ardsate in the De Lisle District and Dinsmore in Elrose District, each estimating 60 bushels to the acre. The lowest is 15 bushels. Strangely enough in each case where low averages are given, the next station reports an expectation for yields of excellent quantity.

Telegraphic advices received yesterday by the Canadian Northern from the Departments of Agriculture of Saskatchewan and Alberta indicate that warm weather is the rule throughout both provinces. That from Saskatchewan reads:

"The special weekly report on crop conditions based on telegrams received from all parts of the Province is issued to-day by the Department of Agriculture. In the summary of district by mail for convenience of those seeking harvest work will be found the average dates on which cutting will be general but the 21st of August should see the binders busy throughout the Province. From the Southwest exceptionally good reports have come in and the wheat heads are stated to be larger than usual. No further damage by hail is reported and in those districts where hay can be obtained a satisfactory supply of good hay is being saved. Hot weather is now general throughout the Province."

From Alberta the information is:

"Southern District weather clear and warm, all grain growing rapidly, harvest operations commenced and will be general next week. Central District warm weather, all grain ripening fast, barley ready in some localities but harvest general in ten days. Northern District weather very warm, slight damage by hail, all crops maturing fast, barley will be ready early next week."

ABOUT CRUISERS.

They Are Termed the Policemen of the Fleet.

The cruiser has to perform, perhaps, more varied functions than any other class of warship in the fleet. It is her business to stop and fight when the circumstances are, from her point of view, favorable, and also to possess a high speed to enable her to run away when the position is unfavorable. The cruiser is admirably termed the policeman of the fleet, for her capacities of mobility and long passages make her without replenishing her bunkers are her chief attributes. Although the introduction of wireless telegraphy has somewhat lessened the responsibility placed upon the cruiser for scouting work, she is still regarded as the "eyes of the fleet." For the object of scouting work there is a special type of scouting cruiser in existence. The armored cruiser's advent has almost extended that class of ship to be considered to come within the scope of the battleship. Indeed, in some cases they are so perfectly equipped in aggressive policy as to be deemed competent enough to live in the battle-line with the "capital ships."

BOTHA IS A HERO IN LONDON.

T. P. O'Connor Gives His Impressions of the Boer Leader.

Premier Louis Botha is the latest example of the extraordinary transformation of feeling that is possible to the British crowd. He came to London immediately after the Boer War with a few of his generals. He and they were in a state of the deepest depression, for their country had been so desolated that they had grave fears as to its future. They were not popular then; indeed, some hotels were doubtful about admitting them within their doors, and the visitors who came to see and encourage them were mainly Irish politicians who had supported their cause during the war.

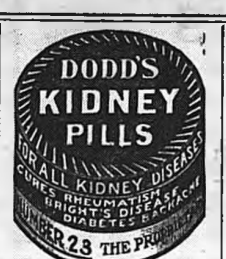
But soon the tide turned. When poor old Campbell-Bannerman rose to the Premiership he carried home rule for the Boers without even permitting a discussion within the Cabinet. Botha became, as everybody knows, Prime Minister, and, like the practised Dutchman he was, immediately resolved that the best future for his country and for his race was to throw in his lot loyally with the British Empire; and to that policy he has since adhered with splendid loyalty and judgment.



When he returned to London after this, all the past was forgotten, and he could not appear in the streets anywhere without being followed by an admiring crowd. And he was greeted none the less warmly because he had been so formidable and so brave an enemy in the not very remote past.

But, of course, by nobody was he welcomed with such heartiness as by the Irish, and the Irish party invited him to a banquet along with the other Ministers of the Dominions who happened to be in London at the time. Botha did not look very well at that time. The change from the open-air life of the veldt, whether as a soldier or as a farmer, to the sedentary habits of a Prime Minister, did not suit his temperament.

Probably after this arduous campaign, which he has just finished so successfully, Botha is in better health than he has been since he exchanged the saddle and the rifle for the desk and the pen.

TWELVE-INCH SHELLS.

Big Projectiles Carry a Thirty-pound Explosive Charge.

High power projectiles are constructed with cavities in their centre which contain the explosive charge, the explosive varying with the size of the projectile. A 12-inch shell, weighing 870 pounds, carries about 30 pounds of explosives The cavity of such a projectile is about seven inches in diameter at the base and gradually tapers in size toward the point. After the charge is placed in the projectile a plug is screwed into the base, thus sealing up the explosive, and a fuse is inserted in the centre of the plug extending into the explosive within the cavity.

The fuse, without which the explosive is harmless, depends upon the high rotary motion of the shell to become active. This rotary motion is imparted by the rifling of the gun. In the smooth surface of the tube are cut the rifling grooves of a width of about one-eighth inch.

Round the shell, near the base, in a groove cut for the purpose, is compressed what is known as the rotating band. This band projects above the surface of the shell and corresponds with the rifling grooves, so that upon its discharge is is forced into the rifling, where it acts as a seal to prevent the escape of the gas formed by the exploding powder and gives the shell the required rotary motion, which keeps it on its true course with its point always in a direct line ahead.

In order to ascertain the engine-power required to supersede the work of horses, James Watt employed a strong horse to wind up weights, and thus found 22,000 lb. could be raised one foot per minute. For fear of giving his customers under-value, he allowed overweight half as heavy again, which made a horse-power 33,000 foot-pounds per minute.

NEW POLYVATENT SEBUM.

Wonderful Cures of Mutilated Soldiers Effected By It.

What are described as remarkable cures of wounded French soldiers have been effected by the new polyvatent serum, discovery of which was announced last March. Complete recovery is announced of men who were terribly mutilated, and for whom all hope had been given up before use of the serum, so badly infected were their wounds.

Doctors Leclainche and Vallee, the discoverers of the serum, have been unable up to the present to make more than 2,000 flasks of it daily, most of which goes to the base hospitals, where the worst cases are to be found.

FORAGE PLANT TESTS

Results of experiments in crop production and field work can never be without interest or without value and, therefore, a publication describing them must be exceptionally welcome. Such a work is Bulletin No. 84 of the Division of Forage Plants, Dominion Experimental Farms, that gives a summary of results reached at the Central and different branch farms and stations throughout the country, and that can be had free on application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. There are included also some recommendations as to the varieties to grow, or crop production methods to follow, as deduced from the results of experimental work in the various provinces. A variety of tests at the Central Experimental Farm in Indian corn showed that the best varieties in ears of twelve experimented with were Quebec Yellow, Windsor Yellow Dent, Canada Yellow and Free Press, and that while of the ensilage varieties proper Argentine Yellow gave the highest yield in tonnage, White Cap Yellow Dent, Golden Glow, King Philip and Wisconsin No 7 reached a more advanced stage of maturity. Eighteen varieties of turnips were tested, thirteen of mangels, five of carrots and four of sugar beets. Of the turnips nine varieties produced over 25 tons dry matter to the acre. Of the mangels half a dozen varieties yielded 3¼ tons of dry matter to the acre. Of the carrots White Belgium gave 24 tons, 400 pounds of crop with 2 tons, 1905 pounds dry matter to the acre, and Ontario Champion 25 tons of crop and 2 tons, 1650 pounds dry matter.

With a view of securing data bearing on the possibility of producing field root seed profitably in Canada, a great number of seed roots were selected, not only at the Central Farm, but also on most of the branch farms and stations in the eastern provinces. At the Central Farm about 12,000 mangels of the Long Red variety, and 3,000 Magnum Bonum Swede turnips were secured for the purpose from the general farm crop. In addition about three tons of mangels of the Long Red and Yellow Intermediate types were selected from the plots grown for variety tests by the Division of Forage Plants.

In leguminous forage plants many tests were made for hardiness, quality and quantity. In order to arrive at a proper understanding of the nature of a number of Canadian grasses and sedges arrangements were made to secure through exchange a representative collection of grasses and sedges from Northern Europe. About a thousand sheets of duplicates were prepared for this purpose and sent forward. The reports from the superintendents of branch farms and stations will be found of the greatest interest, each especially to farmers in the respective province represented.

Much sympathy is expressed for Mr John McLean and family, on the boundary, in the death of little Norman who died from the result of an accident. While driving on Friday with a load of loose oats he slipped off and fell under the wagon, the wheel passing over him. Norman was a bright, promising lad and a general favorite. The accident happened on his thirteenth birthday. All that medical skill could do was done for him, but of no avail. He passed away on Monday morning. WALKERTON

Harry Wettlaufer, a Walkerton lacrosse player, is confined in the Fergus Hospital with concussion of the brain through injuries received by being hit over the head during the lacrosse game at Fergus on Wednesday.

The deputation composed of Messrs. G. S. Schwindt, John Rowland and Senator Donnelly, which went to Walkerton last week to make final arrangements for the shell-box order at the Kuechtel Factory, succeeded in getting the order increased from $20,000 to $21,000, the extra $1,000 being allowed for the increased size of the boxes. Mr Schwindt, manager of the Knechtel factory here, and who is largely responsible for the landing of the order, expects to have his men at work on the contract at once.

Mr Norman Lang, who has been relieving at the Registry Office here for the past few weeks, had his nose broken and was rendered unconscious by being struck with a baseball while practicing at the exhibition grounds on Wednesday evening of last week.

Some local wags had an innings on Sunday night when they discovered Lambert Gallop asleep in front of the Ratten. Being fuller of mischief than a vagrant dog is of fleas they used the paint-brush and lamp-black with such effect on his face that they soon had him stepped like the front end of a zebra. But the worst was yet to come, for on being awakened after midnight and started on his wheel for home, his heart went into his throat and nearly choked him to death when a wag with a sheet over his head sprang out of a doorway and followed after him in the dark. Lambert almost broke the world's record flexing from the spook and had soon a big distance put between himself and the ghost. On arriving at Mr Wm Johnston's, where he works, the sight of his face startled all hands into thinking that a real prizter's devil had broken loose.—Herald and Times.

SAUGEEN COUNCIL

All the members of the Saugeen council were present at their meeting on Aug 14th.

A circular letter to council was read asking for contributions toward the purchase of machine guns or expressions in favor of the county council taking action.

Brunton—Chappel—That in connection with the purchase of machine guns this council is in favor of the matter being made a county affair, and the reeve is instructed to act accordingly.

Mr Jas A Reech presented a claim for $2 damage to disc and $12 damage to plow broken while plowing snow on the Goderich road. Councilor Brunton was appointed to see if repairs could be secured for plow and at what cost.

The following rates were levied for the current year: General county rate 3.7½ mills; Provincial war tax 1.1; Township rate 3 mills, being ½ mill lower than last year; General school rate 2.1 mills; rates in the different school sections ranging from 1.8 mills to 11.37 mills.

After arranging for repairing culverts, etc., the council adjourned to meet at call of the reeve. P. W. ELLIOTT, Clerk.

SWEET CLOVER IN BRUCE CO.

N. C. McKay, B.S.A., of the Walkerton branch of Ontario Agricultural Dept., has been experimenting with sweet clover growing, and makes the following report in The Agricultural Gazette: "On June 20th we cut our sweet clover plots and were very much pleased with the results. These were sown on two farms in a series of 8 plots, two sweet clover and six alfalfa. The sweet clover (not inoculated) yielded at the rate of 15¾ tons green material per acre. Part of this we are curing for hay and the remainder has been fed to the stock on the farm. All classes of animals seem to be very fond of it. The clover was a magnificent stand, being about 3 feet high and as thick as it could grow. The alfalfa, which received exactly the same treatment, probably will not yield more than one quarter as much."

POULTRY

POULTRY'S PART IN BACK-TO-LAND MOVEMENT.

By A. P. Marshall, Niagara Falls, Canada.

If one could trace back the source of a very great many developed desires for rural endeavor ultimately resulting in lifework on the farm of one sort or another no doubt they would reveal an important part played by the wish to produce and pleasure derived in the growing of poultry.

This idea seemed to loom up on account of incidents following in close succession, that all seemed to imply the same thing. In the first place we ran across a man, a barber by trade who of rural inclinations, keeping his garden and chickens, finally made the break and in four years has one of the very neatest 7 acre places we have ever seen. The chickens helped materially, but in this case are really only one of the products of his most successful place.

Going through a thriving fruit section, we noticed one of the tidiest sort of places where several dozen children were berry picking, and enquiry elicited the information that this was a back-to-the-land movement with the most satisfactory results. In evidence were the brooders and fairly large numbers of thriving chicks giving evidence that they were playing an important if perhaps not a major part in the good results obtained.

The following day on the street of a neighboring city we met an old business acquaintance from whom we had bought quite a lot of a commodity he was then supplying. From one thing to another the present game under discussion and here we find another on a fruit farm as keen in the carrying on of this as though he had been at it for many years. Still in the same day we meet a very successful traveller and falling into conversation while watching a lively game of tennis, he too volunteers the information that he is going to have a poultry farm of about 50 acres. Much of his plans already figured out, he is preparing to know the subject in a way that will help him make less mistakes when he really tackles the serious endeavor to make a living and a surplus along this line.

What does this mean and what lesson can it have to any one who gives the matter any thought and has any inclination along these lines? Reflection could not but make us feel the necessity in each and every case for the years of apprenticeship as it were at a comparatively small cost or spread out in such a way as to be hardly noticeable. If every man or woman who has any idea of poultry farming or any other, in fact could do so in a comparatively small way for a number of years, they could at least determine if the inclination is still strong, even if this would not show what results might be expected. Much of school training seems to have little value or meaning to us and even in after life some of it seems to give us nothing that proves of use, but who can say any mental or physical effort was valueless if not in a practical, perhaps by the moral or indirect result it might have had.

Some have said that there is little difference in men, but this difference makes a big difference. Very often ability may be in favor of the one who fails, but knowledge, perseverance, and a spirit that appreciates when one thinks seriously of the matter of making a really successful career along any given line that it gives little more than time to acquire the knowledge and experience to make the best success. Any knowledge, therefore, acquired before its imperative need is of the very greatest value and may save hundreds of dollars if not thousands when the real test comes. Many have through a passing interest in poultry gradually acquired the knowledge that enabled them to put in practice in a larger way what they had found best working under limited conditions and with restricted possibilities.

Many a successful fruit and poultry farmer has blessed the fact that his restricted poultry interest led him to learn many things that stood him in excellent stead in his new farm surroundings and enabled him because of the acquired habit of successfully specializing to take up the proposition from a new angle and by his peculiar business qualifications build up a trade that means for him a splendid living and satisfactory work.

If anyone therefore take a fancy for poultry work it seems as though it would be well to give this side of the subject due consideration. A little reflection will show that it would be very wise to study the subject in such a way as to learn all that might be of assistance when the time comes to require to develop the poultry into a line that will bring a satisfactory living.

A cloud of very small drops of rain, one mile up, would take about seventeen hours to sink to the earth.

WHEN IT RAINS IN PANAMA.

Harry A. Franck and Three Comrades Had Awful Experience.

Before us spread the reposing powerful, sun-shimmering Pacific. Across the bay, clear as an etching, lay Panama, backed by Ancon hill. In regular cadence the waves swept in on the sands. Such was the scene described by Mr. Harry A. Franck in "Zone Policeman 88," when he and three comrades went one day for a swim in the ocean.

We dived in, keeping an eye out for the sharks, although we knew they never came so far in, and probably would not bite if they did. The sun blazed down white-hot from a cloudless sky. The Lieutenant and Sergeant Jack had not been able to come, but we arranged the races and jumps in the sand for all that, and went into them with a will and——

A raindrop fell. Then a few more. Then many more. Before we had finished the hundred-yard dash it was undeniably raining. Half a minute later "bucketfuls" would have been a weak simile. The blanket of water blotted out Panama and Ancon hill across the bay, blotted out the distant bathers, than even those close at hand.

We remained under water for a time—to keep dry. But the rain whipped our faces as with thousands of stinging lashes. We crawled out and dashed blindly up the bank toward the sawmill, the rain beating on our all but bare skins. It felt as it might feel to stand in Miraflores locks and let the sand pour down upon us from sixty feet above. When at last we stumbled under cover and up the stairs to where our clothing hung, it was as if a weight of many tons had been lifted from our shoulders.

The sawmill was without side walls, and consisted only of a sheet-iron roof and floors. The storm pounded on the roof with a roar that made the sign language necessary. It was as if we were surrounded on all sides by solid walls of water, and forever shut off from the outer world—if indeed that had survived. Sheets of water slashed in farther and farther across the floor. We took to huddling behind beams and, under saw benches—the militant storm hunted us out and vetted us bit by bit. "The Admiral" and I tucked ourselves away on the forty-five-degree I beams up under the roaring roof. The angry water gathered together in columns, and swept in and up to soak us.

At the end of an hour the downpour had increased some hundred per cent. That was the day when little harmless streams near themselves apart into great gorges, and left their pathetic little bridges alone and deserted out in the middle of the gulf. That was the famous May 12, 1912, when Ancon recorded the greatest rainfall in her history—7.23 inches, virtually all within three hours. Three of us were ready to surrender and swim home through it. But there was the Admiral to consider. He was dressed clear to his scarfpin—and Panama tailors tear horrible holes in a policeman's salary. So we waited, and dodged, and squirmed into smaller holes for another hours, and grew steadily wetter.

At length dusk began to fall, but instead of lifting with the day, the fury of the storm increased. It was then that the Admiral capitulated, seeing fate plainly in league with his tailor; wigwagging his decision to us, he led the way down the stairs and dived into the world awash.

Wet? We had not taken the third step before we were streaming like fire hose. There was nearly an hour of it, splashing knee-deep through what had been little dry, sandy hollows; steering by guess, for the eye could make out nothing fifty yards ahead, even before the cheese-thick darkness fell; bowed like nonagenarians under the burden of water; staggering back and forth as the storm caught us crosswise or the earth gave way under us. The Admiral's patent-leather shoes—but why go into painful details? The wall of water was as thick as ever when we fought our Lowed and weary way up over the railway bridge. When we had gathered force for the last dash, we plunged toward our several nests. As the door of 131 slammed behind me, the downpour suddenly slackened. As I paused before my room to drain, it stopped raining.

Ages of Famous Soldiers.

Napoleon was 45 at Waterloo and never reached the sixties. Marlborough was 62 at Oudenarde, and by no means in his dotage at 65. Frederick the Great was 51 at the end of his great campaign. On the other hand, Moltke at 65 was only just establishing his name in world-history. Raglan was about 66 when he was appointed commander-in-chief in the Crimea. Daditzky, one of the few great soldiers Austria has produced, was 82 when he led the Austrians in their last successful war. Wolseley's last campaign was fought at 62, but Lord Roberts began his last at 67. Sir John French will be 63 in September.

WOMEN OF FRANCE PLAY NOBLE PART

DOING EVERY KIND OF WORK AT PRESENT.

Army Depends on Women To Make Ammunition—Teach French to Alsatians.

When this year is over there will be but few crafts and fewer professions barred to women in France. A year of war has taught French women the tricks of practically every trade in which muscular strength is not a dominating factor. What suffragettes have clamored vainly for thorughout all the years of their struggle, twelve months of combat have brought about in France almost unconsciously.

French women haven't yet achieved the vote as the result of the war, but they could have it in a jiffy if they asked for it, and they have achieved every other recognition save that of the right to fight in the trenches. Behind the firing line they are fighting—and every Frenchman will gladly concede it—quite as heroically and efficiently as the men. Their importance from the military standpoint even can scarcely be over-estimated. To mention one instance, if the thousands upon thousands of women engaged in making shells and cartridges in France were to quit work, Gen. Joffre's entire strategic scheme would crumble away in a few weeks and the war might come to a disastrous conclusion."

In every field of endeavor into which she was pitchforked by the events of a year ago, the French woman has "made good." Every charity, from the Red Cross down to teaching the children of reconquered Alsace the French language, depends upon her for success. Commerce would come to a standstill and agriculture cease to exist if she had not shown herself capable to keep her husband's office or shop open and his land tilled in his absence at the front. Even the Bank of France might have to close its doors without her aid.

In the Bank of France.

This last statement is based on information given by Mme. Julie Siegfried, head of the National Federation of Women's Suffrage Societies.

"Of the number of employes of the Bank of France summoned to the colors," Mme. Siegfried said, "more than 25 per cent. have been replaced by women. The same is true to an even greater extent in the Somptoir d'Escompte and the Credit Lwonnais. And most of the women thus engaged in work that is as essential to the Government as the army itself were quite unfamiliar with such work before the war. The Governor of the Bank of France himself assured me that at present he is quite content with the accomplishment of his women employes, and that affairs could not be carried out more smoothly.

"It is scarcely possible to enumerate the number of industries in which women play a necessary role because of the war. In the manufacture of munitions alone there is an army of women enrolled. Their efficiency is unquestioned. Recently an officer of the general staff told me that women had been found to be superior to men in the making of certain parts of a shell because their fingers are more supple than men's as a result of long hours with the needle.

"Transportation by underground railway or surface cars would be impossible in most French cities nowadays were it not for the feminine guards and station attendants. The Paris Metro runs without a hitch, yet all its subordinate employes are women. They are holding only the jobs left vacant by their husbands or brothers or sweethearts, of course; but isn't it likely that those whose menfolk are killed or permanently disabled will continue in the same capacity after the war?

Have Learned Self-Reliance.

"With all its evils, the war has bestowed upon France two lasting benefits—it has taught French women self-reliance in the struggle that goes on outside their own homes, and taught Frenchmen esteem for the abilities of their women. There are many thousands of women who for the past year have conducted the businesses of their husbands in the market or on the farm, and among them, also, are those who must continue to do so when peace comes. These women in this dreadful year have learned to know the world of affairs, and so have their sisters of the poorer classes, doing man's work in the factory or the fields.

"The same knowledge has come to the rich women of society, for the administrative talents they have revealed in conducting the vast philanthropies arising from wartime misery can never again be submerged beneath social frivolities.

"We French women don't prize the franchise so highly as our sisters in England and the United States. What we want first is equality in work and wages, and that I am confident we have shown ourselves to be entitled to, and will receive when the war is won."

The Government allows the wife or woman dependent of a soldier 25 cents a day, plus five cents a day for each child. Living rent free because of the moratorium, it is perhaps possible in the country districts for a woman to keep herself and her children alive on this allowance. In the city it is out of the question. There are numerous charities, designated under the common head of "ouvroirs," or workshops, which help destitute wives to earn a living in addition to their Government income. But, as Gabriel Hanotaux, one of the "Immortals" of the Academie Francaise, recently pointed out in an article entitled "The Work of the Women," it is their own initiative and adaptability which chiefly has kept Frenchwomen and children from want.

An income tax means an outgo cheque.

All men are equal the day they are born and the day they are buried.

A HOLLOW VICTORY

The Hunters: Und after all dis vork only der hollow log vos ours. Gott strafe der Bear!

—The Montreal Daily Star.

THE GOSPEL OF HATE.

Germans Dislike of England Has Increased Tenfold.

Some politicians, mostly of an obscure type, have at times endeavored to persuade the British working men that they have no real interest in this war, and that the triumph of the German arms would not adversely affect their fortunes or materially change the course of their lives, writes Earl Cromer in the London Spectator. There cannot be a greater error. It is no exaggeration to say that a complete German victory would exercise a profound effect on the political status, the material wealth, the social condition and the surrounding moral atmosphere of every individual subject of King George V. A partial victory would produce changes in proportion to its extent. Let it not be supposed for one moment that any degree of statesmanlike generosity would be extended to the vanquished. Englishmen have been slow to recognize the extent to which the old Germany, with its really noble aspirations and high standard of morals, has passed away. Its place has been taken by a Germany one of whose principal national characteristics is extreme vindictiveness, and a catholic capacity for hating other nations. According to the testimony of all competent observers the hatred for England which existed before the war exceeded anything which we could have believed possible. It has, of course, now been increased tenfold.

TRADE SECRETS.

Costliness of the Shadowing That Has to be Done.

How trade secrets become the property of rival firms is the cause of a vast amount of shadowing of suspected employees. Such secrets are responsible for a large portion of the private inquiry agent's prosperity. In the case of a celebrated fashion firm the leakage of secrets with regard to new designs caused half-a-dozen shadowers to be employed, and the tracking, extending over several months, cost some hundreds of pounds. An action for damages against the culprit rival establishment resulted in swinging damages, the celebrated K.C. who led for the plaintiffs emphasising the costliness of the shadowing that had to be done. Perhaps one of the strangest reasons for having a person shadowed was revealed in the course of a law case in which one society beauty was the plaintiff and a rival beauty the defendant. It was complained by the aggrieved lady that the defendant had had her shadowed in order to discover the beauty shop where the jealous one obtained artificial aid with respect to her complexion.

The Housewife's Corner

Cold Meats and Sauces for Them.

Cold meats with their approximate sauces are more tempting on warm days perhaps than hot meats, or even broiled chicken or broiled fish. However, they must be properly cooked and served with the right sauces to form the main dish of the dinner. Salads also should blend with the flavor of the meat or be a pleasing contrast to make the dinner a success.

Roast Beef, Horse Radish Sauce.—Select the size of the roast according to the number of persons to be served, have the bones removed and the roast properly rolled. Score it well, so that it retains its shape. The bones may be cracked and added to the stock pot. Do not allow the roast to become too well done, for it is nicer for cold service when it is a little bit rare. Let it cool naturally, but do not chill it, as that takes away the flavor. Slice it thinly and garnish with sprays of fresh cress and deviled eggs sliced into quarters. The horse-radish sauce is made in the following way: To four tablespoons of freshly grated horse radish add a teaspoon of sugar, half teaspoon of salt, half saltspoon of cayenne, two teaspoons of mustard sauce and moisten with a little bit of vinegar; beat it together until it is the consistency of cream. Just before serving add to it a tablespoon of cream.

Roast Lamb, Mint Sauce.—Select a short, thick leg of lamb and have the bone removed. Cook it in the usual way until tender and let it cool naturally, but do not ice. The bones may also be used in the stock pot. Slice thinly and garnish with parsley and beet roses cut from cold boiled beets. The mint sauce is made of fresh mint. Strip the leaves from the stalks, wash carefully and chop fine. Chop enough to make four tablespoons. Melt two dessertspoons of sugar in one tablespoon of boiling water. When melted and cool add to the chopped mint leaves with a tablespoon of tarragon vinegar and six tablespoons of cider vinegar. This sauce should be made at least three or four hours before it is wanted, so that its flavor will be just right.

Ham, Southern Style.—Select a good sugar cured ham, short and thick; soak in cold water one hour, scrape and trim if necessary, then put on to boil in cold water. After it has boiled an hour and a half throw off the water, cover with fresh boiling water and then cook until done enough to slice well. Let it stand in the water until almost cold, take up, remove the skin, trim where necessary, then stick the surface of the fat with cloves, using plenty of them, and then sprinkle the surface thickly with brown sugar. Put it in a baking pan and put it in the oven, letting it stay to heat through and lightly brown the surface. Remove and let cool and serve with mustard or Madagascar sauce, according to taste. The mustard sauce comes ready mixed, as also does the Madagascar sauce.

Boiled Tongue, Mustard Violette.—To serve with the cold boiled tongue which is thinly sliced or served whole in aspic and then carved at table, the Violette mustard which comes all prepared will be found delicious. Or a sweet sauce may be served with the tongue made by melting a tumbler of currant jelly and adding to it a glass of port wine. When cool it will be ready to serve.

Calf's Liver Loaf.—Take one-half of a milk liver and boil until very tender, placing a stalk of celery, an onion and a tiny spice bag in the water while it is boiling. When very tender remove and chop very fine, then add the juice of an onion, a tablespoon of, Worcestershire sauce, a tablespoon of Chutney syrup and two tablespoons of carefully fried bread crumbs that have been fried butter and drained. Mix all well together and mould into a loaf, place on a dish, spread the loaf evenly with good mayonnaise, garnish with sliced truffles and white egg rings, and when thoroughly cold cover with aspic and set away to chill. When ready to serve offer a tureen of mayonnaise with the loaf.

Shoulder of Veal, Savory Stuffing.—Have the bones removed from the shoulder of veal and stuff with a dressing made of one small bottle of macedoin vegetables drained, one cup of bread crumbs, two tablespoons Chutney syrup, pepper, salt, half gill of melted butter, teaspoon of savory herbs and one beaten egg. Mix well and stuff the meat, sprinkling with a little pepper and salt. When roasted, allow it to drain and cool naturally. Slice thinly when ready to serve and offer with it an olive sauce made in the following way: Stone and chop a half bottle of white stock, adding pepper and salt and a tablespoon of Chutney syrup, boil gently half an hour, remove from the fire and add the juice of a lemon. When cold, serve.

Chicken Short Cake.—This very unusual dish must be put together at the last possible moment, and served immediately. Make a good short cake of biscuit dough. When done split the cake and butter it. Have ready a plate of thinly sliced boiled chicken which has been cooled but not iced. Fill the short cake with the chicken and spread thickly with a good mayonnaise, lay on the upper half, lightly butter the top, then spread it with a small bottle of macedoine vegetables that have been drained, chopped and marinated in French dressing for one hour, then drained again and mixed with mayonnaise. Serve the short cake hot and as quickly as possible garnish with sprays of parsley drawn through thin slices of lemon. This is a rich but most satisfying dinner dish.

Roast duck served cold with fresh gooseberry sauce and cold boiled chicken moulded and jellied make agreeable changes if well seasoned and properly garnished.

Hints for the Home.

For stirring jam use a wooden or silver spoon.

Fruit should be made into jam as soon as possible after picking.

To re-heat a milk pudding remove the skin, add more milk and a piece or two of butter; re-bake.

If fruit be gathered under damp conditions there is nothing more likely to prevent the jam from keeping.

After cleaning a room leave the windows and door open, and do not lay down carpets and rugs until the boards are thoroughly dry.

When beating eggs, if a whisk is not handy, try using three forks instead of one and the eggs can be beaten in about one-third of the time.

When pastry or cakes are browning too soon they are likely to be heavy, but to prevent them browning grease a piece of kitchen paper and cover.

Newly-baked bread should be lightly covered with a clean cloth while it is cooling. If it is not aired when it is taken from the oven it is apt to be soggy.

Fruit for preserving should be uniformly ripe, sound and fresh, and it should be picked, if possible, on a dry, sunny morning, and not with the dew upon it.

It is a good plan to cut the stems of flowers with a sharp knife rather than with scissors. Scissors compress the stems of the flowers and close the tiny pores, so that no water can reach the top of the stem.

Bedrooms should not be wetted late in the afternoon, and should always be absolutely dry before they are used. Next to damp beds boards are the most fruitful causes of rheumatic fever. It is best not to wash a bedroom on a wet day.

Before scrubbing the room the furniture must be removed or put together, to leave the floor as clear as possible. After sweeping and removing the dirt begin to scrub at the sides of the room farthest from the door, always remembering to use plenty of clean water, to scrub vigorously, and to dry thoroughly. If boards are well rubbed with a clean cloth they will soon dry.

It is often difficult for the girl who makes her own dresses to get the skirt to hang on even length all round. The following hint will be found most useful. Put on the skirt and fasten securely round the waist, then take a yardstick and stand it on the floor upright against the body. Make a little chalk mark on the skirt, just where the top of the stick comes. Do this all round the skirt. Take the skirt off, then measure it the same length from the chalk marks to the bottom all round. The shape being all on the hips above the chalk marks, the skirt will be found to hang quite straight round the hem.

SHOWERS OF FROGS.

Drawn Up From a Lake Twenty Miles From Gibraltar.

Late in May, during a thunder-storm near Gibraltar, millions of small frogs, apparently drawn up from a lake twenty miles away, fell upon the earth. According to Nature, such showers of frogs, when satisfactorily authenticated, are to be classed with showers of herring, sticklebacks, and even larger fish. Some of those showers are vouched for by trustworthy persons, and can be easily explained. A whirlwind is sometimes strong enough to suck up dust, leaves, and sheaves, or water, fishes, and frogs. The tornado may transport its burden in the whirling column for many miles, until it loses its strength and ceases to turn. The sudden appearances of multitudes of small frogs, however, is often owing to nothing more unusual than the regular migration of the young frogs from their birthplace in the pond to their summer quarters in the fields. Similarly, alleged "snail showers" are likely to disappear under scrutiny, and "a torrent of periwinkles" most often turns out to be a migration of Helix virgata or the like. In his "Romance of Natural History," Gosse discussed the various kinds of animal "showers," and came to the conclusion that some of the records were worthy of credence as regards frogs, toads, and fishes. It is probable, then, that the Gibraltar shower is genuine.

SIR CONAN DOYLE'S IDEA.

To Protect British Soldiers From Machine Gun's Deadly Fire.

Writing to the London Times on the proposal that the British troops be equipped with armor, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle says:

"Such actions as that of May 9, where several brigades lost nearly half their numbers in endeavoring to rush over the 300 yards which separated us from the German trenches, must make it clear that that it is absolutely impossible for unprotected troops to pass over a zone which is swept by machine guns. Therefore you must either forever abandon such attacks, or you must find artificial protection for the men.

"It has always seemed to me extraordinary that the innumerable cases, where Bibls, cigaret case, watch, or some other chance article has saved a man's life have not set us scheming so as to do systematically what has so often been the result of happy chance.

"Your correspondents have mentioned the objection that any protection may itself be broken and that splinters of it may aggravate the wound. One answer to that would be to arm only those points where a wound would in any case be mortal. These points are really very few, and no great weight of metal would be needed to protect them."

Sir Conan Doyle suggests that each man should wear, firstly, a helmet; secondly, a curved plate of highly tempered steel put more than a foot in diameter over the heart, and, thirdly, a similar plate covering the abdomen. He says:

"With these three precautions the death rate should be greatly reduced from rifle and machine gun fire, as also from shrapnel. Nothing, of course, will avail against a direct shell burst, but granting that, individual life would be saved.

"This does not bear upon the capture of a position, since so many would fall wounded that the weight of attack would be spent before the stormers reached the trenches. For this armor which will give complete protection is needed, and since the weight of this is more than a man can readily carry, it must be pushed in front upon wheels.

"I picture a great number of plates held together like the shields of a Roman tortoise, and pushed by men who crouch behind them. Others are fixed alidways upon their wheels, and are used upon the flank of the advance to prevent an enfilading fire. There is not one tortoise which would attract the concentrated fire of artillery, but each company or platoon forms its own. These numerous armor plated bodies rush with small loss over the space which has already been cleared as far as possible of obstacles, and so have some chance of reaching the enemy's line, not as an exhausted fragment, but as a vigorous storming party with numbers intact."

NOTES OF THE SOLDIER MEN.

Italians Use German-Made Guns—Tricks of the Turks.

Canada is to pay disabled soldiers from $75 to $265 a year.

There are in Britain over 6,000,000 men between the ages of 18 and 45.

The Highland Light Infantry was the first Scottish regiment to win a Victoria Cross in the present war.

Five peers and 29 heirs to peerage have been killed in the present war. In the South African war four peers and six heirs to peerages lost their lives.

The Belgian army is going into khaki very shortly. The uniforms and caps for the men are ready. Their tunics will differ from ours in having stand-up collars. The khaki is a greenish shade.

The Turks are brave and clever snipers. They frequently place small trees on their backs, and so crawl right upon the trenches. Some Turks paint themselves and their rifles green and are practically invisible.

Over 2,000 dog licenses have been bought by the National Canine Defense League since January 1st, and of this number 1,805 have been for dogs of soldiers and sailors whose pets are being looked after by relatives and friends.

The iron cross of the German army is not a casting, but is struck with steel dies in heavy coining presses. After being stamped out the crosses are taken to the silversmith's where the soldiering is done, a fine silver border added, and the finishing completed.

The London Central Young Men's Christian Association have made arrangements under which 1,000 men, who by reason of insufficient chest measurement or physique are under standard, may receive a free course of physical training for one month, or longer if necessary, in order to fit them for service in his Majesty's forces. About 100 men have already passed through.

The number of members and clerks of the Stock Exchange on active and miscellaneous service for the Government is as follows: Members on active service, 968; miscellaneous, 33; clerks on active service, 1,127; miscellaneous, 24; total serving, 2,192. The total number of members and clerks at the end of the last financial year in March was 6,951, so that nearly approaching a third are serving their country.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, SEPTEMBER 5TH.

Lesson X.—Elijah and the Prophets of Baal, 1 Kings 18. 16-40. G. T.—Prov. 12. 29.

I. Arranging the Altar (Verses 30-35).

Verse 30. Come near unto me—That is, unto Mount Carmel, the one great headland of Palestine, bounding the plain of Esdraelon on the west, and from the top of which a view of the whole of Esdraelon is to be seen as well as a wide sweep of the Mediterranean.

That was thrown down—Ahab had broken down all the altars at which the worshipers of Jehovah had been accustomed to worship. (See 1 Kings 19. 10.)

31. Twelve stones—(See Joshua 4. 5.) The twelve stones signified the unity of worship among the tribes of Israel, each tribe proclaiming the one true God.

32. He built an altar—That is, he "dedicated" the old altar which had been thrown down and which, according to verse 30, he had "repaired." The "building," here in verse 32, has reference to the new arrangements which were made necessary by the particular kind of offering he was to make.

Two measures of seed—In Hebrew, a two-seah measure. One "seah" equalled about three of our gallons. The trench would hold, therefore, about six gallons of water.

33. In order—Elijah followed carefully the injunction of the law (see Lev. 1. 3-9).

Jars.—The word is the same as in Gen. 24. 14-20; Judg. 7. 16, 19. These jars contained less than half a gallon each.

35. Fill the trench also—As the water poured on the altar did not fill the trench, more water was added.

II. The Prayer and the Consuming Fire (Verses 36-39).

36. The time of the offering of the evening oblation—Three o'clock in the afternoon. About five hours of daylight still remained.

Elijah the prophet came near—He was not a "priest," but a prophet. On occasions such as this, however, the prophet assumed the priestly functions.

At thy word—Elijah, as Moses (see Num. 16. 28), was commanded to do these things. He did not take the initiative; he was only the instrument of God.

37. That thou, Jehovah, art God—"That thou are the Lord God." The name of Baal, or tribal god, or of any other such idol, could not be applied to "Elohim"—the one true God.

39. They fell on their faces—Lest they be blinded (see Lev. 9. 24; 2 Chron. 7. 3.).

All the people . . . said—Not only the worshippers of Jehovah also those of Baal.

BEARS A CHARMED LIFE.

Soldier Thrice Wounded, Reported Dead and Escaped.

A sergeant in the Belgian army, now in Paris for a few days' leave, has been three times wounded, has been taken prisoner, has escaped, and has been reported dead from Belgian headquarters.

The last time he was wounded he was also taken prisoner with a number of companions. His wound being slight, he was compelled to march to a temporary camp behind the German lines. The journey occupied three days, during which time the prisoners were given no food, and had to exist on a little chocolate and biscuit which they had in their knapsacks.

After being at this camp for two days they were entrained for Germany. The sergeant, however, had made up his mind to escape, and before they crossed the frontier he leaped from the moving train. He fell in some long grass, and escaped with nothing worse than a severe shaking.

The German escort on the train immediately began to fire at him, but, dashing across a field in a zig-zag course, and occasionally throwing himself to the ground, he got away without being hit.

When he returned to the Belgian lines he found that he had been reported as dead, and he has now in his possession the official intimation sent to his parents to this effect.

Making a Bargain With Jean.

Jean longed for a kitten. When illness made it necessary for Jean to go to the hospital her mother said, "I will make a bargain with you, Jean. If you will be a brave little girl about your operation you shall have the nicest kitten I can find." Jean took the ether, but later, as she came out from under the anæsthetic, she recalled how very wretched she felt. The nurse leaned over to catch her first spoken word. "What a queer way to get a cat!" moaned the child.

Before coined money was used in Greece, skewers or spikes of iron or copper were employed as currency.

The 18th century version of the proverb, "Out of sight, out of mind," was "Far from eye, far from heart."

FRENCH WOMEN VERY THRIFTY

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY IS INSTINCTIVE WITH THEM.

They Are Sensible Enough Not to be Governed by Outside Appearances.

Economy becomes every day more of a national necessity, and thrifty France is settling down to her task with her usual intelligence and common sense. Individually, French people have been economizing ever since the mobilization order was issued, and the country in general has been run on economical lines.

Certainly since the war they have proved themselves to be a cautious people in money matters, and what the business man does in large the housekeeper does in little; moreover, the same spirit reigns in the households of the rich and the gently born as in those of the poor and lowly in station. Nowhere is there any waste, although the advantage flow into different channels. In some houses the mistress benefits by the economies, in others the savings go to swell the funds of her servitors; but there is never any senseless extravagance.

In French middle-class housekeeping everything is expensive, and nothing is luxurious. The essential points are the kitchen and the linen chest; the least essential are the drawing-room and the table decoration. The first thing a French bourgeoise attends to in the day is her larder, and the last thing she spends money on are the flowers for her dinner table. She economizes on service and household wear and tear at the least excuse, but only on food when it is strictly necessary.

Prices High.

To pay well for what she eats is an accepted condition of things in the present day, and with all her care and economy the French housekeeper is obliged to spend twice as much on food as the housekeeper in England, whose notions on economy are not instinctive.

Without her instinct cultivated, moreover, to a talent, for economy, cooking, and dressing, the Frenchwoman would not find it easy to live inexpensively, well, and prettily clothed, in the Paris of to-day, and her natural genius is being tested to the utmost in her efforts to make both ends meet without in any serious way infringing on her capital. In the rule of always having a nest-egg you find the secret of the Frenchwoman's thrift and solidity.

To economize with the thought that there is a comfortable little sum in a safe place which can always be used in a case of dire necessity is not nearly so hard as to practise self-denial when the least misfortune may land you into abject poverty. Under these last conditions it is so much more tempting to "take the cash and let the credit go," whereas, with the incentive of adding to that nest egg, or the dislike of seeing it grow less, it is more or less easy to turn your back when the tempter charms unwisely.

Saves Nest Egg.

The Frenchwoman knows this, and avoids complete penury as long as ever she can. Her nest egg is rarely sacrificed for the sake of appearances, and she would rather reduce her living expenses to a mere nothing than spend any of that rock upon which her future depends.

She watches with the utmost vigilance to see that she is not cheated, and if she is too heavily charged for her food and her rent she strikes a balance by paying minimum prices for all things over which she has personal control. Her household service is so arranged that one servant does the work of two, her contrivances for being fashionable at a relatively low price defy description, her firm stand against any hospitality except that which comes within the family traditions, and her supreme indifference as to what outsiders think of her, stand in good stead just now.

Anyone who knows middle-class France knows well that it is strong enough to stand heavier financial strain than it has, and if the national prudence prevents trade opening out as much as it might, it also stands as a tower of strength against folly and extravagance, fortified by the power to save which is a national inheritance.

Valor Rewarded by Name.

Private Jean Bonnafous of the 66th French Chasseurs is a hero, but is probably destined to be known by the nickname of Soup so long as he lives. It is certainly one of the most comical stories of the war. "Jean Bonnafous was carrying soup for the men of his squad," is the official account, "when he suddenly caught a glimpse of a German. The 'boche' was making his way to our second line of trenches and was carrying bombs. Without hesitation, Bonnafous threw the boiling hot soup over the German and then killed him." The bulletin quaintly adds: "Nothing is known of what the comrades of Bonnafous said when they knew their soup was gone."

In Australia the original flowers were scentless, but the leaves odoriferous.

In the Trenches

That he had been in the trenches for twelve days, "somewhere in France," and during that period he never had his boots off, is the brief message Tom Babcock sends to his friends here on a postal card dated Aug 13th.

Threshed by Moonlight

A new departure in the threshing line in this district occurred on Aug. 23rd, when James McEwing of Queen Hill held a moonlight pea threshing. The engine and separator were set out in the field and started about 6 p.m., continuing till about 10 p.m., finishing up a 12 acre field of peas in that time.

New Bridge at Lovat

The old wooden bridge over the Willow Creek, just west of Lovat, is to be replaced with a concrete and steel structure which will be the biggest bridge in the township of Bruce. The abutments are to be 24 ft. high, and will be built on spiled foundation. The span is 36 ft. The 8th con. will be closed there while the work is being done, and will take about two months. Jas McKinnon has the contract for the cement work and Hunter Bridge & Boiler Co. supply the steel. The old wooden bridge stood 17 years, and the new one, being all concrete surface, should last for ages.

Will Enlist

Mr. Thornton Pear, who has been employed in McLachlan's bakery for some months, intends enlisting for service and has gone to visit his home in Teeswater for a short time before taking up training at London. Mr Pear made many warm friends since coming to town, and before his departure was presented with a nice travelling bag and outfit by the Baptist Bible Class, of which he was a member. He is a sturdy and athletic type of young man and will make an ideal soldier boy, whether dressed in parade uniform or holding a place in the trenches.

Married and Gone West

Mr. Walter Stark left on Saturday for Swan Lake, Man., to take a position in a flour mill there. He goes to the west doubly armed for the battle of life, being accompanied by his young bride, nee Miss Eva Parker, a daughter of Mr. Horatio Parker of Brant Tp. The marriage took place quietly in Walkerton on Wednesday previous to their departure. They have the hearty good wishes of their many friends here for a happy and prosperous voyage through life. Walter is an energetic young man, with several years' experience in the milling business, and we have no doubt but will make good in the west.

From Sandling Camp

Pte. Alex Blue wrote a letter on Aug. 3rd to his father here, in which he stated that probably he and the other Bruce boys would be on the firing line by the time the next letter from home reached him. All the Bruce boys went up to see Sam Fleming and Tom Babcock before those two crossed the Channel. They were to leave on Aug. 3rd to reinforce the 1st Battalion. George Purdy had been over to Shorncliffe with them. He looks fine and fat but not as fat as Jay. Alex thinks Bruce is better represented there than any other county in Canada. "A lot of them have been up and done their little bit," he says, "and we are bound to do ours. Although the war is just commencing, the Canadians are having just a few little incidents. The 1st Battalion went into action one morning at seven o'clock, and in twenty minutes they came out with only 43 men out of 1150. A bunch left here a week or ten days ago and came out of it in three days with thirty. That's going some. The Germans broke through the lines were entanglements three times, but did not succeed in getting the trench. The Canadians have not got the nerve to retreat. They have yet to learn that, for we stick like glue. We had Milton Aitken, an Allenford boy, here the other day from the trenches. He knows Frank Carter, Dave and Wes Porter. He is in charge of a machine gun, holding the rank of sergeant, and had to report for service again next morning. I have been over to look up some of the Bruce boys among the wounded soldiers, but could not see any. It is a pitiful sight to see those poor boys in all kinds of shapes, but they seem to be all in good spirits. Not downhearted, are they, judging by the way they sing. We are doing lots of billeting just now, sleeping where night overtakes us, so you see what a soldier's life is. To play this game we have to take care of ourselves, for we are exposed to all kinds of weather. The Paisley boys are all in No 1 shape, ready to advance on the German trenches with the cold steel."

Has Telephone

We notice by the Wiarton Canadian Echo that the mayor of that town says he could not get into communication with the recruiting officer here when he had a couple of recruits to send down, and they had to go to London to enlist. Well, Jas. Houston, the recruiting officer located in Paisley, has telephones galore, long distance and short distance, rural and urban. Bell general and Bruce rural, and has connection with all parts of the Dominion, including Wiarton, also connection with Major Hay, O.C. 32nd Regt., who lives a few miles out of town. Next time Wiarton wants the Paisley recruiting headquarters, call up Dr Houston and if he is not at home, ring up The Advocate Office and we'll get you in right if at all possible.

Live Poultry Moving

—The Simcoe Poultry Co., of Paisley, are preparing to make their first shipment of live poultry to the New York market. This company handled half a million pounds from Western Ontario stations last season, and they consider the prospects good for a similar amount of business during this fall and winter. As the patrons know, the birds are all delivered alive, and shipped out in special cars with all steel adjustable compartments, with ample accommodation for feeding and watering en route, which carry them through in the best of shape to the most distant markets. The poultry markets of this continent are largely influenced by the demand from Jewish residents in the large cities, and the chief demand from the American descendents of that ancient people comes at the time of the Hebrew holidays, four of which we are told come this year in the month of September. New York city has become so Jewish in complexion of population that it is sometimes described as an island surrounded by water and inhabited by Jews. This explains, therefore, why so many Ontario turkeys, geese, ducks and chickens are journeying so far ere gracing the consumers' tables.

Rev John McNeill in Knox Church

The largest congregation that has been seen in Knox church for many years was that which assembled there for the union service on Sunday evening, when the pulpit was occupied by Rev John McNeill, B.A., pastor of Walmer Road Baptist church, Toronto. Arrangements for this appearance of an old Paisley boy before an interdenominational audience was a happy means of affording all old friends and acquaintances the opportunity of hearing one who had grown up amongst us and later went out into the bigger world and attained the fame of being one of the greatest platform speakers in our land. The power of the simple message he sought to convey to his hearers, as he pointed them to the Christ who is the centre of the spiritual hopes of our race, will long be remembered by all who sat in the pews on Sunday evening. There was a reminiscent flavor to his introductory remarks, when he referred to his early life here. He recalled that as a boy he had sometimes wandered away from the parental sanctuary on a Sabbath—and boys were not in those days permitted to wander much in that way—and found his way into Knox church. He was impressed by the grand solemnity of the place, and never dreamed that he one day would occupy the pulpit. He now deemed it a great delight and privilege to do so. Mr. McNeill is a magnetic speaker in other platform capacity than preacher, and had he sought to electrify his audience by a war discourse he could have done so, as was manifest in his brief reference to that all absorbing topic, but he chose rather to make the highest use of the opportunity of addressing a throng of personal friends, acquaintances and admirers by telling to them in his most earnest way the old, old story of the gospel. The offering presented at this service, which is to be donated to the Red Cross Fund, amounted to $58.65.

County Patriotic Grant?

The war has called a special meeting of the County Council to be held at Walkerton on Thursday, Sept. 9th, at one o'clock, for the purpose of considering the advisability of making a grant for patriotic purposes. At a public meeting held in Walkerton about a month ago the opinion was strongly expressed that the County of Bruce, notwithstanding the great already made by the County council, had not done its duty in proportion to other Counties, and it was resolved that steps should be taken to secure private subscriptions and to endeavor to have the local municipalities or County Council give grants for patriotic purposes. It was first thought that this should be in the direction of purchasing machine guns but the committee has received a letter from the Acting Minister of Militia stating that so many machine guns have been generously donated that the Government have already purchased all that can be manufactured within a reasonable time, and it has been decided that our efforts should be directed to secure contributions to the Patriotic Fund, a Fund for the benefit of disabled Canadian soldiers, and the Red Cross Fund, for all of which money is urgently needed. A letter was sent out to the different municipalities asking the opinion as to whether the grant should be made by the local municipality or by the County Council, and a great number of them passed a resolution in favor of the County taking the matter up and asking the Warden to call a special meeting of the Council for that purpose, which he has done. Although the County and some of the municipalities have already made a grant to the Patriotic Fund, we are informed that the local committee has received back out of that fund over $3000 for wives and children of the soldiers of the County of Bruce who enlisted and are now drawing between $425 and $515 per month, and the chairman, Sir Herbert Amee, writes that in all $100,000 a month is expended, so it can readily be seen that this fund will soon be depleted. The Advocate maintains that the whole expense of equipping our overseas contingents, together with paying our soldiers and providing fully for their dependents should be drawn from the Dominion treasury. But as our legislators are not doing what we consider should be done in this national business, we are ready to promote the raising of funds for the purpose by other means, so are in favor of the County Council making a further levy for the Patriotic Fund. The request is made that a committee from Paisley be appointed to wait on the County Council next Thursday and urge the giving of a liberal grant. We would suggest that a meeting of citizens be held to either appoint a committee to Walkerton or authorize the reeve to vote for a grant. Let Paisleyites talk it over and take some action. If we are to do our bit we must be ready to give! give!! give!!! until the cause of the Allies is carried to a victorious consummation and the war ended.

HER DREAMS CAME TRUE

MELLE. C. GAUDREAU

Rochon P.Q., Jan. 14th, 1915.

"I suffered for many years with terrible Indigestion and Constipation. I became thin and miserable. I had frequent dizzy spells and became so run down that I never thought I would get well again.

A neighbor advised me to try 'Fruit-a-tives'. I did so and to the surprise of my doctor, I began to improve and realized me to go on with 'Fruit-a-tives'. I continued this medicine and all my Indigestion and Constipation was relieved. I consider that I owe my life to 'Fruit-a-tives' and I want to say to those who suffer from Indigestion, Constipation or Headaches, try 'Fruit-a-tives'. Give this lovely fruit medicine a fair chance and you will get well the same as I did".

A Grand Success

The Patriotic Picnic Gives $268.13 for the Red Cross Fund

Those who were interested in the success of the mammoth picnic of last Thursday were handed out just a little better than they really desired in the shape of weather, as the day was so bright and dry that all farmers were able to get to work at the harvesting, so could not follow the crowd to Paisley park and join in the patriotic demonstration, which turned out to be a splendid success, although the attendance was much smaller than expected.

The advertised programme was carried out, and provided a good afternoon's sport and entertainment. The procession to the grounds was headed by the town band, with the Boy Scouts, citizens and school children following.

The addresses by Capt R T Cockburn on the grounds in the afternoon and at the concert in the hall proved most interesting features of the day's proceedings. Capt Cockburn is a stalwart soldier upon whose frame the effects of injuries sustained in fighting the foe on the fields of battle are plainly apparent. He was wounded eleven different times, also inhaled poisonous gas fumes, and was buried in a trench by the upheaving explosion of a Jack Johnson shell. He is quite lame, and his appearance on the platform as he came forward to speak was in itself enough to awaken patriotic sympathy within the breast of the most unemotional person. He described the trenches, which are dug for protection of the troops as they meet the enemy. The men dig two feet into the ground, throwing the loose earth up on the side facing the enemy, making a parapet four or five feet high, upon which bags of sand are also piled to add to the height and security from bullets. Exposure of a head above the line of protection means almost certain death, as the Germans are good marksmen and keep an eye on every opening. There is a routine of duty to be followed by the soldiers. They are called out half an hour before daylight every morning, as it is at the early dawn and at the close of day that the most attacks are made. So many hours in the front trenches and so many hours to rest and recuperate in the back trenches which are protected by top coverings. The best of rations are furnished. Notwithstanding the dangers to life in the trenches, the boys seem to really enjoy the life. Not many long faces are seen there, and more smiles than in the audience before the speaker. The fighting experience varies from being picked off quietly by a sniper while walking in a trench to being instantaneously and teetotally destroyed by a large shell explosion. Shells fall at times upon the trenches and fields at the rate of 200 per minute, the shower including all sizes from the 7-lb whizzlite to the Jack Johnson. "Hell's half acre" is the term applied to one small area which had been the scene of much fighting. Capt Cockburn appealed to the young men to enlist for service and help to defeat the Germans who are guilty of many brutal atrocities in the lands they have overrun. If we could see the abject misery and poverty of the women and children of France and Belgium we would be ready to do anything. He said that the soldier there could hardly be held in the trenches after seeing cruelties that had been perpetrated by the German soldiers, such as cutting hands and ears off people who could not defend themselves and crucifying three Canadian soldiers who had fallen into their hands. We are living in the freest country on God's green earth. Whether the Germans come over here and use us as they have Belgium depends on whether we go over and help carry the battle to them.

The ladies of the committee managed several booths for the sale of refreshments and flowers, assisted by a contingent of young ladies and children who moved about selling the different commodities, and refreshments were also served at tables in the large military tent. A thriving business was carried on, and a large amount of money taken in. Several motor cars were operated on the jitney service, and were well patronized.

The lacrosse club put on an interesting game between the married and single, the latter winning handily.

Port Elgin baseball club were worsted by Paisley, although for a while it looked like a win for the lakesiders. There was some good snappy ball for several innings, but at times it was very ragged and erratic. Score 10-9.

The concert in the hall was the crowning event of the day. It was probably the best ever given here by local talent alone. The singing of the four young lady soloists—Misses Mildred Johnston, Edna Carter, Zeta Black and Annetta Johnston—was of an exceptionally high order, and would seldom be excelled by a groupe of professional vocalists. There were several selections by a mixed chorus, a mixed double quartet and male double quartet, solo by Mr Merklinger, of Hanover, who has been in town for several weeks, and is a most creditable representative from that very musical town, also by Mr I. R Putnam; selections by the orchestra, and pipe music by Mr Duncan McArthur, who was home from Mannville, Alberta, last week. Duncan is a braw Highlander from Bruce.

The total proceeds of the picnic and concert amounted to over $350, and after deducting expenses there will be a handsome sum for the Red Cross Fund.

Below is the list of prize winners in the sports:

100 yards dash—Harold Blue, Harold Collins.

Boys' race—Jimmie Sutherland, F Shoemaker.

Fat men's race—Louis Rankin, John McArthur.

Port Elgin always gets our whole holidaying population for Dominion Day, and that was the only adjacent burg from which came any number of visitors on Thursday. This may be accepted as evidence of a reciprocal spirit.

Total receipts from picnic and concert including donations of $13, $354.81: Booth expenses, $36.44; printing, advertising, telephone and postage, $22.60; freight on tent, $1.70; expenses of Mr. R. C. Cockburn, speaker, $9.65; transportation and meals of baseball team and band members from Port Elgin and Walkerton, $16.30; balance to go to Red Cross fund, $263.13.

Mark Sutherland saw and felt only her tears and sorrow, with all a lover's solicitude. She took advantage of his tenderness. She had failed to convince his judgment, and now she resolved to try the power of love. She let him draw her to his bosom; she dropped her head upon his shoulder, with her blushing, tearful face and soft hair against his cheek, her arm upon his neck, and half-caressing, suffering herself to be caressed, and let him feel how sweet her love was, by the unutterable sweetness of her shy caress; and when his heart was weak unto death, she pleaded with him, yieldingly, submissively, tearfully, that he would not doom her to a lot so cruel, so terrible, that it would kill her in a year.

"My dearest India, you are sole mistress of your own destiny, and, to a great extent, of mine. I did hope that you would have borne me company in my pilgrimage. No, dear India, ardently as I once desired that you should be, from this time forward, the partner of my lot, I see it was exacting far too much. No, dearest; painful as it must be, I must go forth alone to do battle with an adverse fate. I go forth with youth, and health; with a liberal education, and some talent; when I have attained fame and fortune, then, like a true knight, I will come and lay them at my lady's feet, and ask for my blessed reward."

She said that she could not let him go; it would break her heart. Would he not give up his purpose, and stay with her? Her head was still upon his shoulder, and her face against his cheek. With a slight movement, at once shy and fond, she pressed her lips to his neck. Would he not give up his purpose for her sake, and stay with her?

He felt his fortitude and strength fast leaving him. Amid the fondest caresses, he said:

"My own dear India! I will not stay so long as I said. I will not stay till I have won fame or fortune. I cannot remain away so long—in a year or two—I will be back to claim my blessing."

Her tears fell like rain. Still she clasped, and pressed, and kissed his neck, and said that would not do at all; she could not bear it; she should die.

He kissed away her tears and then proposed again that she should go with him.

She lifted up her head and answered, No, she could not go. No, if he loved her, he must give up his project and stay with her.

Full of doubt and trouble, he answered:

"My dearest India, I told you that this action of mine is a measure of conscience. Do you suppose that I would make that sacrifice, except from the most righteous principles. If from my great love for you I could now sacrifice my conscience, you would soon lose all esteem for me; no honorable woman can continue to love a man who has forfeited his own and her respect."

Coldly she withdrew herself from him, saying:

"I see how it is, sir! You do not love me; you seek an excuse to break with me; you needed only to have frankly named your wish, to have had your plighted troth restored. You are free, sir—to unite yourself with one of the favored race, the objects of your manifest preference, if you please——"

This insulting clause was cast at him with inexorable scorn, as she turned to leave the room.

His brow crimsoned with the sudden shame, and—

"This from you, India!" he exclaimed.

But the scorn and anger slowly passed from her face, as he rose and advanced toward her, saying:

"But you are excited; I will not lay your bitter words to heart, nor suffer you to leave me in anger."

Love and anger were balanced in her bosom so evenly, that it took but a trifle to disturb the equilibrium; and his kind words completely upset the scale, and love ascended. Turning to him once more, and throwing herself in his open arms, she burst into tears, and said:

"Dearest Mark, only give up this mad project, and I am all yours. Oh, you know I am, any way; for even now the separation that would pain you, would kill or madden me! Dear Mark, give it up, for my sake, for your dear mother's sake, for all our sakes! Stay with us! do not divide us, and break our hearts! We all love you so! We would do anything in the world for you, if you would stay with us! And I only grow angry and lose my senses when you talk of leaving us! Dearest Mark, don't leave us."

And as she pleaded, hidden her tears and blushes on his shoulder, and clasping, and pressing, and kissing his neck and cheek. The pleadings of young beauty to young love, most painful to resist; yet they were resisted, mournfully and firmly resisted.

She raised her head from his shoulder.

"And you persist in your purpose!" she said.

"My India, I cannot do otherwise."

"Notwithstanding all the suffering you may cause your mother, your relatives, and me?"

"My own India, I would I could bear all your grief in my own person."

"But you adhere to your resolution?"

"I have no alternative."

"And this is your final decision?"

He bowed.

"Even if you should lose me forever?"

He started, as if suddenly struck by a bullet. He changed color. At last she said, slowly and calmly:

"Will you please to answer my question?"

"India," he said, "I will not for a moment admit such a possibility. God will never repay fidelity to conscience with calamity."

"Perhaps it might not be a calamity. The question is now before you—do not evade it."

"No, thank Heaven, the intolerable alternative of resigning you to my principles is not put before me."

"I assure you that the alternative is now submitted to you, sir. And I adjure you, by your conscience, and by by the strength of your vaunted principles, to decide the question, which I now repeat to you—if the adherence of your present purpose involves the final loss of my hand and heart, do you still persist in that purpose?"

Something in her tone caught up his glance. Never in all their lives had she seemed to him so beautiful; he studied her face; nor did she turn it from him, nor avert her glance. She met his searching gaze proudly, imperially; she seemed to wish that he should read her soul, and know its immutable determination. There was no weakness, or wavering, on that high, haughty brow now; there was nothing but calm, indomitable resolution. He gazed upon her in wonder, and in sorrow, some time fascinated by the imperious beauty of her young brow. He took her hand again. He answered, solemnly:

"India, you have adjured me, by my conscience, by the sacredness of my honor, to say whether, were the alternative finally before me, I should resign my resolution, or be resigned by you. India, I may not, must not, evade this. By my sacred honor and my hopes of heaven, come what may, of trial, of suffering, or of agony, I will never forego this purpose, to which reason and conscience alike urge me."

"And that is your final determination!"

He bowed.

"Now, then, hear mine; but first I give you back your plighted troth and its less perishable symbol"—here she drew a diamond ring from her finger, and handed it to him—"and I remove your image from my heart with less difficulty than I disentangle this miniature one from my chain"—here she took a locket, set with diamonds, from her chatelaine, and handed it to him. He received both pledges back. "And now," she said, "let me make you thoroughly acquainted with my thought upon this subject which so interests you, so that you may see how far as the East is from the West, is my thought from yours. Know, that I like the position that I occupy, the power that I wield; our plantation is as large as a German or Italian principality, and more profitable, than the subjects of such a principality. We have more power than its prince. And I was born to this power; I am accustomed to it; I like it, Heaven crowned me with it; and do you think that I will discrown my brow to become—what? A drudging peasant? Never! And now, hear my oath. As you are the 'dupe' of a party, as apparently, never to meet again until you have recovered your manhood and independence enough to abjure this pernicious influence, and abandon the mad project to which it has forced you—so help me God!"

And, turning haughtily away, she left the room.

CHAPTER VII.

It was over. Until this, he had not realized his true position. Nay, he did not fully realize it now. He sat, as one stunned, in the seat into which he had dropped when the door closed behind her. Until now, he had been elevated by a high enthusiasm in his purpose, and supported by a firm faith in her sympathy and co-operation—a faith, the strength of which he had not known until it was stricken from him, and he was left weaker than a child.

But now—oh! this was indeed the bitterness of death. In the first stunned moment after his fall from such a height of confidence and joy, into such a depth of desolation and wretchedness. This was the fang of the adder, struck deep in his heart, and poisoning all his soul!—with what? With distrust!—distrust of her, of himself, of all men and women! He sat there as one in a trance. And the hours that passed over him were as a blank.

He was aroused by a psychological disturbance.

Why should he immolate himself upon the altar of a principle that one-half of the Christian world would consider a mere madness? How if he was self-deceived? She whose whole soul had glowed at the mere mention of true magnanimity—how had she regarded him? How had she received him in his new aspect? Not with a fervent, inspiring gaze, imparting courage and energy to his soul; not with approval and sympathy, and faithful cordial concurrence, confirming his faith, strengthening him, for any less noble purpose, but otherwise. She had heard him with repelling hand and averted eye, and scorn.

Oh! there had been an element of worship and of aspiration in his love for India. And was this idol a mere stone? Was her decision not really just, and was he not indeed a fanatic?

To believe this, would end the struggle and the agony at once. To confess this, would restore harmony and happiness to the grievously-disturbed family circle, and peace and joy to himself and his India!

Would it be so easy to step from his post, to abjure his principles, to silence his conscience?

No? Even amid the intoxicating dream of his beautiful India's love, his stern soul answered, No!

He knew himself to be right; he knew that he was not self-deceived. Not even now, in this hour of bitter trial, would his moral sense be so confused. In his conscience, the dividing line between right and wrong was too sharply defined, and there was no possibility of confusing or mistaking the boundary.

And so the mental sophistry of the temptation ended.

And now for the moral conflict. Admitted that his convictions were those of pure rational duty, why should he sacrifice so much to them? Did any one live up to his or her high idea of right? On the contrary, who did not silence the voice of conscience every day of their lives? And did they not, the best of them, compound for all this by going to church and confessing themselves "lost and ruined sinners," returning with a clean conscience, like a tablet newly sponged over? Now, why could not he also do his pleasure, enjoy his wealth, hold to this world, and secure heaven?

It would not do. His heart, it is true, had not been touched by the spirit of Christianity, yet his mind was too clear and right to deceive itself. That grace of God which hath appeared unto all men, taught him that Christ was not the minister of sin—not one who wiped out the sins of the soul, to make room for more of the same sort of matter. In a word he felt and knew that Christ was not the minister of sin.

This sorely tried and tempted man had made no professions, but he nevertheless possessed a large portion of natural conscientiousness, and he had a frank, light-hearted manner of doing right, bordering on levity and nonchalance.

All his family, from the cold-hearted, clear-headed Clement Sutherland, down to the ardent and impulsive India, had miscalculated the strength of his character and the firmness of his purpose; for though indeed the family were much disturbed that he should entertain such purposes as he had revealed, yet none of them doubted that the influence which should be brought to bear upon him would compel him to abandon his project. And thus agitation at this time was calmness, in comparison with the confusion, the tremendous storm of indignation and persecution, that afterwards arose and hurtled around him. There are no wars so bloody as civil wars; there are no feuds so deadly as family feuds. Others may spare, but they will never spare! Others may repent; they never. It would seem that a fatal blindness of sight and hardness of heart fell upon them as a judgment from Heaven for their unnatural sin.

SMART CLOTHES FOR THE YOUNG GIRL.

The plaited skirt for the young girl is proving a great success, if we may take the great number seen at the summer resorts as a criterion. When the whole dress, shirtwaist and skirt, is made in plaited effect, the result is very pleasing indeed. This dress, Ladies' Home Journal Pattern No. 8988, has a raised waistline, and consists of a waist opening in front with yoke finished with a turn-down collar, full-length sleeves with open cuffs, and a fitted lining, a seven gore skirt, perforated for deep hem facing. The pattern cuts in size 14, 16, 18 and 20 years, requiring in size 18, 11¼ yards 36-inch material.

Ladies' Home Journal Pattern No. 8980 is a Ladies' and Misses' Peplum Waist, opening in front with roll collar or Quaker collar and full-length or shorter sleeves, and a circular peplum. The pattern cuts in size 32 to 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards 36-inch material.

Pattern No. 8081 is a Misses' One-Piece Skirt, gathered to a three-piece yoke, with slightly raised waistline. Suitable for flouncing. The pattern cuts in sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Size 16 requires 3¾ yards 36-inch material.

Patterns, 15 cents each, can be purchased at your local Ladies' Home Journal Pattern dealer, or from The Home Pattern Company, 183-A George Street, Toronto.

HAS THE U.S. THE RIGHT TO SELL ARMS TO THE ALLIES?

Much has been said and written in our periodicals on the right of this country (the United States) to sell arms and munitions to belligerents in the European war. If the Government of this country were engaged in such a business, I can conceive that a very grave question would arise; but no one pretends to lay such a charge to the American Government.

But it is claimed that the U. S. should prohibit her citizens from carrying on such a business, as she is on friendly terms with all the nations engaged in the present European struggle. Granting this, it does not follow that it becomes the duty of this Government to interfere, as no buyers are discriminated against and all have an equal right to purchase the arms and munition of war at likhum. The only reason that Germany and Austria have protested is, not because the sale is an unfriendly act, but because of the impossibility of either of these countries to receive the goods should they purchase the same. The general blockade of their ports is so complete and effectual that delivery is out of the question, and only because they cannot secure the delivery of their orders should they buy do they wish to deny the privilege of buying by the allies, who are sure of a prompt delivery.

We are accused of exporting arms and ammunition to the enemies of Germany. That would not be a breach of neutrality, if true, but the fact is the buyers do their own exporting and pay the freight, assuming all the risks of transportation. President Wilson very aptly replied to this accusation when he informed the Germans that "American citizens have always had that right and cannot be deprived of it. They will sell to you on the same terms." Germany replies, "We do not want your arms and ammunition, as we have plenty of our own. We only want your wheat and cotton, but Great Britain puts a barrier in the way of our obtaining these things. We ask you to remove the barrier for us." In other words, Germany, true to her instincts, insists upon "hogging" the whole business. But, be it said to Germany's credit, that the Imperial Government has never made such an outlandish claim, nor ventured to put such a narrow construction upon the great law of nations.

The only objections have come from the German newspapers and a few irresponsible persons in this country. Officials of Germany well know that under the rules of international law they would have no right to object to the selling of arms and ammunition to belligerents.

They tell us that we could stop the war in short order if we would only prohibit these sales. Yes, by giving Germany the victory, perhaps. And we are asked to do this in the name of neutrality. To help Germany because she alone was prepared for the war by a military policy pursued for many decades.

If neutrality is to be placed on a higher plane than the law of nations, then we are bound to inquire upon which side the moral principles predominate. Who began the war? Which of the contending parties is responsible for all these horrors and the awful misery that follows in its wake?

We know the reasons advanced by Germany, and how spurious they have been shown to be. But Germany claims she is fighting for her own existence; and so claim the Powers on the opposite side. Who is to decide the moral quality in this strife?

There is no tribunal constituted with power to enforce its decrees. We must each judge of the right involved for himself and herself. We know that Germany, after proclaiming her entry into the war, to defend and save her own existence, immediately, and without warning, stepped over her own border and invaded a little kingdom she had given her solemn word to maintain her neutrality, come what might, and she carried fire and the sword into Belgium. This has not the appearance of remaining on the defensive to defend her own existence, and this act casts suspicion upon the sincerity of her whole claim.

The belief of fully 90 per cent. of the people of the U. S. is that Germany began this war without any just cause, and that when she invaded Belgium she committed an act that made her the great outlaw of the nations—a nation with whom no treaties or agreements have any binding force. It is the settled opinion of Americans that there exists the most irresponsible and incorrigible maniac at the head of the German Empire to be found in all Europe, and that it is indispensable that he be disarmed and throttled at any price, before peace can be restored.

Cow Testing Associations.

The cow testing associations is a plan of co-operation among dairymen for the purpose of regularly and economically testing their cows for production of milk and butter fat. A usual estimate places the average production of cows at 175 pounds of butter per cow per year. In these days people who are familiar with dairying think in terms of butter fat, and if the above average be translated to fat it makes about 150 pounds. At 30 cents a pound, which has been the average price for the last three years, the annual income per cow is $45.

If the above figures are taken as a foundation, it is very apparent that there are many cows which are not paying the cost of their keeping. The use of the scales and the Babcock test has discovered in almost every herd tested some cows that do not pay the cost of keeping. If dairying is to be made as profitable a business as it ought to be and as it has a right to be under proper management, these robber cows must be apprehended.

There is no means of knowing what a cow is producing without weighing and testing her milk at regular intervals. A dairyman selling milk by volume may not be concerned in the butter fat content farther than is necessary to keep up to legal standard, but one who is selling butter fat is vitally concerned in the amount each cow produces. Each dairyman may test his own cows, but facing the condition squarely it is known that very few do.

At a recent dairymen's meeting this point was raised—that a testing association was not necessary, because each man could test his own cows. The question was then asked: "How many present have Babcock's testers?" Twelve out of a gathering of 50 answered in the affirmative. In reply to the question, "How many of you who have testers use them?" only one answered in the affirmative.

The object of cow testing associations is to make the use of scales and Babcock machine a community affair —to unite dairymen into a partnership for the purpose of employing a trained man to visit each herd at regular monthly intervals and weigh and test the milk of each cow. At the end of the year, this man gives each dairyman a record of the individuals in his herd with little work or trouble to him and at the cost of about $1 per cow.

The tester weighs and samples the milk of each cow at the evening and morning milking and tests the combined sample for butter fat. Before leaving, he makes calculations so that he may leave with the dairyman the record of each cow down to date.

In European countries and some of the states in this country, one of the duties of a tester is to weigh and keep a record of food consumed by the cows. The cost to the dairyman for complete testing varies from 80 cents to $1.50 a year for each cow. This variation is due to the number of cows in the associations and to the size of individual herds.

SUMMER HEAT HARD ON BABY

No season of the year is so dangerous to the life of little ones as is the summer. The excessive heat throws the little stomach out of order so quickly that unless prompt aid is at hand the baby may be beyond all human help before the mother realizes he is ill. Summer is the season when diarrhoea, cholera infantum, dysentry and colic are most prevalent. Any one of these troubles may prove deadly if not promptly treated. During the summer the mothers best friend is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and keep baby healthy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A SPLENDID RECORD.

Most people know that the Canadian Pacific Railway traverses over eleven thousand miles of country in Canada, encounters even tropical and arctic weathers; cuts its way through the rugged and difficult country along the shores of Lake Superior; crosses the endless prairies of the west; and finally runs through the glories of the Canadian Rockies where the road in some places has been hewn out of the mountain sides under towering peaks; through great canyons; and in other places tunnels and piral rails have to be negotiated, all necessitating care in operation. But in spite of all these difficulties the Canadian Pacific has not killed a single passenger in a train accident during the past two years, which is a record Canada can place against the record boast of the Pennsylvania Railroad not having killed a passenger in three years. Especially so when it is considered that the latter road has not the same climate conditions to face and the easy country through which it traverses.

GOOD WATER FOR ARMY HORSE.

A Plentiful Supply Is of Vital Importance to an Army.

Suitable drinking water is of vital importance to an army, and this is only one of a multitude of problems that must be studied carefully by those who conduct a successful campaign. The water of a camp is a matter of great importance. Only running water is used.

In the German army the upstream water is used for drinking purposes and the downstream water for watering horses and for bathing. Suitable signs notify the men which water is safe to drink and which may be used only for bathing. In shallow or narrow streams basins are dug, or small dams built so as to form a reservoir of ample dimensions.

Stepping-stones are provided to keep the water clean, as well as board protection to prevent the banks from crumbling. Basins are dug for watering horses, troughs are provided only in case of necessity, and are then propped on posts and filled by means of pumps. Pipes may be driven if water lies at a reasonable depth—in other words, not more than 20 feet. Depending upon their size, these pipes will deliver from four to twenty-two gallons of water per minute.

Grass Tree Gum for Germany.

It has just come to light at Sydney, Australia, that with the astounding preparedness with which the Germans entered upon this war they had for several years prior to the declaration of hostilities been buying immense quantities of Australian grass tree gum, which is convertible into an explosive much more powerful than dynamite, and which explosive is probably now being used against the Britons and their allies.

MUSCHIEF MAKER

Now Strong and Robust.

An adult's food that can save a baby proves itself to be nourishing and easily digested and good for big and little folks. An Eastern man says:

"When our baby was about eleven months old he began to grow thin and pale. This was attributed to the heat and the fact that his teeth were coming, but, in reality, the poor little thing was starving, his mother's milk not being sufficient nourishment.

"One day after he had cried bitterly for an hour, I suggested that my wife try him on Grape-Nuts. She soaked two teaspoonfuls in half a cup of warm water for 5 or 6 minutes, then poured off the liquid and to it added a like amount of rich milk and a little sugar. This baby ate ravenously.

"It was not many days before he forgot all about being nursed, and has since lived almost exclusively on Grape-Nuts. To-day the boy is strong and robust, and as cute a mischief-maker as a thirteen-months'-old baby is expected to be.

"Use this letter any way you wish, for my wife and I can never praise Grape-Nuts enough after the brightness it has brought to our household."

Grape-Nuts is not made for a baby food, but experience with thousands of babies shows it to be among the best, if not entirely the best in use. Being a scientific preparation of Nature's grains, it is equally effective as a body and brain builder for grown-ups. "There's a Reason."

SIR JOHN SIMON'S BIG SACRIFICE.

Gave Up $75,000 Cabinet Position for One Worth Less Than $25,000.

Few men have ever made a bigger sacrifice for political life than Sir John Simon, the Home Secretary. He was, as is known, Attorney-General, and he was offered the Lord Chancellorship. From the pecuniary point of view there are no offices in even the wide British Empire or in any other country which are so glittering as either of these two offices. The Attorney-General, between salary and fees, must get something like fifteen thousand pounds a year. Sometimes the figures have gone much higher. The Attorney-General is leading counsel in all great State cases, and once the late Sir Charles Russell was lucky enough to find such a case when there was an international arbitration in the Behring Sea, and people whispered that the fortunate Irishman had drawn that year as much as thirty thousand pounds. But it may be taken that fifteen thousand pounds is the average income of the Attorney. That is ten thousand pounds more than the Prime Minister receives.

The Lord Chancellorship is not so highly paid, for the salary is ten thousand pounds a year. But it is, of course, the greatest prize in the legal profession; the woolsack figures in every school book as representing the goal to which the ambitious youth who becomes a barrister has to aspire. The Lord Chancellorship has the additional attraction of carrying with it the handsome pension for life of five thousand pounds a year. Then the Lord Chancellor is the head of the Judiciary, and he is the presiding officer of the House of Lords and a member of the Cabinet.

Avoided Retirement.

Most lawyers, when they get to that exalted position, are already in the acre and yellow leaf after a long and laborious struggle in the legal profession. It is to them a haven of rest after a stormy life on tempestuous seas. But Sir John Simon, when he was offered the position, was still a young man. This astonishingly progressive youth was only 42. Yet he refused the glittering prize, and not only that, he gave up an office worth fifteen thousand pounds a year for one that is worth only five thousand pounds a year, and which is worth even less now because of the arrangement by which the Ministers "pooled" their salaries so that each Minister might have practically the same income of something like four thousand pounds a year.

What is the explanation of this refusal—unprecedented in British Parliamentary or legal history? It is evident that Sir John Simon values a merely political career more than the emoluments and the glitter of the highest legal offices. The general verdict in the House of Commons is that Sir John Simon took a poorly-paid political office because he hopes one day to be Prime Minister of the British Empire.

There can be little doubt that Sir John Simon has reason to entertain high ambitions. His enormous progress in so short a time is made the more remarkable by his not starting life with any advantages. His father was a Welsh Nonconformist clergyman, a hale and very hearty gentleman to this day.

Was Poor Boy.

When he went to Oxford the young Simon had to eke out a good deal of his living by the prizes which he won with great rapidity, and he fell in love with an Irish girl when he was still a youngster, married her, and was a husband and father while he was still struggling for his first briefs.

His lucidity of speech is accompanied by great suavity of temper and pleasantness of manner. Simon can make even a disagreeable bill quite simple and innocent. He was chosen the other day, for instance, to defend the Munitions bill, which introduced for the first time the principle of compulsion to workingmen, and when he sat down you might well have imagined that the real purpose of the measure was to present sugar sticks to all the workingmen, whereas the bill enabled the Government to fine any slackers among workingmen in these days of crisis.

THE AURORA BOREALIS.

Looked Upon By Barbarians As An Omen of Slaughter.

Many people believe that the aurora borealis is a phenomenon peculiar to modern times. But this is not true. The ancients used to call it chasmata, bolides and trabes, names which expressed the different colors of the lights.

The scarlet aurora was looked upon by the superstitious barbarians as an omen of direful slaughter; so it is not unusual for descriptions of bloody battles to contain allusions to northern lights.

In the annals of Cloon-mac-noise it is recorded that in 668 A.D., accompanying a terrible battle between Leinster and Munster, Ireland, a purple aurora lit the northern skies, foretelling the slaughter.

To the Latins and Greeks of southern Europe the phenomenon rarely appeared and therefore their writings are almost, if not entirely, silent concerning it, yet it was not unknown to them.

Fortunately there is prompt relief in Dr. Hamilton's Pills which immediately relieve the system of all poisons and disease-producing matter.

Dad Took It, All Right.

Slowly, sadly the young man came along the garden path to the arbor where 'neath blossoming roses the maiden waited.

"How did father take it?" she asked him anxiously.

"Oh, he took it all right," said the young man in a miserable voice.

"I'm so glad!" sighed the maid, in relief.

"Are you?" he replied, as he sank by her side on the seat. "Well, I can't say I am, dear. At first he wouldn't listen to me."

"But didn't you tell him you had $4,000 in the bank?" she exclaimed.

"I did, when all my other arguments had failed."

"And what did he do then?"

Tea Coming Into Great Favor.

Not in the memory of the oldest tea planter has the price of tea reached before the present figure in Colombo. There seems to be a widespread movement in favor of tea throughout the world, and the supply is insufficient to cope with the increased demand. Until the law of supply and demand adjusts itself higher prices for tea must be expected.

From His Native Town.

A tourist in Italy was surprised one morning to meet some people from his native town. "Why, Mrs. Lanceley!" he cried. "How do you do? You are the last person I expected to see in Italy!" "If it isn't Mr. Jones!" exclaimed the lady in surprise. "Yes we are spending a brief time here. You must call on us often. You know just how it is—people we never think much of at home seem like dear friends when we meet them in a strange country."

Aerial Torpedo Wonder.

An aerial torpedo that will travel a hundred miles under its own power is another formidable weapon of war Germany is about to launch at her enemies. The principle of the aerial torpedo is the same as the water torpedo. It is first projected by compressed air, then travels in a direct line under the power of its own propeller and under the guidance of its own rudder. With the aerial torpedo perfected, Germany would have a weapon more terrifying to London than all her Zeppelins, Taubes, fifty centimetre guns and undersea cruisers combined.

German Helmets.

Despite the heavy appearance of the German soldiers' helmets, says London Tit-Bits, they are exceedingly light. They are made of steel, but they are nearly as light as a straw hat, and far more comfortable. The large military-looking spike is not placed on the top of the helmet for ornament alone. There are several large holes in it which ventilate the wearer's head. The steel from which the helmet is made is exceedingly thin,—almost as thin as paper,—and all round the inside, where the helmet touches the head, there are a number of springs. These springs, which are covered with leather, serve to keep the helmet firmly on the head, without any great pressure.

BLONDES SHOULD BE CAREFUL.

Here Is a Warning, Girls, From a Man Who Knows.

Women of the blonde type take warning!

You must, above all things, if you are to avoid cancer of the skin, stay out in the hot sun. That admonition was made by Dr. C. Knowles during an illuminating discussion on the treatment of skin diseases before 500 members of the Philadelphia County Medical Society. Dr. Knowles said:

"A great percentage of skin diseases are cancerous growths. The blonde type of women when subjected to the rays of the sun is very susceptible to the disease. Not only the blonde woman, but the woman possessing a freckled face must avoid the sun. Such preventive measures will save them much trouble."

FRANCE UNTERRIFIED.

Few addresses made by the heads of of the nations at war have been as admirable in spirit and substance as that of President Poincare, made, too, in the very face of the news of the Russian reverses. France is not crushed, she is not dismayed; all that German frightfulness has essayed leaves her still unterrified. With a calmness and courage and an indomitability that afford a lesson to the world, the men in the trenches, and the people at home are going about their work buoyed up by the belief that they are fighting the battle of civilization, as they are, and confident that victory for the right will not forever be delayed and militarism forever be enthroned. Mrs Lamont, of Owen Sound, visited her daughter, Mrs Geo Addison, last week.

Mrs F. Creighton, of Brantford, is spending a few days under the parental roof.

Mrs W Rae spent the last week the guest of Mr and Mrs W Young.

Miss Dina Addison is spending a few weeks visiting her brother. Her many friends will be much pleased to know that she is greatly improved in health.

Mr Arch Dawson is making preparations for erecting a new house this fall, which will add another to the many handsome and comfortable residences on this concession.

The harvest has been very slow and backward this year, but last week saw a great deal cut and gathered in. If the present week is fine it will see almost all of the grain harvested. On account of the grain being so badly beaten down by the storm, it has made cutting a very slow process.

School opens on Wednesday, Sept 1st, to the joy of some and the sorrow of others.

WALKERTON

Rev R Perdue, who has been diligently preaching patriotic sermons, has posted up on the door of the English church here an honor roll of 24 names representing the number of young men of his congregation who are now under arms for the Empire. As this represents nearly one half of those who have enlisted from Walkerton, the gallant rector has reason to be proud of the way his flock is rallying to the flag.

Walkerton's tax rate this year will be 32 mills, the highest in the history of the town.

Mr John Waechter, who lives a few miles from Formosa, phoned Chief Ferguson early Sunday morning to the effect that he had taken possession of a horse and buggy which he found wandering along the road near his farm. The buggy contained fifteen empty bottles and fifteen full bottles of beer. The chief advised him to put the horse in the barn, as the owner would likely turn up later. The farmer, however, after putting the horse up, strolled down the road in search of the party, and eventually discovered a man all covered with mud and drenched to the skin lying prostrate in the ditch, and looking for all the world as if he had thus spent the night in the open. On conveying him to the house and reviving him Mr Waechter learned that the stranger was a farmer who had come from the Wingham dry belt to the wet part of Bruce for the summer, and after absorbing it, had fallen by the way.

Mrs Alexander Shaw, an old and esteemed resident of Walkerton, died at her home here on Friday evening last after a brief illness of appendicitis. The deceased, who was in her 77th year, was the widow of the late Alexander Shaw, K C, and has lived in Walkerton ever since the place became a county town. She was prominent in church and social circles and won the esteem of all with whom she came in contact. Born in Belleville, the deceased, whose maiden name was Anna Robertson, moved to Kincardine about sixty years ago with her parents, Mr and Mrs Peter Robertson. About five years later she was united in marriage to Mr Alexander Shaw, a promising young lawyer of Kincardine. On Walkerton being proclaimed a county town, Mr Shaw was appointed county solicitor, and moved here with his wife about forty-seven years ago. They continued to reside in Walkerton until their death, Mr Shaw practising law until his demise which occurred in April, 1911, at the ripe old age of 79 years. The late Mrs Shaw is survived by one daughter, Miss Isabelle, of town, and four sons, John R, one of the head officials of the Canada Furniture Manufacturers, Woodstock; Alexander, of San Diego, Cal; William M, of Walkerton, and Farquhar of Winnipeg. She also leaves one brother, Mr Norman Robertson of Walkerton, county treasurer of Bruce. The funeral, which was private, took place to the Walkerton cemetery on Sunday afternoon, Rev R Perdue of the Anglican church officiating at the house and grave.—Herald and Times.

THE WESTERN FAIR

London, September 10th to 18th

The prize list offered this year by the Western Fair Association is the most liberal in its history. In the Live Stock Departments the prizes are exceptionally large. The horse stables have been disinfected very thoroughly under the direction of Dr. Tamblyn, V.S., and everything put in first-class condition. In the cattle barns there will be increased accommodation, as last year tents had to be brought into service. A new sheep barn is being erected where accommodation has been provided for a very large sheep exhibit, as it is felt that the increase in the prize list will bring out all the large flocks. The poultry prizes are increased and should bring out all the best birds of Ontario. The prizes for grain and vegetables are also higher this year and there should be a large exhibit in this department. Prize lists, entry forms, programs and all information from the Secretary, A. M. Hunt, London, Ontario.

Mr. Jos. Vennard's Close Call

What might have been a fatal accident occurred last week while Mr. Jos. Vennard was working at the harvesting in the employ of Mr. John A. Howe. While in the act of unhitching the horses from a wagon in the barn, the whiffletrees became entangled in the loose ends of the sling ropes, jamming Mr. Vennard below the rack and behind one of the front wheels, crushing his foot and causing injuries about the chest which necessitated the doctor's attendance. Only the breaking of the sling ropes prevented a fatal accident.

Perhaps you think that the spirit of persecution went out with the fires of Smithfield. If you do, may you never have more reason for thinking otherwise than is contained in the simple narrative before you. I am not going to enter minutely into the details of all the scenes that followed that last interview between Mark and India. I have all this time gone around and about the subject, disliking to approach it. In real life, evil passion is not the graceful and dignified, fascinating being that we see it represented on the stage—for instance, in the togs and buskins of Brutus and Cassius, or the train and plumes of Lucretia Borgia. Nor has it a stately, measured gait, or a grand gesture. Fierce anger, hatred, and vengeance are of no rank. This has been suggested by the recollection of the manner in which Mark Sutherland was treated by his family.

He had made one more attempt to obtain another interview with India, by addressing to her a note. This note was returned, with the seal undisturbed and with an insulting menace to the effect that any communication addressed by Mr. Mark Sutherland to Miss Sutherland must be preceded by a complete and final renunciation of his present purposes, before it could be received by her. Full of bitterness, he wrote to her again, and concluded his note thus:

"I know you now, India; I no longer worship you. Alas! there is nothing in you to worship. And yet I love you still for that bewildering beauty and for the dream that is passing away. And you love me for something better than that; you love me, now that for conscience I withstand you, as you never loved me before. You wrong me in taking yourself away. There is a voice in your heart that assures you of this. But you stifle that voice. Be sure that Nature is a dread goddess, and Nemesis waits upon her bidding!"

There is something awful in the just anger of a noble-minded, high-spirited man; and thrice awful is it to the woman who loves him, when that anger falls upon herself.

India received this letter, and as she read it, bitter and scalding tears fell upon it. He had surmised the truth—she did love him now with tenfold strength and fervor, now that she had tried and proved his strength. There was something in him to love, to worship—something far more remarkable, more attractive, and more blinding than mere masculine beauty. There was firmness, courage, fortitude, moral strength; something that a true woman loves to rest upon. A wild and passionate longing seized her heart.

While the soul of India was convulsed in the terrible struggle between her strong and passionate affection, and her invincible spirit of antagonism, Mark Sutherland lingered at Cashmere.

Miss Sutherland had perseveringly absented herself from the drawing-room, and from the table—confining herself to her own room, and taking her meals there.

At length one day, the family, as usual, with the exception of India, sat down to dinner. There were present Clement and Paul Sutherland, Mrs. Vivian, Miss Vivian, Mr. Bolling, Mark and Lincoln. Clement Sutherland, the host, sat with the usual cloud upon his brow. When the waiter was about to lift the cover from the dish before him, he arrested him in it, by saying: "Stop, sir! where is Miss Sutherland? Go, and let her know that dinner waits."

The man bowed and left the room. An embarrassing pause and silence ensued, during which Clement Sutherland sat back in his chair, with a scowl upon his yellow forehead. All present felt that under all that ridiculous dramatic acting there was some real offense meant. The servant returned. Stepping lightly, he went up to his master's side, bowed, and in a low voice said: "Miss Sutherland, sir, has ordered me to say that she desires to be excused." And, with another bow, the waiter retired and stood behind his master's chair. Clement Sutherland started up with an angry gesture, pushed his chair violently behind him, to the risk of upsetting my gentleman-waiter, and exclaimed: "Sire, I have to ask you if the laws of hospitality are to be abused as to exile my daughter from the head of the table, and how long it is your pleasure that this state of things shall continue?"

This explosion was just as shocking as though something like it had not been expected.

Mary Sutherland, with a crimsoned brow, arose from his chair.

Lincoln, with perfect self-possession, deliberately arose, walked into the hall, took down his hat, returned, and, standing before Clement Sutherland, deliberately said: "Mr. Sutherland, permit me to make a due acknowledgment of the hospitality you have extended me, and also to express my regret that it has been so unpardonably trespassed against. I shall be most happy if you will afford me the opportunity to reciprocate the hospitality and atone for the trespass. Good-day, sir."

"Oh! young man, you have nothing to thank me for." Bowing to the ladies present, Lincoln withdrew. Mark Sutherland snatched his hat, and, without a word of leave-taking, left the room.

All the other members of the family circle remained seated at the table, with the exception of Miss Vivian, who, rising, excused herself and retired.

When Mark Sutherland reached the rose terrace, he called Lincoln to stop, and wait until their horses were saddled. And then he hastened off to the stables to give his orders.

In a very short time the horses were brought up, and the young men mounted and galloped away from the house. They rode on in silence for some time—Lincoln buried in calm thought, and Mark enrapt in a sort of fierce reverie. At length he exclaimed, "Lauderdale, how can I ever atone for exposing you to such insult?"

"Insult! My dear fellow; look into my face and see if you think I am very much troubled."

And, indeed, the pleasant countenance of the youth was well calculated to reassure his friend.

They relapsed into silence as they approached the river. When they left the ferry-boat and entered upon the domain of Silentshade, once more Mark put out his hand and seized that of his friend, saying: "Here at last is my home, where I may welcome any friend. I entreat you to come and stay with me as long as you can give me your company, if it be only, dear Lincoln, to prove that you forgive me the offense that has been offered to you."

"Pray say no more about it; how are you responsible for an affront offered yourself as well as me?"

And once more Mark Sutherland fell into silence. Since India's haughty rejection of his hand his life had grown very real to him.

Young enthusiast that he was, he had thought only of the excitement and glory of the heroism, and not of the fierce torture and maddening shame of the sacrifice. But now he felt his position in all its dreadful reality. And it was well that he should so feel it. It would test his sincerity, try his strength, prove his character. Yet even in this dark hour one bright star of hope and promise shone upon him—a mother's undying, unchanging love. It has been the theme of poets, of philosophers and of novelists, since hearts first beat with affections and tongues first gave them utterance. It is the chosen Scripture illustration to express even the divine love of God. The young man rode along, deeply musing on that mother's love—deeply thirsting for it. He felt—man as he was—that it would be a sweet and grateful relief to sit by her side, to drop his proud, but weary head upon her shoulder, and for a little while to give vent to the flood of sorrow now stifled in his bosom. And so he mused upon that love—the only earthly love that never faileth. Yes, though all other affections might fail him—she, his mother, would be true!

He would have staked his salvation upon this, as they turned into the avenue of limes leading up to the house, and saw Mrs. Sutherland standing, smiling, upon the piazza. But, on seeing the young men approach, in one instant the lady's countenance changed.

She had had her lesson.

Without advancing one step to meet and welcome them, she allowed them to walk quite up the steps, and to the very spot where she stood, and to bow and speak, before she relaxed one muscle of her countenance.

She replied to their greeting in the coldest tones.

For an instant Mark and Lincoln raised their eyes and their glances met. A pang of mortification and disappointment sped through the heart of Sutherland; Lauderdale, apparently not the least surprised or disconcerted, took his resolution.

Preceded by the lady, they entered the house, and passed into a front parlor, and at her cold invitation, Mrs. Sutherland took her sofa in perfect silence, turned her face toward them with a look of cold inquiry, and assumed the air of waiting to hear what might be their business with her.

This was very perplexing. Indeed, they were made to feel that they had no business there. They had come to be entertained and comforted. Lauderdale, cool as his own clime, informed Mrs. Sutherland that the day was "very fine." The lady bowed in silent assent.

"The weather for many days past has been pleasant," continued Lincoln without embarrassment.

"Yes—I think the present state of the atmosphere highly favorable to travelin," said the lady.

"Your climate here, madam, is not near so sultry as we of the North have supposed it to be."

"Hem—yet we think it too hot to be wholesome to you of the North," said the lady, with a curling lip.

"Humph," thought Lauderdale, "your courtesy is cold enough to cool the hottest day, in the hottest clime under the sun." But turning to his friend, said:

"Sutherland, if madam will excuse us, will you be kind enough to let me have my room?"

Lauderdale bowed to Mrs. Sutherland with some formality as they left the parlor.

When they had reached Lincoln's chamber, Mark threw himself into a chair and covered his face with his hands. Lincoln went calmly to work packing up his wardrobe. After a while he went up to him, clapped him upon the shoulder cheerfully.

"Never mind, my dear Mark! You take this to heart far more than necessary. Now, I dare say that one of your hot-blooded, fire-eating Mississippians would call somebody out, but I do not feel obliged to anything of the sort."

"I am a Mississippian—do you consider me a very hot-blooded person? Am I not rather a poltroon, to see my friend and guest outraged?"

"Mark, you could not affront age or womanhood, in my defense or your own," said Lauderdale; and he resumed his packing.

In a very few minutes it was completed, and then he came to announce his departure to Mark.

"I have nothing to say to you, dear Lincoln, except once more to entreat your pardon for what has passed."

He could not seek to change his guest's purpose—could not ask him to remain; how could he do so, indeed? Mark impressed upon him the use of his own ridihg horse, and Lincoln to avoid wounding him, accepted it.

Lincoln entered the parlor to bid adieu to his hostess, and Mark left the house to order the horses.

In a few minutes they were in their saddles, and on the road leading to C——, a muddy, miserable town.

It was late at night when Mark Sutherland returned to his home.

He arose the next morning with the full determination to set immediately to work.

"I must plunge myself into action, lest I wither by despair." His mother received him at the breakfast table with coldness. He told her respectfully what he intended to do. She curled her lip and begged him to proceed, without remorse or fear, to unroof the house—and she trusted Heaven would give her strength to bear even that.

After breakfast he set out and rode to Jackson to engage the services of a lawyer to assist him in making out the deeds, and taking the legal measures required in emancipating his people. As the distance to the city was a full day's journey and he had business enough to occupy the whole of the second day, he did not reach home until the evening of the third day.

He came, accompanied by a lawyer. They were both tired and hungry, but found no supper prepared and no one to make them welcome. Mr. Sutherland went out and inquired for his mother, and was told that the lady desired to be excused from receiving an official that had come to make her homeless. Mark stifled a sigh; he ordered refreshments for his guest and soon after showed him to his sleeping chamber.

The next day was a very busy, yet a very trying one. On coming down into the breakfast room, Mark heard that his mother had departed, carrying with her many of her personal effects, and had gone to take up her abode in Cashmere. In consequence of this act, Mark rushed out to institute further inquiries, and found in front of the house a baggage-wagon, with Billy Bolling standing up in the midst, receiving and packing away trunks, boxes and packages, that were lifted to him by two negro men in attendance.

"In the name of heaven, what is the meaning of this, uncle?" asked Mark, with trepidation.

Mr. Bolling took his handkerchief from his pocket, wiped his flushed, perspiring face, and answered:

"It means, sir, that you have turned my sister out of doors; that is all it means."

"But, uncle, my mother has perfect——"

"Confound it, sir, don't call my sister mother, or me uncle! You are no son or nephew of ours; we wash our hands of you! We'll have nothing to do with you!"

"Why, Mr. Bolling, what is the——"

"Confound it, sir, don't talk to me; you are a villain, sir! James, drive on!" And clapping his hat upon his head, Mr. Bolling sat down and settled the last box in its place and the wagon was driven off.

PRACTICAL FARMING

Where Profit in Poultry Lies.

In order to make as great profit as possible we should use economy in the production as well as good judgment in the marketing of eggs and poultry, writes Mr. A. J. Wilder.

The farmer has a great advantage here over the poultryman who has all the feed to buy and we must not forget to make the best use possible of this advantage.

At sowing and planting time is when we should make our plans for a variety of feed for the poultry through the year and especially for the winter.

You will want enough wheat, oats, rye and barley sown to supply these grains in the bundle for the hens to work on. Sow some millet also to add variety and to furnish seed for next year's little chicks. Mangle or stock beets make a very good green food for the hens in the winter, so you will need to plant plenty of them. Cabbage heads are a great treat for the fowls, so raise a few extra for them.

Plant mammoth Russian sunflowers in the corners and waste places and if there are not enough corners to raise a good many, plant a patch of them. Sunflower seeds are great egg-producers and also make the plumage of the fowls bright and beautiful. They are fine to feed through the moulting season as they nourish the feathers and cause them to grow rapidly.

Variety in the food is more than half the secret of egg-production and it is much cheaper to raise these different foods than it is to buy them, so do not forget the poultry at the planting time.

Grit and charcoal can be found and made on the farm and the expense of buying these necessary things can be saved. If there is a creek bed near haul gravel from that and place near the henhouses where the poultry can find it. Charcoal can be made by taking the live coals from the stove and pouring water over them. They will immediately turn to charcoal and can be ground or broken up into the right size for the chickens to swallow. Better do this work out of doors as steam and ashes will fly from the coals when the water is poured on them.

In these ways we can greatly reduce the cost of keeping poultry and it will pay us to give time and thought to our work as the profit in the poultry business, as in any other, lies between the cost of production and the amount received for the marketed products.

Besides comfortable quarters, the chick, to thrive, must have exercise, water, grit, a variety of grain food, green or succulent food, and casein or meat foods.

Exercise is as essential as food, and lack of it indicates wrong methods of rearing. The natural way for a chick to take its food is to scratch for it, taking a little at a time. If small chickens are put into a box with a bare floor and fed from a trough, they will become weak. Many will become clogged behind with the excrements accumulating on the down, and it is generally concluded that something has been fed to cause bowel trouble. As a matter of fact they are weak from lack of exercise, and the appearance of diarrhœa is only the inability of the chick properly to expel its excrement.

If chicks cannot be out of doors, their feeding-floor should be covered with sand, and over this should be thrown some litter, such as chaff from the straw stack or leaves from an alfalfa loft. Place the feed in this litter. If small quantities are thus given, and given often, the question of exercise is solved. Brooder chicks need more care in this way than do chicks with hens, but even in the latter case it is worth while to make them scratch for their food when they are raised indoors.

The notion is prevalent that a chick should begin his diet on boiled eggs, bread and milk or some other soft food. This notion has probably arisen from the knowledge that most young animals cannot digest hard foods. But when we consider the fact that the natural food of the young mammal is milk, we see why this principle does not apply to chickens.

Little chicks should first be fed when 72 to 96 hours old. Feed small quantities and as often as is convenient. If the feed is buried in deep litter they must work longer in getting it ont. The idea is to have them always hungry enough to hunt for food, and always a little food for them to find. If the chickens are at liberty, feeding often is not so important—three times a day would be sufficient; while if they roam far in the fields, finding much food, morning and evening feeding is all that is necessary. It is not a matter of great importance just what grain a chicken is first fed. The important thing is that they be supplied with a variety of grain as well as with casein or meat, grit and green food.

THE ONLY CURE FOR A WEAK STOMACH

Indigestion and Similar Troubles Must be Treated Through the Blood.

Indigestion can be treated in many ways, but it can only be cured in one way—through the blood. Purgatives named cure indigestion. By main force they move on the food still indigested. That weakens the whole system, uses up the natural juices and leaves the stomach and bowels parched and sore. It is actually a cause of indigestion—not a cure. Others try pre-digested foods and peptonized drugs. But drugs which digest the food for the stomach really weaken its power and makes the trouble chronic. The digestive organs can never do the work properly until they are strong enough to do it themselves. Nothing can give the stomach that power but the new, rich, red blood so abundantly supplied by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. So the reason for the success of this medicine is plain. Nothing can stimulate the glands and nothing can absorb the nourishment from the food but pure red blood. And Dr. Williams' Pink Pills surpass all other medicines in giving that new, rich blood. Miss B. E. Johnson, Hemford, N.S., says: "For months I was a great sufferer from indigestion; food of any kind was distasteful to me, and after eating I would suffer much. Naturally I grew weak and was but a shadow of my former self. I was taking a doctor's prescription, but it did not help me in the least. Then I read of a case similar to my own cured through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I decided to try this medicine. By the time I had taken six boxes the trouble had entirely disappeared, and I could eat heartily of all kinds of food. More than this I found my general health greatly improved through the use of the Pills. I can therefore strongly recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a cure for indigestion."

You can get these Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

BLOCKADE'S PINCH FELT.

Bankruptcies Increase Uneasiness in Germany.

A citizen of a neutral State who lately visited Germany in a further communication to the London Daily Chronicle dealing with the position of industry in Germany, says:

"It would be quite wrong to imagine that after the blockade of German ports all manufactories were stopped. Practically the whole of the machine industry, iron foundries and steel works are fully employed and doing excellent business. They do not suffer from any lack of raw material, as the whole of the ore reserves of Sweden are at their disposal. In addition to this, they can tap their own ores in the Diedenhofen and Saar districts and the ores of Luxemburg and Longwy in France.

"So far as coal is concerned, the mines which used to compete successfully in the markets of Scandinavia, Italy, France, Egypt, Denmark and Russia with English coal have suffered heavily. After the war broke out nearly all these mines came to a standstill, chiefly owing to a shortage of labor, but there has been a gradual revival and the output now is about half the normal.

"The textile industries of the empire have until July managed to keep up to something like their normal level. There has been a decrease in exportation, but the home demand for textiles has been very good, owing to the total cessation of imports of foreign descriptions, but since August 1 the manufacture of all goods from cotton yarn has been prohibited in view of the probable declaration of cotton as contraband of war.

"Since August 1 only orders for the army have been allowed to be executed, but this will not give employment to one-tenth of the great body of textile operatives, and the greater part of the factories have been brought to a standstill.

"One industry which has suffered acutely is the manufacturer of toys in and around Nuremberg and Thuringia.

"The complete stoppage of German exports only dates as far back as May 15 or even June 1. Now, however, a number of bankruptcies are advancing considerably the great uneasiness spreading in industrial circles more so because the hopes of America bringing pressure to bear upon the English government to relax the blockade have vanished."

The Little Girl Replied.

The superintendent of a Sunday School was one afternoon explaining to his scholars the story of Elijah and the prophets of Baal; how Elijah built an altar, put wood upon it, and cut a bullock up and laid it on the altar. "And then," said the superintendent, "he told the people to fill four barrels with water, and to pour it over the altar. Now and they did this four times. Now, can any boy or girl can tell me why the water was poured over the wood on the altar?" There was silence for a few moments, when one little girl spoke up—"Please, sir, to make the gravy."

LONDON'S BISHOP SURE OF HIS DUTY

HE HAS WORKED TO STRENGTHEN THE ARMY.

Says It Is a Mistake to Lay Aside Entirely the Old Testament Virtues.

Just as London was discussing the Pope's position of neutrality I found myself in the study of the Bishop of London, who quite plainly did not think he had to live up to the dualism of a division in the temporal and spiritual power, writes Mr. Richard Payne. Should the Church be neutral in time of war? Is it making a compromise in the support of this war? "Thou shalt not kill." How can the Church compromise with the commandment?

"One can," said the Bishop, for he was a good logician. "Of course, war is wholly inconsistent with Christian principles, but meanwhile the Christian has to make the choice of the second best. Because our Lord said at a particular moment that his servants were not to fight, He could not mean that they were to see their women and children treated as the Belgian woman and children have been and do nothing."

So it is necessary for the Bishop to represent God alone, like the Pope. He can also represent the nation, and, fortunately for the Bishop, when that nation believes it has a Christian cause.

There was a cloistered hush about the room we sat in. The Bishop's kindly face seemed incongruous with the picture I drew of him, dressed in khaki as he was last summer, speaking to the men in the camps from wagons. "For if the cause was held, then the duty of the Church is not only to mobilize the spiritual resources of the nation, but to give the clear call to unity and service."

The Bishop of London.

Donned the Khaki.

The Bishop went to recruit. A "battling bishop"? No; not a bit of it—a gentle churchman turned logician.

"It is an utter mistake," he says, "to suppose that the Old Testament virtues are to be laid aside because the New Testament supplements them by humility and self-suffering and personal weakness. No; courage, fierceless, undying courage, is the special characteristic of the Christian soldier as it was the special characteristic of Christ himself." And so he girded himself to rouse his fellow countrymen and to stimulate himself to play the man in this great "Day of God."

And so, this being a Day of the Lord, the good bishop donned his khaki as a chaplain of the army and went to hearten the men in the fields.

Then strangely the bishop asks himself the question: "But can a fierce and bloody war ever conduce to the spreading of the Gospel of Peace in the world?"

And he answers himself: "Yes, but what if this is a war for peace? What if the ideas which have made peace up to now impossible are finally and forever killed? What if the gospel is shown to be a sham? What if the war is stripped of its glamor and seen in its native hideousness for all time?

War for Peace.

What if the churches that believe in the Incarnation of the Son of God are drawn together in a way in which they have never been before and fused into a united missionary Church?

"But what if France shall permanently be stirred to see what she was casting away in her Church? What if the English and French churches should learn great truths from one another? What if the Russian Church should be touched with that missionary zeal which it only needs to make it one of the greatest churches in the world? What if the great German people shall gain through pain and suffering a new faith?"

"We are fighting," says the Bishop, "for the holiest things ever intrusted to the care of man—the freedom of our country, the honor of our women, the right to live for the smaller nations, international honor, as the condition of the future brotherhood of nations, and the Christian principles which are to govern the future of the world.

NEW BRITISH M.P.

Recalls the Cases of Boys in British Parliament.

Sir Edward Coke, the great lawyer of the sixteenth century, held that the law required a man to be of age before he could be elected to, or sit in, Parliament, and though Mr. John Lymbrick Edmonde, the new British member of Parliament, has just passed the age limit, being little over 21 years of age, his election calls attention to the fact that boys in their teens have been elected to Parliament in the past.

Already known as "the child of the House," Mr. Esmonde, Nationalist member for North Tipperary, is certainly the most youthful-looking member who has ever entered the House of Commons of late years. From the vantage point of the Strangers' Gallery, as he walked up the floor to take the oath, he looked scarcely sixteen. He was an attractive figure in his khaki uniform—he is a lieutenant in the 27th Northumberland Fusiliers—and everyone gave him a cheer.

Charles James Fox was perhaps the most famous boy M.P. He was returned for Midhurst when he was only 19, in spite of the law, and justified his election, for Horace Walpole, after hearing him speak, said: "Charles Fox, not yet one-and-twenty, answered Burke with great quickness and parts, and with confidence equally premature."

Lord John Russell, who afterwars became Earl Russell, began, according to his biographers, at the age of one-and-twenty, a career in the House of Commons that was destined to last for nearly 50 years, while others say that he was one one-and-twenty when he was elected.

According to a chronicler in the days of James I., at least 40 members of the House of Commons were not above 20 years of age, and some of them were not more than 16. Edmund Waller, the poet, was one of these 16-year-old M.P.'s, and his record as a member would be hard to beat, for it is said of him that "Waller was the delight of the House, and even at 80 he said the liveliest things of any among them."

Lord Chesterfield, when he was Lord Stanhope, entered Parliament before he was of age, and made a fiery attack on the Orford Ministry. The occupants of the Treasury Bench retorted by pointing out that in taking his seat when a minor he was liable to a penalty of $1,500, whereat the noble youth left the House until he was of age. It is said that Lord Torrington, who afterwards became the Duke of Albermarle, addressed the House on Clarendon's impeachment when he was only 14, which must surely be the record for precocity.

Seemed Promising.

Jim had looked in at the country livery stable in search of a job. He seemed promising, and was set to work greasing the axles of a carriage. In a remarkably short space of time he reported the task finished. "Look here," said the new boss, "d'ye mean to say you've greased all four of them wheels already?" "Weel," rejoined the new hand. "A've greased the two front yens." "And why haven't you greased the two hind ones?" "Weel," exclaimed Jim, calmly, "so long as the two front yens gang all reet the two hind yens hev to foller."

WHERE PIGS CLIMB TREES.

The Tree Trunk Is Broad, Flat and Almost Horizontal.

Presumably the walrus and the carpenter never did settle the discussion as to whether pigs had wings, and there are persons who seriously think it was a foolish theme for an argument.

And yet is it any stranger than the undisputed fact that in Morocco pigs climb trees in search of nuts? Not only pigs but goats too. The puzzle is not in the pigs and the goats, however; they are of the common variety that we see in the back lots in our own communities. It is the tree that is strange. It is called the argan nut tree and it grows near Agadir. Usually it shoots out from a steep hillside. The trunk is broad and flat and almost horizontal, and so are the main branches, forming ample and solid foothold for any animal which may be tempted by the olive shaped nuts growing within easy reach of the main branches.

Positively Unbearable.

One of the wealthy members of a fashionable church approached her pastor with the complaint that she was greatly disturbed by one of her neighbors. "It's positively unbearable!" said she. "That man in the pew in front of me destroys all my devotional and pious feelings when he attempts to sing. Couldn't you ask him to change his pew?" The good pastor was sorely perplexed. After a few moments' reflection he said: "Well, I naturally should feel a little delicacy on that score, more especially as I should have to give a reason. But I will tell you what I might do. I might ask him to join the choir!"

The happiest bridal toast was when a speaker wished a deaf and dumb couple "unspeakable and unheard-of bliss."

I want to wake up in the night and hear their trouble, so that I can congratulate myself again that I'm not married."

A False Promise.

When little Mary Green came home from her first forenoon at school her mother asked her if she liked it. "Oh, I don't think I like it at all, mother. The teacher put me on a seat, and said—'Sit there, my dear, for the present.' And I sat, and sat, till I was tired, but she hasn't given me the present yet!"

Sometimes Very Good.

The young man was rather slow, so the girl thought it time to give him a hint. "Gracious!" she exclaimed, suddenly, "I've bruised my lip. Do you know, Mr. Jenkins, my mother always used to kiss a hurt place to make it well?" "And did it do any good?" asked the young man failing to see the point. "I don't remember," replied the girl, getting desperate, but those old-fashioned remedies are sometimes very good." Then he got busy.

The Government officials had been telling a simple old Scotch farmer what he must do in case of a German invasion on the east coast of Scotland. "An' hae I reely tae dae this wi' a' ma beesties if the Germans come?" asked one old fellow at the finish. The official informed him that such was the law. The Paisley Advocate

PAISLEY, SEPT. 9th, 1915

—The Dominion Government will hereafter furnish all equipment for the Canadian soldiers going out for the defence of the empire. This will help to raise our status as a real factor in the fighting compact with the Motherland. To complete the national undertaking the Government should make it unnecessary for soldiers or their dependents to look to a private subscription fund for part of the remuneration that is paid to them for their services or losses during the war. Canada has the resources from which to draw a just pension fund, and that is what should be done.

—Canadian grain and flour prices have both slumped back to where they were before the war, so that the western farmer is not likely to realize his dream of riches from this year's bumper crop, nor the consumer live in fear of the still higher cost of bread if this level be maintained. The present danger is that the wealthy grain speculators may be able to manipulate the market to such an extent that for lack of ocean transportation there will be little or no sale for wheat at any price. There is a demand being made that the British government should buy up the Canadian export wheat and thus prevent it falling into the hands of the market boodlers.

WHY HE ENLISTED

He was a fine type of Canadian manhood. Standing within an inch or so of six feet, he was mature beyond the ordinary for his 23 years. He had lived a clean life, and was inclined to take life a great deal more in earnest than many of his kind. He had taken his enlistment seriously. He had not been carried away by the glamor of war or the clanking of his accoutrements. It had meant a long session of prayerful thought and consideration, for he had spent some years preparing himself for his life's work—the ministry. One might almost stop and wonder why he had made the choice when he was so well fitted for the work he had intended to follow previous to the outbreak of the war.

His story was told in a quiet, studied fashion that marked his whole demeanor. There were no exclamation marks in it, but behind it all there breathed the deepest conviction that he had fought his first battle, and after making the decision he would be a soldier worthy of the name.

"You asked me how I viewed the question of enlisting for the present war," he remarked to the questioner, "and whether I consider it a higher calling than that in which I was an understudy.

"It meant much to me," he continued. "I thought the whole matter over. I can truthfully say I enlisted on my knees. My views on the matter may be homely, but here's how it happened. I am prepared to die. Death for me will mean more than life even could. That question is settled, so let us go on further. The next matter was, what was the best use I could make of my life? Could I do more service by making the supreme sacrifice for such a principle as is at stake in the present war or by holding back and allowing some other man, probably not so well prepared to part with life as I am, to go ahead and fill the gaps in the ranks that I should have filled? It wasn't an easy matter to decide. I have only one life to live and one death to die. I may go through the campaign in safety, or I may be buried with the brave lads somewhere in France or Belgium. But I faced the question and the answer came, and here I am in the king's uniform. I have never had a doubt in my mind since that I did the right and proper thing."

This is one of the finest views on the matter of enlistment that has been expressed. It is much easier to enlist, or to make any decision for that matter, when the company of the crowd is there to urge you along. The man who is truly brave is the one who weighs all the chances, sizes up the situation from every angle, and then resolutely and alone goes ahead in the path that duty has marked out for him.

Bruce Tp. Voters' List

At the Bruce Tp. Voters' List Court there were 25 names struck off the list of those entitled to vote for the Legislative Assembly, and 13 others changed to list of voters for municipal purposes only. The appeal against these names was filed by Chas H Green of Southampton.

Auto Kills Sheep on Road

While driving along the road in his car in the vicinity of Mr. Victor Tanner's, in Elderslie, on Friday afternoon last, Mr. P. C. Ryan overtook a flock of sheep in the middle of the road. Slowing up the car, he managed to get nearly past them, when one of the flock ran directly in front of the car, the wheels passing over and almost instantly killing it. The sheep belonged to Mr. Tanner. The car came out of it with a badly bent and twisted bumper. This is the second accident of this kind lately, owing to farmers letting their animals pasture along the roadside, Mr. Jas. Craig having run into and killed a calf a short time ago.

Tournament Winners

Forty-two rinks entered the playing at Walkerton bowling tournament on Labor Day, and the prizes that required the greatest skill and staying power to win were carried off by a Paisley rink. The finish was not reached until Wednesday morning at 5 o'clock. The Zimmerman rink of Caught won first in the trophy competition, with McLaughlin of Chesley second. The Association prizes went to a Hamilton rink and Chas Bell's rink of Southampton. The Paisley rink that came out at the head of the consolation competition was composed of Dr Allen, W Kee, A Jack and J Shoemaker (sk.) The runners-up were Trout's rink of Wiarton.

Local Option Court Case

The charges laid against F T Pearce for violation of the Local Option by-law will be ventilated in court here on Monday next at 10 o'clock a.m. Mr Pearce's premises were searched on Aug. 10th and a considerable quantity of bottled liquors found. On Aug. 23rd another visitation was made, and two more bottles containing booze were discovered. Hearing of the evidence in the case has been delayed from time to time. Meanwhile there seems to have been active preparations made for prosecution and defence. We hear that about forty witnesses have been summoned also that legal talent has been engaged by both crown and accused, and the proceedings are likely to be prolonged. J. C. Gibson, J.P., and Reeve Ballachey are to occupy the bench.

From Sandling Camp, Aug. 22

DEAR PAISLEY PEOPLE.—Well, we are at last about to leave for the front. Our colonel told us yesterday that we would leave for the front in France around the 6th of September. The boys were delighted to get the news, and the colonel gave us quite a spell when he said he thought he would be able to give us all a four days' leave before we left. That will be fine. There will be something doing when our whole division gets over in France—over 10,000 men. We will take quite a frontage. We have our own artillery army service corps, army medical corps, engineers, etc., everything necessary, even despatch carriers with motorcycles. The British have been preparing for this big smash for months, and now have all kinds of ammunition and artillery, so we can expect much better support than the first contingent got. Love to all. SERGT. A. E. BABCOCK

From the Trenches

Mr J Smart received a letter from Pte. Sam Fleming, dated France, Aug. 20th. Just a few lines he says, to let you know we are on the job here. After eight days in the trenches and five days resting in the billets we are going back to the trenches to-night. It has been quiet here on the front. We are on the right of Ypres with the First Battalion. Fairly fine—lots of grub and all the tobacco you can smoke. The only thing missing is the McDonald chewing, but yesterday I got three plugs sent from home. Tom Babcock is like a fighting cock. We are the 7 only Anglo from Paisley with Babcock, Daniels, Blue, Tooke and McDougall before leaving England. They are coming here soon, I hear. When German bullets come whizzing over it makes one get his head down. We left the trenches wet, and it will be bad for us to return, as it is raining heavy now. That seems to be our luck. We were out on a working party the other night and got soaked to the hide, and had to crawl in with wet clothes on the bare boards with overcoat and rubber sheet for bedding. No blankets. This is a great country here, and the best crops I ever saw. I pitched on a load of wheat for a Belgian the other day. The straw was nearly six feet long, and was over my head. The most plentiful thing in the trenches are the grey backs. The old soldiers here consider a man is not a soldier unless he is lousie. I would rather be fighting in the open as we did in South Africa than here. If I get through this time it will do me for the rest of my life. There are only about fifty of the old First Battalion left. I guess I will have to break off. Will let you know more next time if we come out. Goodbye.

ENEMY ENDEAVORING TO TAKE BALTIC PORT

Teutons Making Big Effort For Drive on Riga—Many Local Successes Attend Italians

London, Sept. 7—The menace to Riga, an important Russian seaport in the Baltic, is becoming more serious. The Germans still hold the bridgehead at Friedrichstadt, the occupation of which effectively cuts off Riga's railway communication to the south, while German aircraft are active in the gulf, perhaps presaging another clash as part of a concerted German move from land and sea to complete the isolation of the city and force its abandonment by the Russians. The bridgehead at Lennawaden, toward Riga, has been recaptured by Russians. The Germans are stated to have intentionally sunk several small steamers to block the entrance to the Gulf of Riga. The deduction is made that the Germans feared the Russians would land there sufficiently strong forces to threaten Field Marshal von Hindenburg's left flank.

German Loss in Arras

Paris, Sept. 7—Official: "Artillery actions continue along the whole front. In the sector north of Arras our batteries have inflicted heavy damage on the German trenches. In Champagne, north of Cirey, the artillery duel has been particularly spirited. In the Vosges a combat by means of big bombs has been carried on."

Italians Win in Adige Valley

Rome, Sept. 7—Official: "Our reconnaissances have been frequent, the enemy retreating before our troops. On the 4th the Italian troops destroyed an Austrian entrenchment in the Adige Valley, near St. Mark, and also one in the St. Pellegrin Valley, to the Plezzo basin. Our forces routed the Austrians on Mount Rombon slopes, entered the refuges of the enemy, and captured a quantity of arms and ammunition. In the Koritica Valley we expelled the enemy from a forest where he had been molesting our lines. Austrian aeroplanes have attempted several incursions, but invariably have been driven off."

Must Food Be Varied?

Variety in food is undoubtedly an advantage, although it is not absolutely essential to life. The human animal thrives best upon a diet including both vegetable and animal food, but his adaptability is proved by his subsistence upon a restricted menu when necessary. An Arctic explorer, whose supplies became exhausted, preserved his strength and vigor for months upon a diet composed exclusively of whale blubber and reindeer hair; as used by the Eskimos. The blubber contained the essential calories and proteids. The hair was added to give bulk—a requirement to the proper digestion of food.

MILITARY EXERCISES AT THE WESTERN FAIR, LONDON

Infantry and Artillery Will Give Exhibitions—Tuesday, Sept. 14. Military Day

By kind permission of Col. Shannon and the co-operation of the officers in charge, the battalions now in training at Carling's Heights will take a very prominent part in the Western Fair this year, Tuesday, September 14, will be military Day. Both infantry battalions will take part, also the 29th Field Battery and the Field Ambulance Depot. Arriving at the grounds early in the afternoon, accompanied by their bands, they will give a march past and general salute before the grand stand. This will be followed by a programme of the following manoeuvers: Physical training squad, bayonet exercise, signalling drill, trench warfare and various other exercises.

A liberal percentage of the gate receipts in excess of other years will be donated for patriotic purposes.

On Wednesday and Thursday, at 4 o'clock each afternoon, the whole battalions will march to the grounds, accompanied by their bands, will enter by the Quebec St. gate and give the march past and general salute in front of the grand stand.

These grand military displays will afford the visitors to the exhibition an opportunity of a lifetime in witnessing such a large number of trained soldiers in their real work.

It is expected the Patriotic Fund will be materially increased by the exhibitions.

A MODERN RURAL HOME

The Farmers' Advocate of August 19th gives the following interesting description of a Huron farm, the home of Mr W H Lobb. There is no reason why more Huron farmers cannot have the same conveniences as the average city dweller working on a very modest stipend. Too often in the country the dwelling is looked upon as secondary in importance to all other branches of the farm's equipment.

A brief description of the machinery which W H Lobb of Huron county has installed to make life more pleasant, may throw some light on the matter of convenience in rural homes and influence many to invest a little capital in the health and happiness of their families.

In the first place the house, barn, hog pen and dairy are lighted by electricity. This would not appear at all phenomenal if the farm were situated near a transmission line of the hydro-electric or in the suburbs of a town, but such is not the case. Located in a typically rural section, everything about the place is independent of town or municipal developments and presents a striking example of how the owner of a country home can provide himself with all the advantages accruing to those who live in circumscribed areas without the disadvantage of the latter. A small 40-lamp electric plant illuminates the buildings and provides power for other work, but we shall first learn more about the lighting system.

The plant is located only a few yards from the house, and so far as the mechanism for illuminating is concerned consists of a three horse-power gasoline engine, a dynamo and storage cells. Three lamps may be turned on and burned for a considerable time on the strength of the storage batteries but when a fourth lamp is switched on the engine at once starts automatically and continues to run as long as required. The engine can thus be regulated from any building and exhibits almost human intelligence in the recognition of what is required of it. There are 20 lamps throughout the house and 20 more throughout the barns and outbuildings. An electric iron is also attached as another household convenience.

A four-unit milking machine is operated by the same engine and one man can milk 20 cows in 45 minutes with the assistance of a small girl. From a shaft in the power house a rip saw, emery wheel and churn are propelled, while another pulley is being attached for a washer. In addition to this the entire water supply is pumped both for the house and barn, and through the winter 50 head of cattle are usually stabled. As yet the water is not forced into the house, but Mr Lobb now proposes installing a tank in the dwelling, building a septic tank outside and fitting the home with all modern conveniences.

The power house itself was erected for the purpose. It is a modest building 16 by 32 feet, divided into three parts. In one end is the room for the engine and electrical apparatus, in the centre is the dairy containing the churn, butter worker and a tank, while the remainder is given over to the pump, water supply tank, milk aerator, and the washer will be operated here as well.

The initial cost of the power and electrical apparatus was $750 exclusive of wiring the house. The engine is operated on three gallons of gasoline per week at a cost of 18 cents per gallon, bringing the expense for fuel to approximately $28 annually.

Country life will be all the more enjoyable when an iron can be heated, a churn kept in motion and a washing machine made to do its work by the timed explosions of gasoline and that wonderful dynamic force—electricity.

A nine horse-power gasoline engine is used in the barn to grind the grain and fill the silos. Fifteen acres are this year under corn. There is a large orchard on the place, which, in favorable years, produces four carloads of apples, sales for which are made in the west, but the chief income is from cows and hogs. From 20 to 25 cows are milked each year. The milk is taken to the cheese factory in the summer and made into butter during the winter months. On an average 75 hogs are sold annually and bring in a handsome revenue in exchange for the whey and grain they consume.

A POSER

The schoolmistress was instructing her pupils in the mysteries of etymology, when she had occasion to question a boy pupil with reference to the word "evaporate." "As an example," said the teacher, "we will take the case of your father. He is, of course, a hard-working man?" "Yes'm," assented Charlie. "Then," continued the instructor of youth, "it being night, his work being over, and he being tired and worn out, what does he do?" "That's what ma knows," said Charlie.

Civilization's Oldest Festival

The Jewish New Year to be Observed by Praying For War Victims

London, Sept. 7—Prayers for those who have been killed in Europe's war, will be said in the opening ceremonies which will usher in Rosh Hashana, the Jewish New Year on Wednesday evening. The Jewish New Year's festival is the oldest of all the festivals celebrated in the civilized world. It is a time for serious thought and not a day of rejoicing. By tradition, the New Year's day is placed at the beginning of autumn, when man called upon their enterprises and obligations with seal and seal. The blowing of the "shopher," or ram's horn, constitutes the central part in the worship of the day. Rosh Hashana marks the beginning of three weeks of the holiest days of the year. Since the historic temple in Jerusalem was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, Rosh Hashana has always found the Jew closing up his place of business to hear the blowing of the "shopher."

The Same Old Story

America Again Insulted by Huns—May Seek Refuge by Protests

Washington, Sept. 7—The White House and State Department have suspended judgment on the sinking of the Allan liner Hesperian by a German submarine pending the receipt of definite information as to the circumstances of the attack. The same course was followed in all other cases growing out of the German submarine activities. The undercurrent of official suggestion is that if it be shown that the Hesperian was torpedoed without warning and that she was not trying to escape, only prompt disavowal by Germany will avert the most serious diplomatic crisis between the United States and Germany.

Whole Family Wiped Out

Glen Falls, N.Y. Sept. 7—Five persons, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Norton, their daughter, a daughter-in-law and a granddaughter were killed here yesterday when an automobile in which they were riding was struck by a passenger train. John Norton, a son, was seriously hurt. After striking the car the train went nearly an eighth of a mile before it could be brought to a stop. Three of the bodies were found on the engine.

French Take Revenge For Huns Murdering Women and Children

Paris, Sept. 7—Official: "On September 1, as we announced, four German aeroplanes bombarded Luneville where there is no military installation to destroy. Our enemies clearly aimed at the populous sections and selected the market. As a consequence victims were numerous and were for the most part women and children. As a reprisal forty of our aeroplanes yesterday bombarded the station, works and military establishments of Saarbrucken. The aviators noted that the results attained were considerable. A German aeroplane has been obliged to land at Calais. The aviators were taken prisoners."

Britain Scorns Peace

Germany to Give In First—Bound For a Definite Object

London, Sept. 7—In high official circles here it is learned authoritatively that recent rumors of peace have no foundation in any step taken by the British Government. "We took up arms with a definite object, which was admirably stated by Premier Asquith," said the Government official. "We are bound not to undertake any step for a separate peace. We shall act only in concert with our allies. There is absolute confidence and a fixed determination on the part of all the allies that none will look for a separate peace. The German ambassy's (at Washington) statement to the United Press does not mention the freedom of Belgium or the freedom of France. By promising freedom for the Jews, Germany is evidently making an effort to enlist the aid of the United States to help her out of her difficulties. Germany is anxious for the sympathy of the United States for some ulterior motive, I know not what."

TWO NERVOUS WOMEN

Made Well By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I had a severe case of nervous prostration, with palpitation of the heart, constipation, headaches, dizziness, noise in my ears, timid, nervous, restless feelings and sleeplessness.

"I read in the paper where a young woman had been cured of the same troubles by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound so I threw away the medicines the doctor left me and began taking the Compound. Before I had taken half a bottle I was able to sit up and in a short time I was able to do all my work. Your medicine has proved itself able to do all you say it will and I have recommended it in every household I have visited."—Mrs. MARY JOHNSTON, 210 Siegel Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Another Bad Case.

Ephrata, Pa.—"About a year ago I was down with nervous prostration. I was pale and weak and would have hysteric spells, sick headaches and a bad pain under my shoulder-blade. I was under the care of different doctors but did not improve. I was so weak I could hardly stand long enough to do my dishes.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me well and happy and I have begun to gain in weight and my face looks healthy now."—Mrs. J. W. HOHENBERGER, R. No. 3, Ephrata, Pa.

The Housewife's Corner

Fritters Worth Eating.

This foundation batter may be used for nearly all kinds of fritters with but slight variations:

Plain Fritter Batter.—One cup of flour, half a teaspoon of baking powder, quarter teaspoon of salt, two eggs and one cup of milk. The dry ingredients should be sifted carefully together and the eggs beaten before they are added to the milk, then the whole beaten until it is very smooth.

Sweetbread Fritters. — Parboil, blanch and chop fine one pair of sweetbreads; add to them a small red pepper and half a cup of mushrooms, also chopped fine, one small grated onion and a tablespoon of chutney syrup; stir into the batter and fry. Serve with a horseradish sauce made as follows: Take four tablespoons of grated horseradish, one teaspoon of sugar, one of salt and two of mixed English mustard and half a teaspoon of pepper. Add enough taragon vinegar to make the mixture the consistency of thick cream. When thoroughly mixed add four tablespoons of sweet cream, set into a double boiler and let it get hot, but do not allow it to boil. Serve at once with the fritters.

Vegetable Fritters.—Make the batter in the usual way. Take a small bottle of macedoine of vegetables and drain them; add to them a halfteaspoon of salt, saltspoon of pepper, teaspoon of sugar, a grated onion, teaspoon of finely chopped parsley and toss them lightly in half a cup of whipped cream and stir all into the batter. Fry the fritters and serve them in a napkin garnished with lemon quarters and parsley. Serve with them fennel sauce, which is made of a half pint of melted butter and a tablespoonful of carefully washed and chopped fresh fennel seed. Let the butter come to the boiling point, add the fennel, simmer for two minutes and serve hot.

Beef Fritters.—Chop enough cold roast beef after freeing it from fat and gristle to fill a cup, add to it one grated onion, a teaspoon of chopped taragon leaves, a teaspoon of mustard sauce, teaspoon of Worcestershire sauce, pepper, salt and whip it light with the white of one egg beaten stiff. Add to it the batter as quickly as it is light, mix thoroughly and fry at once. Serve the horseradish sauce with these fritters the recipe for which is given above.

Lobster Fritters.—Take enough cold boiled lobster to fill a cup and cut it very fine. Add to it pepper, salt, teaspoon of melted butter, two teaspoons of chutney syrup and add to the batter. Fry in the usual way and serve a tartar sauce with the fritters or heavy mayonnaise to which a little whipped cream is added just before serving. Crab flakes or cold boiled shrimp may be used in the same way.

Calf's Liver Fritters.—Take one pound of calf's liver and boil it until tender. Then remove and chop very fine. Add to it pepper, salt, two tablespoons of apple juice, the juice of an onion and lighten it. Add the mixture to the batter and fry. Serve with the fritters one small tumbler of melted currant jelly.

Ginger Fritters.—Take one half cup of preserved ginger, chop it very fine and add to it one cup of preserved mirabelles, add to the batter and after frying serve a flavored syrup or a boiled pudding sauce with the fritters. For all fruit fritters a convenient sauce is made of a cup of sugar and a half cup of water. Melt and boil together for five minutes and flavor with a teaspoon of vanilla, pistachio, rose, almond, orange flower or oil of cloves. These may be varied with the different fruits used.

All fruit fritters may have the cup and a half of chopped fresh fruit added after the fruit is lightly dusted with powdered sugar; or stewed fruit drained of its juice and seeded if need be may be used when the fresh fruit is out of season. Rather a novelty among the fruit fritters is one made of grapefruit.

Grapefruit Fritters.—Prepare the grapefruit the same as for salad, draining slightly if it is too juicy. Add to it six macaroons that have been powdered, dust with sugar and add a teaspoon of vanilla. Mix well with the batter and fry delicately. Serve in a napkin with a syrup sauce flavored with pistachio or with the maple and walnut sauce so often used on ice cream.

The ordinary fritters are all too well known to require description here, as the recipes are given in most of the cook books, but one Spanish recipe, which is an emergency luncheon dish, is unusual enough to be spoken of.

Spanish Fritters.—Make the batter in the usual way. Then open a small bottle of the ready mixed Spanish omelet filling. This is very highly seasoned and the vegetables and peppers are all cut in the usual way. Add to this a half cup of grated pineapple, if at hand, or a half cup of apple sauce. Add to the batter and fry. Serve with a Russian mayonnaise made in this way. Add enough catsup to the mayonnaise to color it pink, chop together two olives, a strip of red pepper and a few taragon leaves and one small gherkin pickle. Add this to the sauce with the juice of an onion. These fritters are even more hearty if served with a rich, smooth tomato sauce.

Household Hints.

Old sheets should be made into bags in which to hang one's suits or dresses.

Save the broken toys for the rainy days. They are a real source of interest.

A housekeeper can save time by using casseroles of attractive earthenware, in which food may be both cooked and served.

If there is no ice, water can be cooled by putting it in porous earthern jars or bottles and hanging in a current of air.

Fried foods this time of year are apt to incite a perfectly good stomach to rebellion, so wise housewives watch the daily menu carefully.

To thread a needle when the light is bad and it is hard to find the eye, put a piece of paper or white cloth back of the needle and the task will be easy.

Sulphur sprinkled about in places infested by rats or mice will drive them away.

Sieves should never be washed with soap, but should be cleaned with a brush, and a little soda if necessary.

When jelly is ready to put into glasses, put a piece of cheese cloth over a pitcher, and then pour into the glasses. This is easier than dipping it out and gives an extra straining as well.

Mutton is easily digested and it makes a very good summer dish.

When cooking newly baked bread cover it lightly with a clean cloth.

It is difficult to wrap cake with a soft frosting. Stick several toothpicks in the cake and they will hold the paper up.

To make a satisfying hot weather drink take one part of water, add one tablespoonful of sifted ginger, three (or more) heaping tablespoonfuls sugar, and one cup vinegar.

The cotton sash curtain if hemmed by hand will be less likely to pucker than if it is done by machine.

Vinegar or yeast should never be kept in stone crocks or jugs. The acid eats off the glazing, which is poisonous.

Grease in the sink is a very prolific cause of disease. Washing soda is the best and simplest cleaning agent.

Large patterns in table cloths are not so durable as small ones, for the reason that the threads will break sooner.

Parsley can be kept fresh by putting it into a glass jar and screwing the lid on tight, then placing it in a cool place.

THOUGHTS FOR THE DAY.

Give not reins to your inflamed passions; take time and grant a little delay; impetuosity manages affairs badly.—Statius.

Be not angry that you cannot make others as you wish them to be, since you cannot make yourself what you wish to be.—Kempis.

And the Kingdom of Heaven is of the child-like, of those who are easy to please, who love and who give pleasure.—R. L. Stevenson.

The man who has nothing to boast of but his illustrious ancestors is like a potato—the only good belonging to him is underground.—Overbury.

An appointment is a contract, express or implied, and he who does not keep it breaks faith, as well as dishonestly uses other people's time, and thus inevitably loses character.—Smiles.

He knows not his own strength that hath not met adversity. Heaven prepares good men with crosses, but no ill can happen to a good man.—Ben Johnson.

If a man does not keep pace with his companions perhaps it is because he hears a different drummer. Let him march to the music which he hears, however measured and far away.—Thoreau.

Hope is the most beneficial of all the affections, and doth much to the prolongation of life, if it be not too often frustrated; but entertaineth the fancy with an expectation of good, therefore they which fix and propound to themselves some end, as the mark and scope of their life, and continually and by degrees go forward in the same, are for the most part long-lived.—Bacon.

Chancellor's Ages.

In poin of age, Mr. Lloyd George, who was 45 when he took office, must be reckoned among the youngest of latter-day Chancellors of the Exchequer, though Mr. Austen Chamberlain was only 40 when he held the position in 1903, and Lord Randolph Churchill, when he accepted the leadership of the Commons in 1886, was younger still, being only 37. Mr. Gladstone was 43 when he first became Chancellor, Lord St. Aldwyn (Sir M. Hicks Beach) 48, Mr. Childers 55, Sir W. Harcourt 59, Mr. Ritchie 54, Mr. Asquith 54, and Mr. McKenna 52.

"Before my marriage I told her all my past life. Don't you think I showed a wonderful courage?" "Yes, and a still more wonderful memory."

A year ago the thunderbolt of war fell upon us out of a clear sky! After the first moment of surprise and confusion had passed, we asked, "How can we help?"

During the year that has passed, that question has found many answers. The trained nurse quickly proved her value. Other women were called upon to organize and direct Red Cross and St. John Ambulance work or Patriotic Societies, while all gave time or money or personal service in preparing supplies.

To comparatively few came the need for the supreme sacrifice—the sending forth of husband, son or brother to the fight. The first appeal for volunteers was limited and did not appear very urgent. All honor to those who heard and obeyed the earliest call of Empire and whose women sent them forth with pride to fight in the front rank of the Canadian forces.

To-day the situation has changed. We have learnt, after a year of war, that our task is harder, our danger more real, than we thought a year ago. We have "given" gladly: now we are called to "give-up," and service must fulfil itself in sacrifice. Most urgent of all to-day is the call to give up ungrudgingly our husbands, sons and brothers. We are called to create in our homes such an atmosphere of self-devotion that our men and boys may feel their resolution to offer themselves in their country's service is simply what we expect of them.

This does not mean that women should be constantly urging their men to enlist, for it is doubtful if the patriotic persistence of a wife or mother would produce anything but a reluctant and resentful recruit. The men of Canada have not shown themselves less patriotic than their women; but it is for us, the women of Canada, to ask ourselves whether our self-sacrifice is falling short of the supreme test.

Are we making it hard or easy for our men to obey their country's call to service?

Why is the call so urgent now?

The answer is simple: It is because our existence as an Empire is at stake.

We went into the war to keep our solemn pledges to our Allies; and this reason still holds good.

But there are now other reasons which did not exist a year ago. Belgium with her ravaged land and exiled people cries aloud for justice. What do Canadian women say to the appeals of her outraged women and mutilated children? They have suffered for us: What are we willing to suffer for them?

The women of France and Russia and the United Kingdom have long ago heard the appeal to give up their men, and have responded nobly. What will Canadian women do?

Beyond the keeping of our pledged word, the woes of Belgium, and the example of our Allies, there comes to us to-day the knowledge that we are called on to fight our own battles; not to send help to Belgium or France or even England, but to fight for our own national existence.

We are told by the men who know that we cannot win in this war without more men.

If we hold back our men we are courting defeat; and defeat means, not a vague misfortune to the Empire at large, but the very practical result of a Canada governed by Germans.

Do we want to know what that would mean? Then let us look at Belgium, and learn how the yoke of the conqueror galls the neck of a free-dom-loving people. Defeat would mean for us a period of bitterest shame and discontent, and then—another war. Can we risk it? We are risking it if we do not make the path of service easy for our men.

But the most compelling call for sacrifice rings out from the graves of those who on the fields of Flanders, at Langemarck, and Ypres, and Festubert, have blazed the trail to glory with their life blood.

Can we make their self-surrender of no avail by holding back the men who would take up and complete their splendid task?

There is a saying which is losing: Is it worth "saving" our men from death if we lose their respect? There is a loss which is gain. Even though we learn to face "desperate tides of the whole great world's anguish, Forced through the channels of a single heart."

We are called to scale the gleaming peaks of self-sacrifice, in the company of our brave sisters of the Allied nations.

What will the women of Canada do?

LORD DERBY.

Privileged to Wear Four Rows of Ermine Fur on Robes.

No one has displayed more unwearying zeal in the recruiting movement in Great Britain than Lord Derby—politician, soldier, and sportsman. Some time ago he made the frank confession to a number of schoolboys that he started life with two ambitions, namely, to be Prime Minister and to win the Derby, and has not yet done trying for either of his ambitions. And, bearing in mind Lord Derby's keen love of the turf, his success as Postmaster-General, and the work he did in other administrative offices in the last Unionist Government, there seems no reason why he should not in due course realize these ambitions.

As Lord Stanley he was a popular figure in the Lower House, and his sporting qualities and love of horses added not a little to that popularity. Apropos of his sporting tastes an amusing story is told of an incident which occurred when he was first elected to Parliament. Lord Derby had invited questions at one of his meetings and a voice called out, "Can you give us a tip for to-morrow's race?"

Lord Stanley did not hesitate a minute. "Yes," he said; "I am backing such and such a horse," and he gave the name. The horse won and Lord Stanley was returned at the head of the poll.

Very Wealthy.

It will be remembered in 1910 that Lord Derby took over the ownership of the King's horses for a season. His father, the late earl, was also a keen sportsman, but at the same time he had a strong dislike to betting, and always objected to gambling being so closely involved in horse racing.

Knowsley Hall, in Lancashire, the magnificent ancestral home of the Stanleys, has long been a strong centre of interest in the turf world, and was frequently visited by the late King, who nearly always stayed there for the Liverpool races.

Lord Derby

The Derby Estates.

The Derby estates are worth about $20,000,000. The legend over one of the gateways at Knowsley runs, "Bring good news and knock boldly." Certainly the legend seems to have brought good luck to the Stanleys.

The Earl of Derby, by the way, is one of the three "Catskin" earls, the others being Lord Shrewsbury and Lord Huntingdon. The explanation of the word "catskin" is that the ancestors of these three earls were privileged to wear four rows of ermine fur on their robes because of their ancient descent, and that "quatre skins" (four skins) became changed to "catskins."

Victoria Cross in War.

The list of awards of the Victoria Cross brings the total conferred during the present war up to fifty-one, in addition to a clasp granted to Lieutenant Martin Leake, who already held the decoration. Nineteen of these who have won the Cross are officers, and thirty-two were either non-commissioned officers or privates at the time they won the award. Several of these have since been promoted to commissions. Out of the total eight officers and four men are dead, while another officer has been unofficially reported as killed.

To be good, according to some people, is to be a has-been.

A bore is a person who talks when you want to.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, SEPTEMBER 12.

Lesson XI.—Elijah's Flight and Return, I Kings 19. Golden Text: Psa. 46. 10.

I. Elijah in the Cave on Mount Horeb (Verses 8-12).

Verse 8. In the strength of that food—Compare Moses on Sinai (Exod. 34. 28) and Jesus in the wilderness (Matt. 4. 2). No man can "live by bread alone" if he is concerned about the Lord's business.

Unto Horeb the mount of God—This mountain, above all others, was distinguished by the manifestations thereon of God's power and glory.

9. Unto a cave—The Hebrew has "the cave." Evidently a particular cave was meant; perhaps the "cleft of the rock" in which God placed Moses (Exod. 33. 22).

What doest thou here, Elijah—The familiar address is used to indicate that Elijah had an opportunity to pour out his whole heart. Sometimes the mere repeating of one's woes, as the shedding of tears, brings the desired relief.

11. Go forth, and stand upon the mount before Jehovah—Nearness to God would open the prophet's eyes. Jehovah did not condole with Elijah; he simply showed him some things.

12. A still small voice—Literally, "a sound of gentle stillness." A great peace had come upon Elijah. In the calm he could hear God.

II. Elijah's Discouragement (Verses 13-18).

13. He wrapped his face in his mantle—The upper garment, a sort of cloak or cape, sometimes made of untanned sheepskin (compare Matt. 3. 4). The revelation is too intense for the unveiled eyes of the prophet. Moses, similarly, was "afraid to look upon God."

What doest thou here, Elijah—Again the same familiar address. But this time there is something of reproach in the voice. "Why are you here when there is so much to do? What has become of your insight and your power?"

14. I have been very jealous—Elijah naturally would try to justify himself. And of course he would refer to the great things he had accomplished and the seeming futility of his efforts.

15. Go, return on thy way—He is not to escape the difficulty; he is not to have new fields in which to work. The thing he was set to do he must finish.

To the wilderness of Damascus—The district lying between Bashan and Damascus.

And when thou comest, thou shalt anoint—So far as the Scripture record goes, Elijah did not follow this command (see 2 Kings 8. 7-13; 9. 1-6).

18. Seven thousand in Israel—An indefinite number. Compare 1 Kings 18. 43; Prov. 24. 16; Matt. 18. 21, 22. Although this indefinite number was undoubtedly small, it was God's holy remnant, and hence all-powerful.

Hath not kissed him—A part of the worship offered to false gods (see Hos. 13. 2). As an act of religious homage, see also Psa. 2. 12.

A BOY'S WORST ENEMY.

A Great American General's Opinion of Strong Drink.

A friend once said to General Philip Sheridan:—"Phil, if you could choose for your little son from all the temptations which will beset him, the one most to be feared, what would it be?" The great General leaned his head forward on his hand and said thoughtfully:—"It would be the curse of strong drink." Then he went on to state his reasons, and concluded by saying:—"Oh, I would rather see my little son die to-day than to see him carried in to his mother, drunk."

The General also referred to his own observations during his army career, and related this incident. One of his brave soldier boys was a strong, noble young fellow. Just as they were going into battle one hot day he said to General Sheridan:—"If I should be killed to-day please have this message sent to my mother:—'I have kept my promise. Not one drink have I tasted.'" He was killed, as he evidently anticipated. The General says:—"I carried that message to his mother with my own lips. She said to me:—'General, that is more glory to my boy than if he had taken a city.'"

On the Jury.

The lawyer was examining him concerning his qualifications as a juror.

"Have you ever served on a jury?" he asked.

"No, sir," answered the man. "I've been drawn a good many times, but I was always too smart to get caught on a jury."

"What's that, sir?" interrupted the judge sternly. "Do you boast of your smartness in escaping your duty?"

"No, your honor," said the man. "Not at all. When I said I was too smart I meant that I was always excused because the lawyers thought I wasn't [illegible] enough."

It is a test of good breeding to keep your temper in hot weather. Try it.

HARDSHIPS FACED BY GEN. BOTHA

AWFUL EFFECTS OF THE HEAT ON THE TROOPS.

Long Marches and Mad Gallops Under the Sun and Moon.

A lieutenant, who served with General Botha's force in the campaign in German South-West Africa, has written an interesting story of his experiences. In the course of his letter he describes the night marches and proceeds:—

"After a few hours we descended into a river bed, where we were met by a single horseman, who kept repeating, 'Keep well into the bank—mines' (a mule was blown up there next day, and I hear since there were a whole lot there). After crossing a few stone bridges, we came to another single horseman, who kept repeating, 'Keep in single file; don't stray out; more mines.' We then began to ascend a range of low mountains or high hills—the most awful place I ever saw. The moon was nearly at the full, which made the effect all the more ghastly. Did you ever look at the mountains in the moon under a powerful telescope? A cold, glittering deathliness—not a sign of vegetation or life in any form. Just as if a hot blast had passed over it or as one man described it, 'Hell, with the fires put out.'"

Galloped On and On.

"On the other side of these mountains we struck an awful streak of soft, floury sand, and, as bad luck would have it, the order was given to quicken pace, which meant a hand gallop. This was the worst we had yet met."

In rounding up a patrol of Germans the writer gives his experience:

"The fatigue became awful. I began to get light-headed. The sky seemed to become a straight wall in front of us, and the effect of the moonlight through the dust made me imagine I saw great palaces and churches, with the stars as lit e windows. Then I would pull myself together and look at the men riding in front, and they would turn into funny old glantesses dancing in the moonlight. (I learned afterwards that everyone suffered from these hallucinations). There was no check now; we galloped on and on—mile after mile—over stones, drooping branches, just leaving it to the horse. Those splendid horses! They were far saner than we were, and seemed to know there was something ahead

Fusillade of Fire.

"Just as early dawn broke we reached the top of a ridge . . . All at once there was a regular fusillade of rifle fire and hand machine-gun fire. I had no idea they were firing at us, as I was too finished to think or care for anything but sleep. My horse started to pull (I heard afterwards that a bullet hit just in front of his foot and another over his back and behind mine). The next thing I remember was being in the river bed with all the others. I don't know how they didn't hit us, as there were several very close shaves. B Squadron, who followed us just behind, 'caught it,' losing four killed and one wounded.

The whole little scrap lasted over half an hour, but I don't remember much else except seeing H. J. bringing two German prisoners up, and very pleased he was with himself. We rode back into the town, but we were all dead beat. In that last night's ride we covered from 32 to 35 miles between 12.30 and 6 a.m., most of the way at a gallop, through thick bush, clouds of dust and rough ground, after having already had three days and nights of perpetual going.

The real work we done when we cut the line at Wilhelmstal the next day, and it was comparatively easy going from there to Windhuk."

WAR CUTS BIRTH RATE.

A Drop of 80,000 Throughout British Isles for Year.

France has long been suffering from a decline in the birth rate. England, during the last few years has been steadily following suit. The decrease, "war baby" reports notwithstanding, has now reached the colossal total of 2280 a week in London alone. In the Provinces 1,500 fewer babies are entering the world in the same period as compared with last year.

Statisticians are at their wits' end. The decline means a drop of 80000 for Britain during 1914, which, as a particularly bad year, owing to the fact that very few children were registered in the scramble of fathers war having caused to be taken as a lead, the decline natural increase in spells a loss at the rate of 18,720 per population. London alone, among boys alone, the decline is to an average of 104 a week, compared with the preceding five years. The loss of boy population to London, therefore, is something like 5,200 a year. If London and the 97 big towns be bunched together, there is a slump of nearly 2,000 a week.

Thirst !

A thing with half a tail, chips of ears, fur in patches, mange in the intervals, a shark-like receding jaw, and yellow, wedge-shaped teeth, could not by any standard be called beautiful. In the moonlight he was absolutely diabolical.

When you have lived for one week under the artillery fire of the world's biggest armies, even a beautiful thing may be excused for not looking lovely. This thing, however, had never been pretty, not even as a baby, when most beasts are good to look upon.

It was an old, a devilish, buck rat, and an enormous buck rat at that.

Slowly he crossed the road, and explored the hedge on the far side. He was looking for water, that rat, for be it known to you that water is the rat's ever-pressing problem. They must drink often. Within twenty-four hours they die else.

Nerves!

An owl came snoring and sighing through the night, and the rat "froze" stiller than the over-turned gun-carriage caught up in the hedge over his head. For a moment he was conscious of huge, round, shining eyes glaring in upon him; but he kept his head, and the owl, not seeing the motionless form, slid away down the hedge.

Suddenly, at the cross-hedge, the rat started and bolted for a hole, but stopped half-way, stared, and stepped out. It was only the ghostly shimmer of the grave stones that had frightened him.

There was a lean dog among the mounds at business with something, but it ran away whimpering at his rustle; such is the effect of continuous heavy cannonading on the highly-strung canine temperament.

There was also something that gleamed in the church porch and the moonlight, but it was only a bayonet or a Mauser rifle, and close by a abandoned out of an abandoned helmet with a nerve-trying rush at his approach. A piece of black bread lay beside the helmet, but it was already possessed by beetles, and the big rat passed on into the beautiful little old church. He did not stop to consider why the door was open to the placid, unpitying moon, and the cold mist of the autumn night.

The Open Church.

Water! Water! Water! He must find water, or die, and, indeed, even as he crossed the silent light in the porch, he reeled in his stride like a drunken beast.

Ten minutes later we discover him high up in the church tower, following always the scent of man's footsteps, motionless and awed, for the moment, by the echoing ticking of the big clock, and the voices that lived in the works.

Then he got in on his fine work with nose and whiskers—they were almost as good as a divining-rod—and in quick succession discovered two closed kegs of water, and one open. He also discovered a man—dressed like a shepherd, he was—who snored, and, therefore, as the rat knew well enough, was of no account.

Five minutes later, shaking the silvered drops from his whiskers, we find our rat once more revived, and leaving the church by the way he had come. He tarried not. Neither looked he to the right nor to the left, but rustled off into the fields.

In the hour before dawn, when the moon had sat down on the top of a hill like a gigantic, silver, upturned saucer, and everything, even the distant German guns, was as still as death, the old rat came back.

A Living Stream.

And he was not alone, that rat. There were others with him. Not one, or two, or half a dozen merely, but—well, suddenly, in that instant, the whole churchyard seemed literally to get up and crawl. It was—one cannot describe it—the strange whisper of thousands of small feet. Only, in this case, the horror was increased by the eyes—hundreds upon hundreds of tiny, glinting, cruel eyes, in pairs, seen and gone and seen again.

Then the old rat uttered a noise. One cannot well grace it by any other name—a wicked, low, jarring gibber. Only for a moment did he speak. Then, with ungainly hops, vanished into the church, and—oh, horrors!—it was as if a grey-brown stream surged across the path and on into the church at his heels.

That stream, however, was no water. It was alive. It was rats, to be exact; it was what is called a "flitting" of rats, which is a migration en masse of the long-tailed ones—hundreds upon hundreds of rats of every size and age and degree of abominableness.

The sounds of them as they passed through the cave-like, dark, and echoing silence of the church were enough to make your hair creep all over your head, and the death-squeak of the mouse, caught, cornered, slain, and consumed, in a breath, made it worse.

The eyes of shone here, too, in whiskered ones fashion, and the score more ghostly ing upwards into the them, pouring was like the wind blowing through tower, dead leaves.

Awakened by Rats.

Straight to the kegs of streamed the rats, guided by the gift old buck-rat, who was also their leader and chieftain. No notice of the snoring shepherd took they, neither deviated they to the right or left. It was water they had come for; water they must have, or perish.

How long they were at the kegs no man knows, not long certainly; but when they left them, to explore the place, not a single drop of water remained.

A lark had just started to sing outside when, without warning, the sleeping shepherd started up.

There was blood on the man's throat, and blood on his hands, and on his face, too, were crimson spots, and even as he yelled, the whole floor of the place about him seemed to get up and scamper away. And, in a breath, they were gone, those rats—streaming over the churchyard among the gravestones and the mystery of beyond.

* * * * * *

That morning the British troops surrounded the church, and began to dig trenches. The road without rang with the ordered tread of disciplined British feet, and the air near by vibrated with the thudding stutter of British artillery.

And so it went on all that day and the next.

On the last day the officers of the German artillery on the far hills, bringing their big guns into action, stared long and hard through their field-glasses at the clock on the church tower, waiting for the hands to move round and point to the positions of the hidden British guns, waited, too, as their guns fired their first rounds, to see the hands of the clock move round to show them if their shells were falling wide or correctly.

Confound that shepherd! Had he foolishly got himself caught, or was he asleep, or had he played them false, or what?

They knew he had had enough food and water when he had hid himself up there.

But the hands of the clock never moved, and indeed the clock had stopped. No sign came from the church tower, and one by one the hidden British guns began to put the big, blind German pieces out of action.

The shepherd, caught like a rat in a trap in his own hiding-place, surrounded and helpless, was lying dead in the church tower, killed by want of water and blood-poisoning.— London Answers.

CHEERY WORDS AND WISE.

Let discord die.—Mr. Winston Churchill.

We are certain to get to Constantinople.—Sir Edwin Pears.

It is a great deal easier to criticize at home than to fight in the trenches. —Sir John Simon.

Those whom war has joined together peace must not be allowed to put asunder.—Lord Curzon.

Let each man of us see that we spare nothing, shirk nothing, shrink from nothing.—Lord Kitchener.

Every man who fights in our cause is a hero and every man who dies in it is a martyr.—The Bishop of London.

If wisdom does not come soon to Europe, it will go straight to bankruptcy in a comparatively short time. —Lord Loreburn.

There is a wrong kind of optimism, the kind in which a man thinks that the thing will come right without his doing it.—Mr. McKinnon Wood.

France stands erect with an organized, ardent, and redoubtable army, sure of conquering with her indomitable allies.—M. Viviani, the French Premier.

There are men who would find fault with the Archangel Gabriel if he came down here and sought to administer the affairs of our country.— Mr. Long.

Five great powers are allied together against Germany—ourselves, France, Russia, Italy, and that grand ally, Time.—Mr. Winston Churchill.

The great curse of humanity for the past 40 years has been the yearly addition of a million young savages to the German population.—Sir Jas. Barr.

THE PRICE BELGIANS PAID.

Taxes Total $40,000,000 and Damage Is Tremendous.

In the first three months of the war the damage done amounted to £212,000,000. This was up to the end of October, and by December at least another million pounds worth of property had been destroyed. The Germans timed their invasion of Belgium for the harvest period, and were thus able to rob the Belgians of £3,-000,000 worth of food. In addition, they have levied taxes amounting altogether to £8,000,000, while the cost in human life is estimated at £15,000,-000. Altogether the cost of the war to Belgium for the first five months was £838,000,000. What is more terrible is that Germany has seized the whole of the Belgian food supply, and it is reckoned that in Belgium there will be over 2,000,000 destitute persons, and the remaining 5,000,000 will be coming to the end of their resources.

As showing the determination of the Germans to do everything they possibly can to bring the direst misery to the people of the country they so shamefully invaded, it might be mentioned that, according to Sir Edward Grey, the German military authorities actually stole the food and money sent from America for the relief of the refugees in Belgium.

ITALIAN SOLDIERS RECEIVING FOOD RATIONS

BITTER TROUBLE AND UNHAPPINESS

PATHETIC PEN-PICTURE DRAWN FROM REAL LIFE.

One of the Many Touching Incidents of the Present Great War.

The neighbors spoke of her as "Poor Miss Smith"; but all their little ones called her "Auntie," and looked forward with glee to the jolly tea-parties she gave them in her little ivy-clad cottage. And they dreamt at nights of that big, round glass jar, standing on her mantel-shelf, that held so many sweeties, says London Answers.

"Auntie"—she, too, had her dreams at night time; and in her dreams she had heard anew their childish patter. Then for her their gleeful laughter sounded over again; she felt their little arms twine round her neck. Often, when "Auntie" awoke, she would wonder at her tear-damp pillow.

"Poor Miss Smith"—so the villagers called her; not that they thought that she was really poor, you know—it was generally understood among them that she had "a nice little income"—but rather because of her sadness, her loneliness. No one ever journeyed to the village to see her; never did old Gaff, the postman, have need to hammer on her door. The village folk guessed that she had known bitter trouble and unhappiness.

"A terr'ble disappointment, she've had," said one, "The black ox have trod on her tail, for sure," voiced another, and so they talked and conjectured among themselves.

Unspoken Sorrow.

But the little, kindly gentlewoman, with the large, sad, blue eyes, with the slow and sweet smile and quiet voice, did not complain to anybody. She made no mention of any sorrow; told not a soul of her troubles. Yet pain and tragedy were often in those sad, blue eyes.

It was generally accepted by the gossips that her age was "somewhere about forty-five, if a day." As a matter of fact, she was almost ten years younger, even though her hair was beginning to silver far sooner than it should have done.

Not long after the outbreak of war, it was noticed by one or two observant folk that "Poor Miss Smith" seemed a little happier, brighter; that she smiled oftener. Also, the fact that she spent quite a long time on several occasions in the shop of Mr. Simpson—"Hosier, Outfitter, and Gents' Tailor"—was commented upon.

Mr. Simpson was asked to explain, and was understood to say that he could not see what business it was of anybody's if a lady customer chose to buy two pairs of socks, three pairs of gloves, and two mufflers—yes, and woolly things, and a gents' knitted vest (meaning waistcoat), "for a gent as was, presoomably, at the Front," and he wanted to know "what the village was a-coming to with its inquisitiveness."

And in the little, cosy front-parlor of the ivy-clad cottage "Poor Miss Smith" sat writing a letter, with a pen that trembled just ever so slightly. Round her lips was that sad, sweet smile; in her eyes bright tear-drops glistened.

Her Dream-Happiness.

Before her, on the table, were the socks and gloves and mufflers and woolly things and the knitted vest. It was a very long letter that she was writing. Sheets and sheets of white paper scented with violets did she cover with small, neat writing before she sealed them all up in the covering envelope.

Next, she turned to the socks and gloves and mufflers and woolly things and the knitted vest. The letter went into the biggest side-pocket of the knitted vest. A big packet of cigarettes she took from the mantelshelf, and then a big packet of tobacco. These she tucked inside.

"Poor Miss Smith" had never before tied and sealed such a large parcel, and she did it so very carefully, too. But at last it was done. Then, her hands folded before her, she stood and looked at it. Her thoughts were far away; a prayer was in her heart.

That night, in her dreams, "Poor Miss Smith" was walking proudly by the side of a big, strong man, whose arm she held. He had curly hair that was crisp and brown, and clear, brave eyes. He spoke to her very gently, calling her his sweetheart, and he kissed her.

Then she heard again the joyous voices of her little dream-children, and felt their soft embraces. They called her "Mother" in her dream.

* * * * * *

It was old Gaff, the postman, who first told about the letter he had delivered that very same morning at ivy-clad cottage.

"The first letter she've had to my sartin knowledge," quoth he. "Right from the Front, it were, by the marks on't."

"He Died Gallantly."

Then he explained the [illegible] the village discussed and wondered.

Old Gaff took eight more letters to the ivy-clad cottage.

Then, one day came another letter. But this was a different letter. Its envelope was written by another hand. Old Gaff—well, his reputation as an interesting personage went up with a leap when he was able to assert, solemnly, and on his oath, if need be, "Poor Miss Smith" she went that white-like when she see it, that she did.

"Poor Miss Smith." Not a soul saw her about all that day. The blinds were drawn down over the tiny windows of the ivy-clad cottage.

The next morning young Tom, the boy from the Meadow Farm, found that the can of milk that he had left the day before had not been taken in. There it was, still on the cobbled walk by the side of the doorway.

Young Tom thought it strange, and mentioned it to several folk. By dinner-time the news had, per old Gaff, got to the police-station.

The letter—the one in the strange handwriting, the last one—was in her hand when they found her. The doctor read it reverently.

"Dear Madam,—I regret very much to have to inform you that Private —— is gone. He died gallantly in an assault on the German trenches. He met his end like a hero. I am writing to you because yours are the only letters we found among his things."

"Poor Miss Smith"—she is with the big, strong man with the clear, brave eyes. Maybe he is calling her "sweetheart" in that kindly voice of his, and perhaps he is kissing her.

GERMAN NERVOUSNESS.

The Fortune of War Has Gone Against Their Arms.

While a feeling of confidence is steadily growing amongst the Allies signs of depression and nervousness are becoming increasingly noticeable among their opponents. The most striking of these indications is afforded in a speech the Kaiser is reported to have delivered when he addressed a large number of Landsturmers at Frankfurt as they were leaving for the front. The Emperor, who was described as looking aged, nervous and grey, is reported to have said: "We have staked all. If the enemy is victorious Germany will no longer exist. Perhaps the war was a mistake on our part, but the present is not the moment to speak of it. We must save our country." Prisoners, recently taken both in France and in Russia, frankly admit that the fortune of war has gone against their arms, and state that it may be necessary to leave Austria to the fate of a hopelessly defeated Power, and to concentrate all the energies of the German people on the maintenance of the territorial integrity of the Empire.

FULL VALUE FRUIT.

Co-operation Asked From the Grower to the Consumer.

The war is developing in many people a higher ideal of citizenship—a clearer conception of the fair-play that should prevail in all the business of the country. Even our government is preaching honesty, thrift and economy—work that was usually left to the pulpits. In addition to this business organizations are adopting a more public-spirited attitude and giving more attention to the service they should render for the money they receive, says Peter McArthur.

A notable example of this new spirit is being shown in the fruit industry of the country, which has not reached so large a proportion. The organizations having charge of the marketing of tender fruits (berries, currants, plums, peaches, etc.), are particularly anxious to place the work of marketing and distribution on a plane of patriotic public service. It is their aim to distribute their products so widely that there will be no waste and at the same time to place them on the market in such a way that the consumer shall have full value for their money. During the past few months I have had an opportunity of investigating the business of marketing plums and peaches. I have interviewed growers, dealers and retailers and have no hesitation in saying that except in a few centres where there are local ordinances that interfere with the business of marketing outside products it should be possible for consumers to get better service than they have ever had in the past. They should get good sound peaches and plums at a fair price and in order that they may be able to do so I am going to make them an unusual offer.

If you feel that you are being overcharged for peaches, plums or tender fruits kindly send the facts to me, stating price paid and date of making the purchase and the district from which fruit was secured. This will enable me to learn exactly what the price of fruit should have been where you bought at that particular time. If you have been overcharged I shall write and let you know so that we may expose everyone who is trying to make undue profits in this year when every man should be doing his part for the good of his stricken country.

The campaign to sell the fruits in the first big selling campaign to be organized within the empire since the outbreak of the war and it is desired to handle the business in such a way as to get an example to the rest of the empire. To this end everyone is asked to co-operate, from the grower to the consumer. The consumer in particular is requested to report all instances of overcharging so that the persons guilty of it may be exposed to public censure. Complaints will be investigated by Peter McArthur, Appin, P.O., Ont.

Let us all get together and see that the fruit crop is marketed this season in a manner worthy of patriotic citizens of the empire who wish to avoid waste and to see that everyone gets full value for his money.

Taking No Risks.

Sandy had just placed the diamond ring on the finger of sweetheart number two. His first love had jilted him and, worse still, had refused to send back his ring. So he did not mean to be out of pocket in this his second venture if the worst should happen again. "Noo," he said, "wid ye min' gleirr' me a receipt promisin' to return ma ring gin ye should cheenge yer mind aboot mairrying me?"

Profile likenesses are due to the vanity of a Roman Emperor who had but one eye.

A "simpleton" was once the honored term for a straightforward man, candid, and "simple."

Some men would rather hang around some one who is somebody than hustle around themselves and try to be somebody.

READINESS OF THE GRAND FLEET

THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK VISITS THE SAILORS.

He Was Much Impressed By the All-Pervading Sense of Readiness Shown.

Sailor, what of the debt we owe you?
Day and night is the peril more?
Who so dull that he fails to know you,
Sleepless guard of our island shore?

Safe the corn to the farmyard taken,
Grain ships safe upon all the seas—
Homes in peace and a faith unshaken,
Sailor, what do we owe for these?

With this quotation the Archbishop of York, Dr. Cosmo Gordon Lang, begins an eloquent description of his recent visit of ten days to the Grand Fleet in the London Times.

The arrangements for the visit were made by the Commander-in-Chief and the admiral's commanding the other bases, whose guest I was. They were models of careful organization. It proved to be possible to arrange great voluntary services on two Sunday afternoons and on a week-day morning.

Moving Experience.

At the first there were the Commander-in-Chief and his staff, the other admirals, and nearly 5,000 officers and men. The ships of the fleet were lying around, looming out of the dull grey mist—it was a most moving experience to commit that distant fleet to the care and blessing of God. The scene of the second, bathed in sunshine, where about 3,000 officers and men were grouped, was very different.

The third service, if less romantic in its setting than the first, was as a spectacle, the most impressive of the three—indeed, I have never seen anything like it. Nearly 9,000 officers and men were gathered in a vast dry dock. I shall never forget that sea of upturned faces, frank and bronzed.

40 Addresses in Ten Days.

There were four Confirmations services—two of them in the flagships of the admirals in command, attended by hundreds of men. About 180 were confirmed—warrant and petty officers, artificers, men and boys, and one of two midshipmen. One afternoon, wet and squally, I consecrated a field as a new naval cemetery. The congregation was about 1,500 men from the destroyer flotillas, who sang and listened with a true naval indifference to weather.

Every day there were visits to selected ships, to which drafts of men from neighboring ships were sent; and there I spoke and gave God's blessing to crowds of men standing on deck or sitting among the turrets in every variety of picturesque grouping. Altogether, during ten days, I gave over forty addresses.

All-Pervading Readiness.

Of the efficiency of the Fleet it is not for a mere outsider to speak, but even he cannot fail to be impressed by the all-pervading sense of readiness. It seemed as if there was one word written on every ship, on every part of her, on every man within her—the word Ready.

At dinner or luncheon every day I met all the admirals, most of the captains, and many of the other officers of the fleet. In manner, in word, in spirit, they justified the boast of one of the vice-admirals—"We are all a great band of brothers."

I left the Grand Fleet sharing to the full the admiration, affection and confidence which every officer and man within it feels for its Commander-in-Chief, Sir John Jellicoe. He embodies and strengthens that comradeship of single-minded service which is the crowning honor of the Navy.

A RECITAL IN THE TRENCHES.

How a Welshman's Fine Voice Captured the Germans.

When battle lines extend continuously for three or four hundred miles, almost anything may happen somewhere along the way. The following pretty incident is one thing that happened, according to a letter from a soldier in Belgium:

It was a miserable night. A heavy rain had filled the trenches. Suddenly out of the darkness came a voice. It was singing a Welsh ballad called "Hob y deri dando," and it was a fine tenor voice. It was the cheeriest sound I had ever heard. At the end, a round of applause came down the trenches; but, imagine our surprise to hear clapping and calls for more, in good English, from the German trenches. Thereupon the Welshman gave "Mentra Gwen."

Meantime we realized that not a shot had been fired by either side during the singing. We had forgotten all about war. So a bargain was struck with the Germans, that if the Welshman would give us another song neither side would fire any more until daylight.

The third song was "Hen Wlad fy Nhadau." It was probably the first time that the stirring Welsh anthem was ever heard on this dismal Flemish morass.

There are nine books and one Psalm mentioned in the Bible which are now lost to the world.

WALKERTON

Reeve John Joyst of Lucknow, proprietor of the Walkerton apple evaporator, while in town on Friday signified his intention of operating the evaporator here this fall which will mean employment for a time at least to a large number of hands. Although the apple crop is not promising, Mr Joyst will operate as long as the supply holds out.

Two more boozers were added to the local Indian list last week in an effort to promote sobriety and place the prohibition sign on those who need the law's gentle restraining efforts most. The Indian list is becoming a great institution, and the heavy penalty provided for those unscrupulous who for selfish self will give the listers drink, has scared the illicit vendors pretty well off the job here, and has made the territory real dry for the boys who can't legally reach over the mahogany for the moisture.—Herald and Times.

When the price of flour was raised last winter, the local bakers almost in twenty-four hours raised the price of bread, but although the price of flour has recently dropped almost two dollars per barrel, the advanced price of bread remains. While flour was at the high price the bakers were entitled to a higher price for their bread, but now that the decrease has come, after the harvest, the consumer and particularly the working man is entitled to a square deal which means that he should be able once more to purchase the five-cent loaf.

An umbrella repairer, giving his name as William Reilly who blew into town on Saturday was caught in the act of breaking into a caboose at the local C.P.R. yards that evening by Mr Polly, the car inspector, and was later arrested by Chief Ferguson. He was remanded until Tuesday for trial and was then sent up by Magistrate Tolton, the nomital charge of trespass being changed to that of attempted burglary. Prior to his arrest the prisoner in soliciting work claimed to have been in the British army fighting in France and to bear out his assertion, would present a likeness of himself in uniform with two sons whom he claimed were still in the trenches. This game evidently brought him a good deal of work for he managed to buy quite a jag with the money he made. He knew better however, than to attempt the returned soldier game at the police court and was as mum as a clam in that respect. He is the first man to work that game on the public and is just a forerunner of many to come when the war is over, for then there will be scores of fakers with the sob story working the easy marks for a living. Reilly appeared before Judge Gregg on Wednesday morning and on electing to be tried by the Judge, was remanded to gaol until to-day for trial. He will be given a hearing at 10 o'clock this morning.—Telescope.

SEE THE PAISLEY FAIR
SEPT. 29 and 30

The great farmers' fair at Paisley should have a larger attendance this year than ever. The fair itself will, as heretofore, be a fair for the farmer or anyone else who wants to see the farm stock or products of the district on exhibition, and everyone is free to exhibit all animals or articles that are considered worth while, without paying an extra entrance fee. A large number of special prizes have been added to the list this year, as follows: For best herd of Shorthorn cattle—1 bull and 4 females, $3 00; For best exhibition of horsemanship or driver of single horse by farmer's son (6 years of age or under (mentioned on page 8), 1st $3.00, 2nd $1.00, by James Hills; for best dressed lady on the grounds on afternoon of the 29th—Special by G B Irwin, goods for skirt, value $4 50.

A football tournament will also be held, for which the following prizes are offered to winning teams—1st, 12 football uniform sweaters, by Putnam & son; 2nd, set of 12 pair gold cuff links, by D McKenzie.

The Paisley Brass Band will furnish music during the day, and on the evening of the second day a good concert will be given in the town hall.

END OF THE RUSSIAN RETREAT IS IN VIEW

As the Russians Get Further Into Their Country so Are They Preparing Now to Face the Enemy

Patrograd, Sept. 7—Official—The retirement of the Russian armies is now almost completed, and that along the whole front a more or less stable position is being established which affords the Russians entire freedom of action. This freedom at the moment is being utilized mainly in detached movements in the area between the Sventa and the Vilya, and along the right bank of the latter river. The immediate object of these operations is to check the advance of the enemy in the direction of Vilna, and at the same time weaken the pressure of the German force which in crossing the Niemen at Olita swung southward and led to the evacuation of Grodno. Now that the Russians are altogether withdrawn from the left bank of the Niemen, the position in this quarter is declared to be sufficiently firm. The abandonment of Grodno caused no surprise. Altogether the prolongation of the German lines of supply and the simultaneous shortening of those of the Russians seem to be telling the inevitable tale. The great part of the present theatre of war on this front now is very ill-suited for the purposes of the German war machine, and if the weather here, where there has been much rain during the past few days, can be taken as a criterion, the theatre of war must be rapidly softening into the normal autumn impassability.

The Planter's Daughter;

Or, The Queen of Belle River.

It is impossible to describe the state of mind in which Mark Sutherland found himself. He immediately wrote an imploring, passionate note to his mother, briefly alluding to the independence he intended to secure to her, and supplicating her to return to her own home.

And then, half-maddened, he set himself to his business.

He caused all the servants to be assembled on the lawn and announced his intention of setting free and sending all who were willing to go, to Liberia. He explained to them the good that must accrue to the younger and more intelligent who might emigrate and settle in the last-named place. This news did not take the negroes the least by surprise. After closing his little speech, he singled out some dozen among them—heads of cabin families—old and steady men; and he took them with him into his library, where he explained to them advantages of the plan of emigration to Liberia. And then he dismissed them to reflect and decide what they wished to do.

Next, he left his study to inquire if the messenger sent to his mother had returned. He found the man watching for him in the hall. He held a letter in his hand. Mr. Sutherland eagerly snatched it. It contained a few lines advising him that no further communication would be received from him which was not preceded by a full and complete renunciation. While his gaze was painfully riveted upon this note, the second messenger arrived, bringing a letter in his hand. It was his own returned unopened.

"Did you see Mrs. Sutherland, Flamingo?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did she say?"

"I gave her the letter, sir; she took it and read the direction and handed it back to me and told me to take it back to him who sent it and not to bring her another one."

"That will do—you may go," said Mark, and a spasm of pain twitched his countenance.

"That is not all, sir—there is something else."

"Well, what is it?"

Flamingo took from under his arm a small packet wrapped in tissue paper and handed it to him.

"What is this? Where did you get this?"

"Miss Rosalie gave it to me to bring to you."

"You may go now," said Mr. Sutherland as he passed into the parlor and sat down to look at the packet. It was a little morocco case containing a lady's small pocket Bible bound in white velvet and silver, with silver clasps. An elegant little bijou it was. Upon the fly-leaf was written, "Rosalie Vivian, from her affectionate and happy mother." And this writing bore a date of several years before.

On the opposite page was inscribed, "Mark Sutherland, with the deep respect of Rosalie Vivian." And this inscription bore the date of to-day. A leaf was folded down, and when he opened it at the Twenty-seventh Psalm, he saw marked this passage: "When my father and my mother forsake me, then will the Lord take me up." There was still another page turned down and another pencil stroke inclosing these words, (Mark x. 29), "And Jesus answered and said, Verily, I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake and the gospel's, but he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come, eternal life."

He turned over the little book, with a fond look and smile—partly given to the elegant little bijou itself, such an inappropriate sort of copy to be sent to a man, and partly to the fair, gentle girl, its donor. The little incident came to him like a soft, encouraging pressure of the hand, or a kind word at his greatest need—like a loving benediction. And for those blessed words that were marked, they were dropped into his broken and tearful heart like good seeds into the plowed and watered earth to bring forth fruit in due season.

He replaced the little book in its case, wrapped it again in its tissue paper, and lodged it within the ample breast of his coat. He had never heard Rosalie give expression to one fine heroic sentiment such as fell plenteously from the lips of India.

It were tedious to follow Mr. Sutherland through all the harassing details of business. Not only social and domestic discouragements, but difficulties that arose on the part of the negroes. A few of them did not want the old state of things, with its familiar associations and close attachments, broken up. Some of them, who were anxious to be free, had wives and children, or husbands, upon some neighboring plantation, and so were held bound by their affections. This class of negroes proved to be a great trial and vexation to Mark. It was in vain their benefactor told these men that after a few years of labor and saving they would be able to purchase their wives or children. They shook their heads. As far as his means would go, Mr. Sutherland purchased these wives or children and sent them off with their husbands and fathers.

At length it was all over—the slaves were emancipated and gone, each with a sum of money to pay their transport and provide their immediate necessities, but no doubts as to the righteousness of his own act ever crossed his mind. And so he committed the result to Providence.

He had taken care to secure the homestead to his mother. For her benefit he had also placed at interest thirty thousand dollars, which, at six per cent., would yield her an income of eighteen hundred.

Having thus wound up his business, he went over to Cashmere to seek a farewell interview with his mother and relatives. He learned that they had a few days before left Cashmere for the North.

The next morning Mark Sutherland, with only ninety dollars in his pocket-book, with his wardrobe and his law books, departed from his childhood's home.

It may be as well to state here that when the Sutherlands returned in the autumn, Mrs. Sutherland, with some ten or twelve slaves, her own personal property, took up her abode at Silentshades, availed herself of the income her son had secured to her and made herself comfortable.

CHAPTER VIII.

The sun was rising in cloudless splendor on the morning on which Mark Sutherland paused upon an eminence to throw a farewell glance over the beautiful scenes of his childhood and youth—the fair valley of the Belle.

At some distance below him, encircled by a bend of the river, lay—like some rich mosaic on the bosom of the vale—"Cashmere," the almost Oriental scene of his youthful love-dream. There was the pebbly beach, with its miniature piers and fairy boats—the lawn, with its flowering and fragrant groves, its crystal founts, its shaded walks and vine-clad arbors; and, near the house, the rose terrace, with its millions of odoriferous budding and blooming roses, surrounding as within a crimson glow that white villa and its colonnade of light Ionic shafts. And at its sight, the image of the beautiful India arose before him. Again he saw her in that poetic harmony of form and coloring that had so ravished his artist soul—the slender, yet well-rounded figure—the warm, bright countenance, with its amber-hued ringlets, and clear olive complexion, deepening into crimson upon cheeks and lips—a form that he once had fondly thought clothed a soul as harmonious as beautiful. They were lost! all lost! Do not despise him, or blame him, when I tell you, in the touching words of Scripture, "that he lifted up his voice and wept." He was but twenty-one, and this was the first despairing, passionate sorrow of his youth.

Alas! I am afraid the delights of duty are seldom believed in, and seldomer experienced. Nothing but a loving Christian faith can console.

And Mark Sutherland was not a Christian man.

Here, then, even a philanthropist might reasonably inquire why all this was done? Why he, being no Christian, should make such an immense sacrifice of wealth, position, affection, hope—in short, of all temporal and earthly interests?

We answer that, had a scientific phrenologist examined the moral organs of Mark Sutherland's head, he would have found his answer in the predominant conscientiousness. It was a severe sense of justice that laid its iron hand upon him, obliging him to do as he had done; stern sense of justice, without faith, hope or love—an uncompromising sense of justice.

He is not as yet a Christian, but no great sacrifice was ever made to duty without Christ claiming that redeemed soul as his own.

After all, perhaps, there is but one sin—idolatry; and all forms of evil are compromised within it, from the lightest error that clouds the conscience to the darkest crime that brings endless night upon the soul, to the anguish and despair that overwhelms and swallows up all the hopes of life. We are all idolaters. Ambition, avarice, love. Perhaps love, the most innocent and disinterested of all forms of idolatry, comes nearest to the true worship. But it is not the true worship.

Oh! if but for a moment we could raise our souls to God in the self-surrender wherewith in passionate devotion we throw our hearts beneath the feet of some weak and perishable form of clay—that were conversation! that were eternal life and full of joy!

And are there not moments when we catch a glimpse of such a possibility? when brain and heart stand still, thoughtless, breathless; when life itself pauses in the transient revelation of such insufferable light? And we know that some have entered in and lived this light all the days of their lives. To many of us, alas! and in most of our moods, they seem to live in an unknown world—to speak in an unknown tongue.

Who of us has not occasionally experienced these thoughts and emotions, in reading and meditating on the lives and characters of Christians of any name?—it matters little what; for there is a unity of spirit in all regenerated children of God, of every nation, rank or sect. What if, through the medium of each separate brain, the theology looks different? The heart is greater than the brain; or, in other words, the affections are higher than the intellect. "Out of the heart are the issues of life;" and "this is life eternal, that we should know the true God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent." With their hearts, their affections, they discerned Him. And in love they were one with each other, and one with Christ and God. And who, in communing with their fervent souls—in meditating on their perfect faith and love—perfect devotion to God, has been startled by some such light as this let in upon the mind: "Why, if this unfailing love, this total self-surrender, be the worship we owe to our Creator, then have we been idolaters; for all this instinct and power, and necessity of loving and worshipping has been ours, and has been lavished only on the creature."

Akin to this was the feeling that impelled the dying Wolsey to exclaim: "Had I but served God as diligently as I have served the king, He would not have given me over in my gray hairs."

And as Mark Sutherland stood gazing in bitterness of spirit upon the beautiful scene of his love and joy these words escaped from his bursting heart: "Oh, God! if I had worshiped Thee as I worshiped her, Thy beautiful work, I had not been now alone—alone in my sorrow!"

It was the sincere, earnest cry of a stricken, penitent, suffering heart.

It was answered then and there. Around him fell an influence more genial than sunshine—a divine influence, sublime and struggling and strengthening the soul within him.

The comforter had come, and with uncovered head and uplifted heart Mark Sutherland consecrated his life to the service of God and His work on earth.

From the beautiful vale he turned, and, inspired by new strength and courage, galloped rapidly on toward the road leading to the town of C——, where six weeks since he had parted with Lauderdale. Here he addressed a letter to his bachelor uncle, Paul Sutherland, informing him that his destination was some northwestern town, whence, as soon as he should become settled, he should write. He gave this letter in charge of the landlord. He then mounted his horse, and took the road to Natchez. He reached the city by nightfall, and found his baggage, sent by the stage-coach, had arrived in safety. He took the boat that passed that night; and the next morning he found himself many miles on his way up the river.

"The world was all before him, where to choose
His place of rest, and Providence his guide."

And to a young, adventurous, hopeful spirit, this uncertainty, joined to liberty, was not without its peculiar charm. The lawns and villages on the Lower Mississippi did not attract him in the least degree.

But, farther up the river, and above the mouth of the Ohio, the country and the color of the water began to change. High bluffs, gray old rocks, and gigantic woods diversified the shores; crystal creeks and verdant islets varied the river. He approached the fine "Rock River country."

This gigantic scene—Rock River, Rock Island, with the opposite shores of the Mississippi, widening here into a lake-like expanse—had a breadth of grandeur, a Titanic vigor and vitality of beauty, the most consonant, the most imposing and encouraging, to his own young energetic spirit.

The boat stopped opposite the village of S—— just as the morning mist was rolling away before the sun and revealing the scene in all its picturesque beauty and fresh life. The young city was but too years old; yet infant of the Titanic West, it was growing and thriving most vigorously. Here, then, Mark Sutherland determined to take up his abode: here to live and labor. He ordered his baggage into the boat and stepped in after it, and was swiftly rowed to the shore. Here, too, in order to begin aright, he shouldered his own trunk, while a porter followed with his box of books, and wended his way to the hotel on the hill.

ASQUITH'S ABILITY.

Offered Sixteen Seats Before He Stood for East Fife.

At the City of London School Premier Asquith is best remembered as a quiet, studious boy who did not care for games, but preferred to spend his dinner hour reading the Times. It was the master of Balliol who remarked, "Asquith will get on, he is so direct." And after a brilliant career at that college, Mr. Asquith was called to the bar in 1876, and became a Q.C. in 1890. Four years previously he had entered Parliament as M.P. for East Fife, Scotland, which he has always represented since.

It is a fact not generally known, by the way, that both Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and Mr. Gladstone were so impressed by Mr. Asquith's abilities that he was offered 16 different seats before he finally accepted the invitation to stand for East Fife.

Although in public life somewhat cold and austere, Mr. Asquith in private life is the most genial of men. Like Mrs. Asquith, whom he married in 1894, his first wife having died three years previously, the Premier seeks relaxation in golf. He has two daughters—the elder of whom, Miss Violet Asquith, has just become engaged to Mr. Maurice Bonham-Carter.

Mr. Asquith's private secretary—and five sons, four of whom are serving their country in the great war.

is feeling the infirmities of years, and can only walk slowly with the aid of two sticks. But he is full of enthusiasm for the mission he has undertaken, which will add a new and glorious chapter to the history of the Sunbeam, the old-fashioned three-masted yacht in which he has sailed the seven seas, and which is known in almost every quarter of the globe.

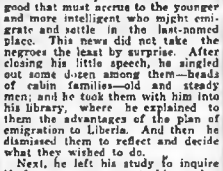
PLANS TO STOP WAR BY SWISS.

Proposal to Put German Royal Families in Front Trenches.

The London Chronicle's Zurich correspondent cables that a prize of 500 francs ($100) has been offered for the best proposal for arriving at terms of peace, by a Swiss newspaper. It has drawn from its readers a number of original suggestions. One is that all members of reigning German houses should be put into the front line in the trenches, accompanied by all deputies of the Prussian Diet, directors of Krupp's, and members of the Pan-Germanist Association.

In the trenches on the other side should be put the members of the French Cameiots du Roi and editors of French nationalist papers. The originator of this suggestion declares that the first volley fired, after all these gentlemen had been placed in position, would insure speedy and satisfactory peace.

A French-speaking Swiss woman proposed that Swiss wives and mothers should band themselves together, under their Federal flag, and call to their side women from all the belligerent countries. The whole army then would march along the front, from the Vosges to Arras, and would interview the generals of the three great armies, demanding the restoration of husbands and sons now serving in the ranks.



Forty-five competitors favor the formation of an army of neutrals, which shall force the combatants to listen to reason.

To overcome the diffidence of each belligerent to make the first proposal it is suggested by one competitor that each belligerent should submit proposals in a sealed envelope. When all have submitted their proposals, the envelopes will be opened simultaneously.

To prevent the outbreak of a similar war in the future one competitor recommends total prohibition of sports, alcohol, betting and gambling, and all other excitements tending to encourage a bellicose state of mind.

Another competitor recommends that all Governments should send all their subjects abroad at public expense in order that they may broaden their minds by travel among foreign peoples.

PEEPS AT PEOPLE.

Is thirteen an unlucky number? The Germans in South-West Africa must think so, for there are thirteen letters in General L. Botha.

The Chief Rabbi, Dr. Hertz, who has been visiting the Front, is not so well known as his predecessor, the late Dr. Adler, but this disadvantage will disappear in time. He has a horror of being interviewed, which is why his name is so rarely seen in the newspapers.

The actress who possibly feels the deepest interest in the Australian troops is Miss Marie Lohr, Australian-born herself. Her birthplace was Sydney, and her first stage appearance was made there. Her father used to be treasurer of the Opera House, Melbourne.

Very amusing for the dryness of his remarks in the House, Mr. Harry Watt, the broad-shouldered M.P. for the Colleges Division of Glasgow, is the most sartorially resplendent figure in Parliament to-day, with his white Ascot hat, his white spats, and his huge satin cravat.

Mr. John Buchan, whose fine story of the second battle of Ypres in "The Times" has added largely to his reputation as a writer on the war, achieved the difficult task of inducing Sir Edward Grey and Mr. A. J. Balfour to preside at his lectures on the conflict on separate occasions.

The reason why Mr. Wm. R. Pringle, the very active Scottish M.P., opposed the National Register Bill, is that he believed all the information could have been got from the records of the Insurance Commissioners, and he wanted to save the extra expense. His views may be wrong, but no one doubts his courage.

A statesman whose name you never hear mentioned is Lord Morley, who went out of the Cabinet when we declared war against Germany. It is his wish during the war, it is understood, to be forgotten. If Mr. John Burns did not attend the House of Commons so regularly, he would, it is to be presumed, suffer the same fate, too.

King Nicholas, the homely monarch of Montenegro, the war chiefs of which received decorations at our hands, has a pleasant wit. To a visitor he once remarked: "When you speak of the few exports of my country, don't forget my daughters"—an allusion to the brilliant marriages they have formed. One daughter, for instance, is married to the King of Servia.

Black is now the habitual wear of Queen Alexandra, and it becomes her well. Her Majesty's energy is remarkable. One day she is found driving through tae streets of London to thank her rose-sellers; another day she is the central figure at a function connected with war aeroplanes, everywhere charming all hearts with her winning smile, which surely must be the secret of her eternal youth.

Mr. Lucien Wolf, who has been revealing the clumsy attempts of the notorious Count Bernstorff, the German Ambassador in the United States, to influence newspaper opinion in London, is known for his researches into the history of the Rothschild family, and he has added considerably to our knowledge of how the bankers brought the first news of the Battle of Waterloo to this country.

FAMILY FOOD

Crisp, Toothsome, and Requires No Cooking.

A little boy asked his mother to write an account of how Grape-Nuts food had helped their family.

She says Grape-Nuts was first brought to her attention where she visited.

"While I was there I used the food regularly. I gained weight and felt so well that when I returned home I began using Grape-Nuts in the family regularly.

"My little 18-months-old baby shortly after being weaned was very ill while teething. She was sick nine weeks, and we tried everything. She became so emaciated that it was painful to handle her, and we thought we were going to lose her. One day a happy thought urged me to try Grape-Nuts soaked in a little warm milk.

"Well, it worked like a charm, and she began taking it regularly, and improvement set in at once. She grew well and round and fat as fast as possible on Grape-Nuts.

"Some time ago several of the family were stricken with La Grippe at the same time, and during the worst stages they could not relish anything in the shape of food but Grape-Nuts and oranges, everything else was nauseating.

"We all appreciate what your famous food has done for our family."

LIFT UP THE OLD FLAG.

All hail, Britannia, unconquered for ever,
Thou blest rock of ages enduring for aye;
With loyal devotion that time shall not sever
We'll defend thee like men or fall in the fray.
Then forward and lead the van,
Canadians every man,
Stand proudly to arms with thy face to the foe,
From forest and rolling plain
With pride we will shout again,
For the land of the Maple, yo-ho, lads, yo-ho.

The flag of Britannia, Canadians, remember
Undimmed yet to glory still waves on the breeze,
The boast of the hero that will never surrender
Nor dishonor her name on land or on seas.
We're no cowards to tremble
When the Northmen assemble
O'er the wild field of battle triumphant to go;
As gaily we march along
Every man join the happy song,
For the land of the Maple, yo-ho, lads, yo-ho.

That old British Flag, let us gather round it,
Moor its staff on the rock, fling its folds to the sky.
'Tis the flag of our fathers; in glory we found it.
In glory we'll leave it, or defending we'll die.
Its fame who won't cherish
Let his name ever perish,
To the depths of derision the coward shall go;
While we sing loud the happy strain
Let the hills and rocks ring again.
For the land of the Maple, yo-ho, lads, yo-ho.

Proud ensign of Canada, long may it wave
Over country and King, for our faith and our laws,
As a shield to the weak and a hope to the brave,
Where right is our watchword and honor our cause.
For freedom a thousand years
It has braved, amid hopes and fears,
The arts of the traitor and wiles of the foe
Come, then, let us shout again
As loyal and noble men,
For the land of the Maple, yo-ho, lads, yo-ho.

ADVANCE WINTER PREPARATIONS.

By A. P. Marshall, Niagara Falls, Canada.

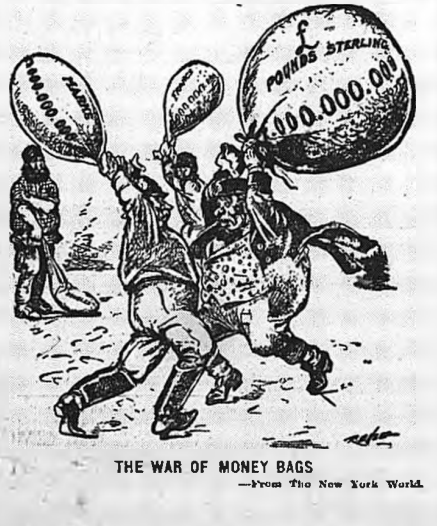
Many blighted hopes for heavy winter results with poultry can be directly traceable to the neglect to furnish or correct early enough things that, while they do not in any way cause trouble, yet when severe conditions begin to appear they catch the flock unprotected and susceptible to disease and unable to withstand the first severe changes when they come.

Birds, therefore, should be early housed in such a way as to prevent any possibilities of contracting disease. All windows should be in place, any cracks to cause drafts should be filled up, and everything that will add to the necessary winter comfort of the birds should be provided, so that when winter really comes along they should be used to the conditions they are to have. If any changes are necessary in the coops, the sooner they are arranged for the better. Hens get accustomed to certain things, and it always bothers them to have any changes made. If a decision can be reached as to the exact arrangement and equipment desired, it is best to have it carried out as early as possible, and get the birds accustomed to all their surroundings, so that they can get well started to business before the worst of the winter begins. If well started, they can be expected to do their best right through the winter.

Now is the time to decide whether a new floor will be put in, whether dirt or sand will be obtained to supply new material for the floor, or what change will be made in the nests, hopper, roosts, or other inside surroundings. Generally if some careful thought is given the matter in advance, better arrangements will be the result, than if everything is left to the last minute and provided for only when need becomes absolutely imperative.

There are many other ways that provision can be made for the coming winter that will not only prove a saving, but often things can be provided which otherwise might not be readily procurable when one might be willing to do almost anything to secure them. Grain as it is being harvested, green food of a very great variety, and many little farm products that are practically a waste to the farmer can be procured for a song, and the saving and advantage to the birds be such as to bring bigger results than can be secured any other way.

What must not be forgotten is the culling of the flock to as nearly what are to occupy the coops, and the arrangement of the pens, so that no change will be necessary among the birds. Nothing seems to upset a flock more than the continual changing of the birds, and if it is possible to have the layers and breeders settled well before winter sets in, the increased results will repay for any extra effort or consideration given at this time.



The best birds for breeding should be selected, and any special attention given them now will show later in the chicks. No better time can be found to determine the probable breeding value of the birds than when they are growing, and especially when they begin to reach maturity. By selecting those that keep coming right through, growing vigorously, the whole season through, the best in vitality of the season's production will be used and the best results can be expected from them as breeders.

The males should be selected as early as possible and given every consideration that will make them mature into vigorous, hearty birds that command all that they preside over. To lose his spirit usually makes a male less valuable as a breeder, and continuous abuse at the hands of another will completely break the spirit of an otherwise good bird. No risk should be run of ruining a particularly good specimen in this way, especially if he is in the least timid, but on the other hand, particular pains should be taken to encourage him to feel that he is cock-of-the-walk, and his development will be so much better, that his service will be very much more than was otherwise possible.

The foregoing are only a very few ideas that present themselves, and merely suggest that it is well about this time to try and think ahead, and placing ourselves in the position of the winter season, think out all the possible requirements that will be possible to arrange for now, and doing so, save money, and have things that it will be impossible to readily supply without making the cost prohibitive.

Tea Costs More Money.

In a recent issue of the London (Eng.) "Standard" it was stated: "That prices of tea have risen and are now at their highest point for thirty-six years." This reflects the greatly increased cost of tea at the gardens whence the world's supply originates. Tea is undoubtedly costing more throughout the world.

RISKS WITH CHEAP SEED CORN.

Bad germination in seed corn, combined with prolonged cold weather at time of planting, has been the cause of much disappointment this season to ensilage growers. The seed corn growers of south-western Ontario were almost equally disappointed through being unable to find a market for their thoroughly-dried corn of strong vitality. Many samples were taken by seed inspectors, and the investigations made indicate clearly that at least 75 per cent. of the cause for a poor stand can be traced to the ensilage growers buying low-priced seed.

Unfortunately, high-priced seed is not always a guarantee of high quality, but low-priced seed is possible only with corn that has no special care in curing for seed. The farmer who gets $1.50 per bus. of 70 lbs. on the car for corn taken out of his corn crib in the spring has more profit than the farmer who receives $2.50 a bus. of 70 lbs. on the car for corn that has been kiln-dried or rack-dried in special corn-drying buildings.

If harvested in dry weather and kept in narrow cribs through the winter, the cheap corn may give a fairly satisfactory stand of plants with thick seeding and good soil and weather conditions. But too many farmers have learned to their sorrow the very serious risk they take in using corn wintered in this way. It is always advisable for growers to procure seed corn on the car, as during moist weather shelled corn in transportation or storage will absorb moisture and mold within a very few days, thus destroying its vitality.—Seed Branch, Ottawa.

NO REFUND OF WAR TAX.

A matter of importance to the public and the railways has been settled by the Government. A nice point has been raised as to the possibility of refund of the war tax in case a person should change his or her mind in regard to the contemplated trip by train or boat. If the railways insisted upon the tax in such cases of changed intention, it was altogether likely that the public would set them down as extortioners.

Accordingly the railways submitted the questions to the Government—what should be done in case unused tickets presented for refund to agent before the train starts; to agent or general office after train departs; the same or some following day; in the case of passenger tickets; in the case of sleeping car tickets; in the case of parlor car tickets; in the case of steamship tickets. The answer which the railways received was as follows:

There can be no refund of the tax under any circumstances. Once the ticket is sold and the tax collected, it is as though it were in the Dominion coffers and nothing but an act of Parliament can get it out again. It was explained by the Dominion authorities that in order to prevent the confusion that would arise in applying literally the millions of tax stamps that would have been required on railway tickets and the consequent difficulties which would have ensued owing to delay in affixing and cancellation of stamps, the present method had been adopted, and, that as none of the public could have reasonably expected a refund on a stamp that had been affixed and cancelled, if ticket were refunded upon, so also no refund may be expected wherever a tax had been collected, and the ticket unused and refunded upon. In other words, the act of purchase of the ticket in accordance with the Tax Act is a completed transaction so far as the collection of the tax is concerned, and under no circumstances as the law now stands could it be refunded. To make a refund of the tax possible a special act would have to be passed by parliament.

NEWSPAPER AND OTHER IDEALS

At the meeting of the Canadian Press Association in Toronto last month a good deal was said about the ideals which ought to actuate newspapers. Broadly speaking, the ideal is service to the community and to humanity. But of this ideal newspapers have no monopoly, observes the Toronto Star. No profession, occupation, trade or calling has any right to exist except it serves the community and serves humanity.

As Ruskin practically said, the soldier was honored because he was prepared to die rather than neglect his duty. Other callings would be equally honored when it was declared, and the declaration was acted upon, that their members would die rather than do bad work. Ruskin defined the duty of the members of five professions toward the country. The soldier's duty is to teach it. The physician's duty is to keep it in health. The lawyer's is to enforce justice in it, the merchant's is to provide for it. Each duty involved "a due occasion of death." As the soldier must die rather than leave his post in battle, so the lawyer must die rather than countenance injustice.

With the merchant may be classed the farmer, the manufacturer, and the workman, as the providers of the nation, says the Star. As we discuss the duty of manufacturers of war supplies and their workmen, we see the folly of what has been written in contempt of materialism and utilitarianism. There is nothing degrading in making clothing for soldiers. It is an honorable thing to make good clothing, and a dishonorable thing to make bad clothing.

There are no such things as honorable callings and dishonorable callings. The whole question is between good work and bad work.

The newspaper may be classed under any head or class, but the ideal is always the same, because it applies to all classes. The idea is simply good honest work and service for the community and for humanity. It is not necessary that the journalist should claim for himself any higher ideal than that of a builder of a house. The builder of a house ought to be thinking, not only of his wages, but of the home, which is the soul of the house. Very likely, if you said that to a bricklayer or a carpenter, he would be puzzled. But he may be doing that which he is too shy or modest to put into words. If he is a good workman, he may say, "Well, I try to make a good job." He does not talk of ideals or of service. He does not say that he is thinking of the comfort and welfare of the family for whom he is building a house. But all that is implied in his saying that he is trying to make a good job, to be a workman that needs not to be ashamed.

—The supplying of power for lighting and radial railway purposes by the Hydro-Electric Commission is one of the greatest public utility schemes on this continent, if not the greatest. Many cities and towns are getting cheaper and more efficient lighting services since they accepted agreements with the Commission. The system has been so widely extended that the original supply of 100,000 horsepower from Niagara Falls is about exhausted, and it is now proposed to develop 250,000 horsepower from the new Welland Canal and the Niagara river. Other power plants at Wardell's Falls and Eugenia are also operated by the Commission. There are as yet no Hydro-Electric lines in Bruce Co., but they are coming nearer our borders, and will soon touch the county line, as Chesley is likely to pass a by-law to provide for the cost of plant for distribution of power to be supplied by the Hydro-Electric from Eugenia. The by-law is to authorize the borrowing of $22,500 on debentures, $9,000 of this sum being for the purchase of portions of the local plant from Mr. M. A. Halliday, and $13,250 for new plant and equipment. Other towns in Bruce including Paisley, will likely soon be offered the opportunity of taking the service.

That we instruct the executive of the provincial Board to make their best effort at the coming session of the Provincial Legislature, to have the sludge laws altered, so as to be more fair to steam threshermen who own and operate traction engines also to combat any legislation that may be brought forward regarding boiler inspection and licenses detrimental to steam threshers interests.

With Hospital Corps in Egypt

Mr Robt Tucker, who is with the Queen's University Hospital Corps, has written from Cairo, Egypt, to his mother here. He tells of a visit to Alexandria, en route to their field of duty, just at the eastern New Year's celebration time, when the city was en fete. The hospital is located at Cairo, and the wounded from the Dardenelles are sent there for treatment and care. The heat and the pestiferous bugs are among the unbearable things in the land of the Pharaohs.

It Strikes Me This Way

Really, now, it doesn't take much argument to convince me that the Paisley Fair is worth while. It's a home institution—for the direct benefit of this part of the country—gives me the chance to see what my neighbors and friends are accomplishing—if their methods are better than mine, to learn how its done—to observe the new ideas and if they apply directly to me—how the other fellow succeeded where I failed—to get a line on the labor-saving, money-making, short-cuts — all these and more, too. Me for the Paisley Fair—every time—Sept. 23th and 24th.

Shooting Out of Season

Although the season for shooting hare doesn't open until Oct. 15th, yet certain local sinarods are said to be already bagging considerable of this game. Game Inspector White, who has been appointed overseer of fishery and game for this district, is on the lookout for these lawbreakers, and if any are caught returning from the hunt with the goods on them both their guns and game will be taken and confiscated as well as a substantial fine levied for the infraction of the law. It is no pet secret that a large part of the hunting is done in the neighboring woods and swamps on Sunday, and as this is an illegal performance both in and out of season, the perpetrators, if caught are likely to find that the way of the transgressor is hard. As infractions of the game laws can be punished six months after the offence, these illegal hunters can never tell when their past exploits will be sprung on them and the statutes thumbed on their behalf.—Herald and Times.

Lived 94 Years

The remains of the late William Ross, a former resident of Bruce Tp., were brought here from Vinemount on Saturday, and buried in Lunat cemetery. The deceased was a brother of Mr Finlay Ross of Loch Bruce, and has been living with his nephew Mr A W Ross at Vinemount, who accompanied the remains on their last earthly journey. The deceased had never married, and had lived to see nine years of the century mark. Our Gresham correspondent writes that the late Mr Ross was well and favorably known in Bruce Tp., having been one of the advanced farmers of that township. He was born in Inverness-shire, Scotland, 94 years ago, and came to Canada with his parents and family. In the early fifties of last century they settled on lot 28, con 9, Bruce. For many years he lived with his brother, the late John Ross, but latterly at Vinemount, as stated above. Great credit is due Mr and Mrs Alex W Ross for the affectionate care they willingly bestowed upon their uncle in his declining years.

$4,000 per Month from Bruce

The Patriotic Fund will be fully equal to all demands made upon it if every county in the Dominion is ready to contribute at the same rate as Bruce County. At a special meeting of the County Council on Thursday last it was unanimously decided to grant $4,000 per month for patriotic purposes so long as the war lasts. This is an increase of 300 per cent. over the grant made in December last. Deputations from many sections of the county were present in support of the grant, while other municipalities had authorized their representatives in the council to do likewise. This is truly rising to the emergency, and although it may mean a heavy burden to assume, yet when compared to the action of the men who voluntarily offer their services and their lives in fighting our battles for continued liberty, the monetary sacrifice of Bruce Co. ratepayers is like getting off scot-free. Reeve John Joint of Lucknow is setting an example as an individual contributor. He made the statement at county council that he has decided to give voluntarily $1000 per year to the Canadian Patriotic Fund while the war lasts.

The Fall Fair

The horses on the farm that work so hard from year to year, can easy tell the way they're fed the fall fair's drawin' near. The blastin' sheep, likewise the digs, the chickens and the ducks, can tell they're gettin' tapered off to win the easy bucks. The turnip of the roland type, the mangel like a post, are gettin' cheesy in a way to make a farmer boast. And then the big red apples, too, have shooed the worms and bugs, and reckon to be carted off to haunted sacks and mugs. The pillow slip, the counter rug, the mat of gorges hue, are gettin' so uneasy now they scarce know what to do. The mottoes worked in green and gold with words and phrases sweet, are planning to take in the show, their ancient friends to meet. They've shed the moth balls weeks ago and hung out on the line, to give out the impression that they're new alnce '99. The old gray mare is waitin' now to get her final rub, and the pumpkin reckons that they'll grow far bigger than a tub. The license for the peanut stand, and for the ginger ale, it will be let out in a day or so for this enormous biz. It is a goodly thing to do to enter up your stuff, and show, by heck, you're farmin' brain sin't just a case of bluff. To grow the biggest onion and the finest pack of peas, it straightens up the spinal joints and bolsters up the knees. To win in lemon pies and tarts, and buns and layer cake, it makes the hands blow bigger and the heart to palpitate. All hail the fair and its ways, let all the praise extol, of those who know the monster squash four men can scarcely roll.—Ark, in Guelph Mercury.

Equalization Appeal

The reeve and council of the Tp. of Albermarle are apparently determined to prosecute their appeal against the equalization of that township for county purposes. At the special meeting of the County Council on Thursday a vote was passed offering Albermarle a reduction of 25 per cent. in the equalization, but Reeve Whicher declined to accept this compromise, and the Co. Clerk was instructed to fight the appeal. On Sept. 3rd the appeal was argued before Judge Klein at Walkerton. The Herald and Times says that Mr D A Malcomson, for the County of Bruce, contended that the report of the valuators, as adopted by the County Council, was absolute and could not be varied by the County Council in any year it was in existence. Mr David Robertson, K.C., who appeared for Albermarle, argued that if circumstances warranted it, this report could be varied in any year by the County Council in the case of any municipality, and the Judge held that this latter contention was correct and decided in favor of Albermarle. He appointed Sept. 1st to take evidence to set a final reduction, if such should be made. Albermarle claims that the Good Friday's wind storm cleaned up practically all the standing timber left and as the place is mostly rock, that the land is valueless hence the appeal. Mr Malcomson also contended that the business and income assessment should be taken into consideration in equalizing the assessment for county purposes. These have not been included since the adverse decision of Judge Barrett some four years ago. No person was present, we understand, on behalf of the towns and villages, which were the municipalities interested, and the Judge decided on Mr Malcomson's argument that these assessments should be taken into consideration.

Patriotic League

At the first annual meeting of the Paisley Women's Patriotic League reports as to the past year's work were given as follows: Bales containing 296 pairs socks, 30 flannel shirts, 37 surgical shirts, 60 pairs, 41 towels, 366 bandkerchiefs, 4 sheets, 65 feather pillows, 156 pillow cases, 10 mufflers, 105 pairs wristlets, 9 Balaclava caps, 4 pairs bed socks, 7 knee caps, 6 washcloths—a total of 1123 articles, and 1400 yds of bandages, were sent to the Red Cross Society. Sweater coats and socks were given recruits of 2nd C B F: socks, wristlets, mufflers and mending kits to recruits of 34th C B F; wristlets and socks to recruits from Bruce; socks and home-made candy to 9 recruits for 34th Batt. Three bales of clothing and $226 75 were forwarded to Belgian Relief. The treasurer's statement is now in the hands of the auditors, Messrs H B Putnam and W R Barnett, and will be published next week. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—Miss Jean Miller
Vice-Pres—Mrs R H Grant
Sec-Treas—Mrs D McArthur
Supply Committee — Mrs Cruickshank, Mrs N McMahon, Miss Dewar, Miss McCallum
Refreshment Committee—Misses Carter, Johnston, Fisher and McGregor

Any of the following articles may be sent to Putnam's hall on that date: Socks, 10½ to 11 inches, pillow slips 22 x 36, sheets 60 x 90, white towels 36 x 18. Shirts and socks are also needed, and preserved fruit of all kinds. The Women's Patriotic League are most grateful to all the faithful workers, also to Mr Putnam for the use of his hall, to Mr McKenzie for publishing all notices free of charge, and to Mr Trelford for carrying parcels to the station. The Boy Scouts also are heartily thanked for their good work in collecting papers.

FROM TRAINING CAMP TO TRENCHES

Sandling, Aug. 29th, 1915

Mr. Wallace Megraw,
Paisley, Ont.

DEAR FRIEND—I am pleased to inform you that I am still in the land of the living but in the same old camp yet. However, we got rather good news from the Colonel the other day—he told us we had received our last pay in England and that we were leaving for France somewhere around the 6th of September, and that we would pass a division. The boys are taking hold of the work with a will now. We were out for four days last week on manoeuvres. The boys enjoyed it very much as we had excellent weather for sleeping out. I haven't heard from Tom since he went to the front about three weeks ago, but heard that some of their bunch got cut up. I saw Andy Culham and Harry Henry to-day. They came over with the second draft of the 34th Battalion and are stationed at Shorncliffe near here and they are looking fine.

When we were out on manoeuvre last week we camped one night in a place called Hatch Park about two miles from Ashford, an estate recently purchased by Lord Kitchener. It is a swell place with a fine old Manor house, the estate is very large. I did not hear the number of acres in it, but it is wooded in places with grand old oak trees, with a little lake in the centre dotted with beautiful white swan. Here and there we could see large herds of deer roving around quite tamely. One ran through our lines which awoke quite a number of our boys with a start by jumping over their beds, but without touching a single blanket. Of course he had passed ever before any of the sleepers could get to a sitting position and rub their eyes open. Another night we had a mule do the same stunt, but the boys gave him a hot reception. He wasn't nearly so nimble as the deer, and some of the lads had a close shave. If he hadn't been so heavy I believe they would have put him up in the blanket. We term that blanket court martial. It is often applied when a room-mate over-steps the line and becomes troublesome. We moved from Hatch Park to a large field about half a mile from Ashford but weren't allowed to go down into the city at night. However the people from the city came to our camp and joined in our open-air concerts around large camp fires made of oil barrels, etc., which lit up the whole camp. Oh! we had a large time. The only thing we didn't really enjoy was the night manoeuvres over strange country, when we could hardly hold our eyes open for the want of sleep.

All the boys from Paisley are in shipshape. They have been transferred from the Base Co. to different Co's in this Battalion. Everything is being put into shape in a way that looks like business. We have even had our respirators issued to us. I think by the time you get this we will be in the trenches, so good-bye, old chap; best wishes to all.

Yours sincerely,

English View of the Canadians

(The Daily Express, London)

'Vaas—sure.'

If you cross the South Downs in Kent at the present time, and ask the first soldier you meet if you are in the neighborhood of the Canadian camps, you will receive the reply, 'Vaas—sure,' in the accent which seems to English ears to hail direct from 'Chicawgo' but is pure Canadian.

There are many thousands of Canadians camped on the Kentish Downs. A hundred years ago the Kentish yeomen trained there to meet Napoleon's threatened invasion. Eight hundred years ago, along the same line of hills, but a little further west, the Saxons gathered to meet the Norman invaders, and two thousand years ago the Britons tramped along these hilltops to watch the ships of the incoming Romans. To-day Canada's second army has pitched its huts on the Downs, and if you ask the Canadian soldier whether he likes the spot he replies emphatically, 'Vaas—sure.' If he did not, he would be hard to please.

Canada has stamped her hall-mark on every one of these thousands of her sons—the Sam Hughes look. Whether from the east, or the west, or the far west, or the north—and they come from every corner of Canada—the Sam Hughes look is over them all. You see it in the eyes, whose glance is as straight as that of a machine gun, and in the mouth which is as firm as a steel plate, and in the poise of the head, which is as steady as the Rocky Mountains. There is an air of assurance and confidence in the walk as if each man felt quite sure that the earth was made for Canadians; and a super-American aspect of independence, which is all part of the Sam Hughes look.

There are not merely battalions, but brigades of these tall, broad shouldered deep-chested Canadians on the Kentish Downs. Their faces are tanned and they are as fit as men can be.

No one in England has heard much about them—the Press Bureau properly caused us to ignore their arrival—but for three months they have been at home on the Kentish Downs, and in two or three of the little straggling towns along the sea their maple leaf is more familiar than the badge of the Kentish battalions. All the girls have several Canadian admirers each—sure.

But for all the intense Canadianism of these sons of the Maple Leaf, there is no doubting the breed from which they have sprung. They look, indeed, more Anglo-Saxon than the English. They are more like our forefathers than we are ourselves.

Take your stand on some edge of the Downs a few miles from the camps, and watch a brigade of the Canadians come over the hillside. They are marching as to war, battalion after battalion, each with its mule train of ammunition, its supply waggons, its ambulances, and a line of cooking stoves on wheels, bubbling as they go with the smoke trailing from their chimneys. After them comes the guard and the long line winds down the steep lane to the sea level, and crawls away across the miles of marshland towards the bivouac for the night. It is a ready-for-war brigade, made and ball-marked in Canada. But, as you stand near the little old church, where the dead of the parish have been buried during a thousand years, and as you watch these roving fighters swing by, the breasts of many of them bare to the sun and the breeze, and their grey-blue eyes bright with the joy of living, you begin to forget that they are all from Ontario and they are men who call themselves by that new name of Canadians. You see in them the old Anglo-Saxon fighters who conquered Britain and made England.

They bivouac on the chilly marshes for the night, sleeping on their waterproof sheets, and at half-past five in the morning are astir again, for they are to fight the battle of Hastings anew, as invaders, with another brigade as the defending enemy. The defenders—men from Quebec, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and New Brunswick (a battalion of French-Canadians among them)—have bivouacked on the hillside, and at day-break line the trenches prepared for the defence.

The fight occupies most of the day, and ends when the invaders, bridging a canal turn the defenders' flank and gain the country at their rear. Like all true soldiers, when the fighting does not immediately concern them, some of the defenders snore peacefully in the shade at noonday under the trees awaiting the signal for action. Here and there one of them gazes over the countryside, with eyes for the beauty of the view.

The real excitement of the day is that of the scouts, who crawl round cornfields, lie in wet ditches, and escape capture by miracles. A scout comes in galloping, pulls up beside the officer who sent him out and reports. He wastes no time in saluting, but just shakes his head and says: 'Nothin doin.' There is no excess of ceremony, but the Canadian officers and men understand and respect each other's worth.

It is a fine sight to see these Canadian brigades march past on the Downs, for there are no regiments in the British army which march better—and that is saying a great deal. You can see that every man of them is proud that he is a Canadian and means to make everybody proud of Canada.

'I think the real reason why that king chained Bibles to the churches,' a Kentish sexton said, 'was that he knew the Canadians would be coming.'

'Well,' replied a Canadian soldier, 'I guess I'd like the chain, too.'

Many of them will either take living souvenirs back to Canada or they will come and settle in England.

ONLY SIXTEEN, GIRL VERY SICK

Tells How She Was Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

New Orleans, La.—"I take pleasure in writing these lines to express my gratitude to you. I am only 16 years old and work in a tobacco factory. I have been a very sick girl but I have improved wonderfully since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am now looking fine and feeling a thousand times better."—Miss AMELIA JAQUILLARD, 2061 Tchoupitoulas St., New Orleans, La.

St. Clair, Pa.—"My mother was alarmed because I was troubled with suppression and had pains in my back and side, and severe headaches. I had pimples on my face, my complexion was sallow, my sleep was disturbed, I had nervous spells, was very tired and had no ambition. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has worked like a charm in my case and has regulated me. It worked in a similar among hundreds of girls and have recommended your medicine to many of them."—Miss ESTELLA MAGUIRE, 110 Tawing St., St. Clair, Pa.

There is nothing that teaches more than experience. Therefore, such letters from girls who have suffered and were restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be a lesson to others. The same remedy is within reach of all.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Ralph Connor on Church of England

Rev C W Gordon (Ralph Connor) pastor of one of the largest Presbyterian churches in Winnipeg, has been preaching a series of sermons on "The Creeds of Christendom." His first subject was "The Treasures and Inheritance of the Anglican Church." In the course of an eloquent address, as reported by the Winnipeg Free Press, Mr Gordon stated that of all the churches the Church of England was easily the oldest. He said the Church of England had existed from the beginning of the Christian era, and is older than the state in which it exists, and for nearly 1,800 years has shown a steady growth. He reiterated the historic fact that the bishops of the church held their office by the laying on of hands in an unbroken succession from the apostles, who received their commission from Jesus Christ. The preacher remarked that it was a popular idea that this church is an outgrowth of the Church of Rome. "This is not so," said Mr Gordon. "The church has been for a period under the influence of Rome but had always been composed of men who fought against papal authority." He said all nonconformity sprang from the Church of England, while the finest hymns and most inspiring music in the world came from the members of this communion. The greatest scholarship was seen here; to this church, said the preacher, we owe the Bible as well as the Prayer Book which was a work worthy of being placed on a par with the Bible. He spoke of the simple faith of the members, and of the beautiful places of worship, the beautiful prayers, the beautiful vestments and service and hymns, remarking in passing that the Anglican held a marvellous emphasis on prayer, and that the non-conformists may well sigh for the atmosphere of a Prayer Book when they hear their extemporaneous prayers jumbled and poorly phrased. In recapitulating he emphasized the beauty and dignity of the service of the Anglican Church, stating that in the nonconforming churches much depends on the minister in the pulpit, but in the Anglican Church the people take a large part, and all in all present the world with the truly beautiful Christ.

AN INVESTMENT

WHETHER your painting is an investment or an expense depends on what paint you buy. Don't buy paint that has to be prepared by hand. In that case you pay extra for painter's time in mixing. Don't buy cheap paints, even though ready mixed. You get just what you pay for—an inferior paint and inferior results.

Good Things Made of Peaches.

Peach Croutons.—Cut slices of bread about a third of an inch thick and cut into circles about three inches in diameter. Brown them slowly until they are dried and golden. Cut ripe peaches into halves, remove stones and skins and stew them with a little water and sugar until the peaches are tender. Remove them and boil down the syrup until it is thick. When the peaches are cold, put each half with the cup side up on a round of bread and fill the stone hole with lemon jelly. Pour the thick syrup over the peach and add a little bit of whipped cream.

Peach Trifle.—Cut stale sponge cake into oblong pieces and with them line a dessert dish. Moisten with a little sherry. Stale lady fingers would answer quite as well as the oblongs of sponge cake. Pare ripe peaches and slice them and cover with sugar. Let them stand before serving. Then pile them on the sponge cake and serve with whipped cream.

Peach Shortcake.—Sift together a pint of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a saltspoonful of salt. Work a piece of butter the size of an egg into the flour, with iced cold milk enough to make a soft dough. Cut into two pieces and roll each one thin. Put one piece in a round layer-cake tin, spread thickly with soft butter and put the other round of dough on it. Bake brown and separate the two rounds. In the meantime, slice peaches and cover them with sugar. Spread a layer of peaches on one layer of biscuit, cover with the other layer and put the rest of the peaches on the top layer.

Peach Dumplings.—Cut five-inch squares of pie crust and in the centre of each put sliced peaches, sweetened. Fold over one corner to the opposite corner, to make a triangle. Press the edges together, make a few pricks in the top with a fork, for escaping steam, and bake brown. These are delicious and much liked by children, if they are allowed to eat pastry.

Peach and Oranges.—For a tempting dessert, slice together peaches and oranges. Sweeten slightly and serve very cold.

Peaches and Rice.—Arrange a mound of boiled rice in the middle of a dish. Have ready on the ice some sliced, sweetened peaches. Put the peaches around the rice and pour juice, formed with sugar, over the mound and rice.

Candied Peaches. — Weigh the peaches, and to each pound allow three quarters of a pound of sugar. Cut each peach into about six pieces. Add just enough water to moisten the sugar and melt it over the fire. Boil each piece of peach in it until it is tender, but not until it breaks easily. Remove from the thick syrup, drain and roll in granulated sugar. Dry, dip in syrup again and then in sugar and repeat until the peach is thoroughly dried. Pack in covered glass jars.

Peach Fritters.—Make a fritter batter and add to it sliced peaches, sweet and ripe and firm. Cook in deep fat and sprinkle with powdered sugar before serving.

Peach Cobbler.—Fill a baking dish with sliced peaches. Add two or three kernels from the pits to the peaches and sweeten and flavor with a little cinnamon. Cover with a layer of rich pie crust, rather thick but rich, and slash in two or three places for the steam to escape. Bake about 30 minutes.

Useful Hints.

A cloth moistened with alcohol is effective in cleaning piano keys.

Never keep goods in paper parcels; store everything in jars and tins.

To remove inks wash at once in cold water, followed by milk, and sprinkle with salt.

Overripe fruit is more dangerous to the health of children than fruit which is too green.

When you wish to cut citron in thin slices, place it in the oven and let it heat through.

A standard measuring cup should hold just half a pound of sugar or water, or butter packed solidly.

A most effective way to clean linoleum is to wash first with a little water and then polish by applying milk.

The outside rind of pineapple should be cut off and squeezed with a lemon squeezer and added to the sliced pineapple.

Knives can be cleaned in half the usual time if the knife board be thoroughly warmed in front of the fire before being used.

If there is a quantity of pie dough left over, put it into a bowl and stand it in the ice chest. It will be good to use again.

A good rule for the size of thread in making buttonholes is to have it 20 coarser than that used for making the garments.

Don't put down carpets without an underlay of some kind. They will wear out quickly if left in direct contact with the flooring.

A quick way to cool a sickroom is to wet a crib sheet with cologne, hang in a draught of air or shake the sheet slightly while wet.

If cream will not whip add the white of an egg. Let both become thoroughly chilled before whipping. Keep cold until ready to serve.

To clear a house of roaches equal quantities of sugar and pulverized borax is recommended. Spread where the insects congregate the most.

Spinach needs to be washed very thoroughly, if all the grit is to be removed. Put it through three waters at least and strip of all old leaves.

If you spill tea on a tablecloth, cover it with common salt and leave it on for a while. When the cloth is washed all stains will have disappeared.

Turpentine mixed with a little linseed oil is an excellent thing to use in taking finger marks off white paint. Put it on a soft cloth and wipe the paint.

Remnants of meat of all kinds may be utilized by being chopped together and stirred into an omelette of pancake batter, with a seasoning of nutmeg or chopped chives.

When making an omelet, first heat the pan very hot, put in some butter and then the omelet mixture; when it is brown on the under side, turn it over and set in the oven, to finish. By this method the omelet will not fall.

A PEACH OF AN ESSAY.

Only the Perfect Things Are Used as Metaphors.

Did you ever notice when we want to praise a thing with unusual emphasis we call it something else? For instance if we wish to praise a book or a picture we say "it is a gem." We do this because a gem is the most precious thing that we can possess—the only concrete example of "Infinite riches in little room." To be a gem a thing must have the finest natural qualities, enriched and perfected by art and when we say that a thing is a gem we mean that it is the perfection of its kind, a finished product about which no further or higher praise is possible, writes Peter McArthur.

But calling a thing a "gem" is only one metaphor. There are many others, but in all cases the word we use instead of what we mean denotes the existence of some quality in the thing described that is only reached in the thing we name in its stead. This suggests a method of determining the things in Nature and Art that are perfect, for only the perfect things are used in metaphors. Their perfections may vary but in every case a perfection is indicated.

Among our fruits there are two that are used as metaphors oftener than any other and by that fact we may judge of their surpassing quality. One is used in public life, the other in everyday life. In public life the man who secures a high position, a favor or a contract that will enrich him is said to have got "a plum." This suggests that he has got something that all men earnestly desire, something so packed full of richness and all goodness that it can only be described by calling it a plum—the fruit of which a celebrated horticulturist, E. P. Powell, says that "It contains more richness than any other fruit." It is rich in color, flavor and odor and as satisfying to the palate as it is to the eye. It is for this reason that it has gained its political significance as a metaphor. As the fruit most perfect and rich of its kind it suggests to the greedy politicians what they most desire and one of them who has been so fortunate as to secure a plum never wants anything else all his life but more plums. And the plums, when they are ripe, are entirely worthy of the high regard they receive from housewives as well as politicians.

Our metaphorical fruit is the peach. Just listen to some youth saying of a beautiful girl that "She is a peach" and even if you had never tasted a peach you would know that it must be sweet, beautiful and exquisite, just as we all know that it is. The peach is the one thing that we can use without offence as a metaphor for a beautiful girl and there is nothing more alluring and perfect that we can use as a metaphor for a peach. To say that a peach is a peach is the highest praise we can bestow on it unless we say that it is "a Canadian peach," for our "made in Canada" peaches are admitted to surpass all other peaches as much as they surpass all other fruits. Canadians have a right to be proud of them and to be fond of them and the housewife who puts up a plentiful supply of them is the one most certain to be regarded by her husband and her children as "A Peach.

Russia Has 700,000 Prisoners.

According to the latest official statements, there are now 700,000 war prisoners in Russia. They consist of 200,000 Germans, 400,000 Austrians, and 100,000 Turks. The Austrians and Turks are all occupied in agricultural work, but the Germans are confined in internments camps.

"What are you doing now, Bill?" "I'm collecting." "Collecting what?" "My thoughts." "Gosh! you were always lucky in striking an easy job."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON. SEPTEMBER 19.

Lesson XII.—Defeat Through Drunkenness (Temperance Lesson). 1 Kings 20. 1-21. G. T., Hos. 4. 11.

1. The Young Men of the Princes (Verses 10-15).

Verse 10. The dust of Samaria—Ben-hadad boastfully declared that he would bring so great an army into Samaria that if each man thereof took up but a handful of dust, the whole of Samaria would be carried away.

11. Let not him that girdeth on his armor—Ahab answers with a proverb according to the Oriental propensity. The king who has won a victory, and hence has taken off his armor, has the right to boast; not he who has a victory to win, and hence is just putting on his armor.

12. He was drinking—Ben-hadad was so full of confidence that he was giving a banquet to his allies, the neighboring kings (see verse 7), in honor of the victory he felt sure he would win.

In the pavilions — Similar to "booths" (Gen. 33. 17; Lev. 23. 42; Jonah 4. 5, etc.) or "tabernacles" (Lev. 23. 34). These "booths" were temporary structures erected of branches of trees, as at the Feast of Tabernacles.

Set—In the Hebrew the sentence stops with this word. The words yourselves in array are added. The margin reads, "Place the engines." As this same word set, used in Ezek. 4. 2, is followed by the noun "battering-rams," it is supposed that the command given by Ben-hadad to the soldiers was to set or place the battering rams over against the gates of the city. The Septuagint version reads: "Build a stockade, and they set a stockade against the city."

13. A prophet came—When Elijah complained that he alone of all the prophets was left, he did not mean that all the prophets except himself had been killed. He meant that through fear of death they had stopped prophesying. Many an unknown prophet there was who, like Eldad or Medad, came to prominence at the opportune moment.

14. The young men of the princes of the provinces—The picked young men of the princes, who would be marked as valorous and discreet.

Who shall begin the battle?—That is, Who shall strike first? Ahab might have remained in the fortified city and for a long time warded off the besiegers. To rush out into the open, however, and engage the unsuspecting attackers, was more promising of success.

II. The Drunken Ben-hadad (Verses 16-21).

16. And they went out at noon—Men engaged in drunken revelry are in no condition to meet the foe. (Compare Dan. 5. 1-4).

17. Ben-hadad sent out—Even in his drunken stupor he is aware that something unusual has happened.

18. Take them alive—Whether they had come for peace or for war they were to be captured. The more he was dispossessed of his mind the less he was in control of his words.

19. The army which followed them—That is, the two hundred and thirty-two young men who went out to begin the battle were followed by the seven thousand soldiers, who came upon the scene to increase the confusion of the unexpected attack.

20. They slew every one his man—It was comparatively easy for these sober young men to acquit themselves well in the fight.

THE MARCONI INSTRUMENT.

Wireless System Saves 500,000 Lives in a Year.

Fresh evidence of the value of the wireless as a saver of lives has been found during the disasters and threats of disasters following in the wake of the European war.

Repeatedly the Atlantic Ocean has been combed by wireless in the sending of warnings to threatened passenger ships. Although no figures are at hand, a wireless operator just has estimated that not fewer than 500,000 lives that would have been lost before the invention of the Marconi instrument have been saved by it since the beginning of the present war.

The most dramatic of the war incidents having to do with wireless operation followed the attack on J. P. Morgan by Erich Muenter. A letter written by Muenter to his wife induced the suspicion that he had planned to destroy ships. One paragraph read as follows:

"A steamer leaving New York for Liverpool should sink, God willing, on Tuesday. It is the Philadelphia or the Saxony (Saxonia), but I am not sure, as these left on the 2nd or 3rd."

Immediately after this revelation had been communicated to officials in Washington a warning was flashed by wireless. The Minnehaha was only a few days out of New York harbor, bound for London, when the message was received. Captain Claret, the commander of the vessel, ordered the small boats swung out so that they could be ready for use in the event that the explosion occurred. The ship's fire hose was also prepared for an emergency and a search of the cargo was begun. The search was still under way late in the afternoon, the explosion occurring while the members of the crew were trying to make sure that there were no bombs aboard.

The explosion shot off a hatch cover, carrying two sailors into the air with it. One of the men was slightly injured. Then the fire was discovered, the flames spreading so rapidly that it was decided to point the prow of the Minnehaha toward Halifax. She reached that port on July 9.

The Saxonia of the Cunard Line and the Philadelphia of the American Line sent prompt answers of reassurance by Marconi wireless in response to the message of warning.

He Wanted an Understanding.

A village clergyman, says an English paper, going the rounds of his parish one day, met an old parishioner.

"Well, George," the parson said, "how is it that I have not seen you at church for several Sundays?"

"Ain't got no Sunday trousers," replied George.

"Oh, well," said the parson, "we can remedy that. I have a pair at home that will fit you, and I will have them sent to you to-day."

"Thankee, parson," said George.

The trousers were duly sent, and George was seen at church for the following three Sundays. Then he stopped coming. After two or three weeks the clergyman met him again.

"Well, George," he said, "you have no excuse for not coming to church now. Why haven't I seen you there?"

"Look here, parson," said George, "I likes a man to speak plain. I know what you mean. You're a-thinkin' about them there trousers. I came to church three Sundays, and if you don't think I've earned them trousers, just tell me how many more Sundays I'll have to come to church before they're mine altogether."

The meek may inherit the earth some day, but the other fellow has a mortgage on it right now.

HOW ABOUT THE WAR SETTLEMENT?

"PEACE MUST BE OUTCOME OF VICTORY OR EXHAUSTION."

It Is Possible to Get Co-operation in Europe to Avoid Mere War.

The war will end one day, and those most hasten the end who have a full vision of what "the Great Settlement" will mean.

Many will, therefore, echo Lord Esher's warm welcome to Mr. C. Ernest Fayle's most useful book, "The Great Settlement."

"The German cult and German methods are alike abhorrent to me," writes Lord Esher. "Since we have been forced to draw the sword, I would never willingly sheathe it till both are in the dust. If the free nations of Europe consent to a peace under any other conditions it will be no peace. Our children will then have to suffer again what we are suffering to-day. Our struggle is not only against military caste. It is a fight to the death with a nation steeped in odious fallacies, bred on hateful dogmas, and imbued with a false philosophy of life and its aims.

Victory or Exhaustion.

"Peace can only be the outcome of victory or exhaustion.

During the war I have lived much with the French armies and among the French people. There is no soldier of France and very few of her men and women, to whom the issues at stake are not pellucidly clear.

"Their agony, and sacrifice of wealth, of blood, and of life, are not laid upon the altar of ambition. They are not offered for territory or power, for commercial predominance or to impose French ideas upon mankind. They are a contribution, by France, of her youth and manhood, of the tears of her women and children, to the cause of freedom, and the inherent right of free races and free nations to live their own lives in their own manner.

"This is the supreme objective of the war," concludes Lord Esher. "No diplomatic compromises, no shuffling of the European cards, no redrawing of the map of Europe, in the narrower interests of this or that. Great Power that fails to secure it, will prove to be more than an armed and minatory truce."

Mr. Fayle's is a very business-like book, and he achieves his object in seven direct chapters.

To Save Civilization.

"It is not likely that there will be any sentimental weakness towards Germany on the part of the allies. On the other hand, we must see to it that we do not throw away, for the gratification of any sentiment of revenge or triumph, the wider and deeper interests which we have at heart," adds Mr. Fayle.

These interests embrace nothing less than 'the vindication of public right' in Europe, to use the words of Mr. Asquith, 'the saving of European civilization,' in the phrase of M. Cambon. If that civilization is to be secured against a recurrence of this catastrophe, if public right is to be fully vindicated, it must receive expression in some form of European organization, whether it take the shape of a European Confederation, the establishment of the 'United States of Europe,' or simply an extension of existing alliances and ententes to include all the greater European Powers, with a natural guarantee against aggression.

"Such a guarantee would secure the Allies against the fear of a war of revenge, and would prevent the militarists of Germany from working on their people by stimulating a fear of Russia. This idea of an allied or federated Europe has often been brought forward in the past, but has generally been dismissed as impracticable. It was impracticable so long as the political system of Europe was based upon an artificial arrangement of boundaries. It could have little value so long as the old belief in a policy of conquest and domination remained unimpaired.

Co-Operation Possible.

"But if we can achieve a peace based upon the principle of nationality and the equitable settlement of vexed questions, if we can keep before ourselves the idea of public right to vindicate which we are fighting, it ought to be possible to take some step in this direction. The nations of Europe have a common interest in peace and in a reduction of the burdens of armament competition. Both reason and experience tell us that so long as Europe is divided into rival groups, the armament competition will go on and peace will be liable to be broken. Common interests can be secured only by co-operation, and if these common interests are fully realized, co-operation should be possible.

"We may be accused of looking toward a Utopia. But the Utopia of to-day is the practical politics of to-morrow. The abolition of the slave trade was long an Utopian dream, yet Castlereagh, the least visionary of statesmen, brought it back from the Congress of Vienna. Religious toleration, representative government, internal order and justice would all at one time or another have sounded equally Utopian to our ancestors. No one of these reforms came all at once, nor will the peace of the world. To expect it to be born full-grown from the chaos of to-day might justly stamp us as visionaries. But like them, it can be obtained if practical men will give practical effect to the steps which lead up to it. It will be for us, when we come to the end of our present struggle, to take the first step."

CONCERNING BANANA FLOUR.

Stanley Found It Wholesome and Easily Digested.

Not every one knows that flour can be made from bananas; but from time immemorial the natives of tropical countries where the banana grows — Jamaica, Canary Islands, the Malay Archipelago, and Africa—have made flour from the fruit. And large quantities of banana flour have quite recently been shipped from this country to England and France.

Stanley found the natives of Africa making it by drying bananas over wooden gratings, and grinding them to powder. He found the flour wholesome and easily digested. Once, when attacked by dysentery, he took a thin gruel made from it for a day, during which he abstained from other food, and obtained prompt relief.

The South American Indians make a flour or paste from bananas, and so the banana in that part of the world as in Africa and the East Indies, takes the place of cereals. The flour can be easily carried about, and, as needed made into cakes and fried, or mixed with water and drunk.

The banana, so long as its skin is unbroken, is microbe proof; but it should not be eaten until it has lost its green color. If the skin is intact it may even be eaten after it has turned black.

Banana flour contains one-third as much protein matter, one-fourth as much fat, and a little more starch than wheat flour. It is considerably richer in mineral matter.

As to the food acreage of this edible fruit, the banana produces 240,000 pounds of food per acre, as compared with 8,000 pounds of potato and 1,200 pounds of wheat.

GREAT EFFICIENCY OF BRITISH FLEET

AMERICAN TRIBUTE TO WHAT IT IS DOING.

What the Germans Have Been Prevented From Doing and What Ships Have Been Sunk.

There is a splendid appreciation of the contribution of the British navy to the cause of the allies in the great war. Those who have grumbled at the seeming inactivity of the fleet will have their eyes opened as they read this article, which appeared as the leading editorial in a recent issue of the New York Sun. It was published prior to the sinking of the Royal Edward and the recent naval battle in the Baltic.

There are numerous ways in which a great navy can support and aid the cause of its country in war. It can protect the movement of troops by sea and occasionally co-operate with them. It can guard its own seaports against attack and its coasts from invasion. It can render the seas of the world measurably safe for the commerce of its own country and it can destroy the commerce of the enemy.

These are the possibilities and the high duties of a great war fleet. It will be observed that we have not specified among them the obligation to seek out, fight, and destroy the enemy's fleet. This, in modern war, is purely a means to an end—the end being the execution of the four objects above recited. In this the canon of sea warfare differs from that of the land. An army must fight. It must seek contact with the enemy's forces and must put forth all its energies to defeat and destroy them. It is only in this way that war can be carried to a decision. On the contrary, the naval power of one belligerent may be fully exerted without a battle. If it can effectively suppress the activities of the enemy's navy without an engagement the purpose of its existence is fulfilled and it is not only justified in avoiding exaggerated risk to force an encounter under a serious handicap, but it is obliged by all considerations of wisdom and prudence to place its own safety above all craving for glory and renown.

What British Have Done.

Let us apply these general principles in considering the activities of the British navy in the present war. Its participancy has not only averted the destruction of foreign trade of France but has hindered Germany from cutting her off from Corsica and her Mediterranean possessions. In the invasion of the country by an expeditionary army under the guns of German dreadnoughts would have been well within the field of possibility, taking the French battle line in the rear and thus forcing a sudden termination of the contest. The British fleet rendered such an exploit impossible through the irresistable static power with which it dominated the seas of the world. But in addition to the salvation of France the British navy realized for its own country all the benefits indicated in our opening paragraph. In every phase of the war its influence has been felt. Its activity has been tireless in all parts of the world, but behind that activity the supreme potency has always resided in the great, main line-of-battle fleet, which has never fired a shot. Through this, Britain has all but completely commanded the maritime situation everywhere and at every moment.

Superiority and Readiness.

This supremacy was due not only to the great intrinsic superiority of the British navy, but also to its extraordinary readiness when the war broke out. At that time, according to the best available figures, the relative strength of the hostile fleets were as shown in the following figures:

	Great Britain.	Germany.	Austria.
Dreadnoughts—
Battleships	24	16	3
Cruisers	10	5	...
Pre-Dreadnoughts—
Battleships	43	26	12
Armored cruisers	34	9	3
Cruisers—
Under 21 knots	42	10	6
Over 21 knots	9	4	2
Destroyers	225	130	15
Torpedo boats	106	80	58
Submarines	89	30	6

The Austrian force was more than offset by the French fleet concentrated in the Mediterranean, so that the comparison virtually stands as between Britain and Germany, although it is true that a couple of first class British cruisers were stationed, and have remained beyond the Straits of Gibraltar. On the face of the figures, the odds stood 34 to 21 in favor of England in the first line of battle. In the second, it was 40 to 20 or 74 to 20, according to how the armored cruisers are regarded. The superiority is equally marked in all the minor classes, except swift, commerce raiding cruisers, wherein Germany with 33 comes fairly close to England with 40. But the odds against Germany were even greater than the mere roster of Dreadnoughts would imply.

More Powerful Guns.

The gunfire of all the British battleships was much more powerful than that of the Germans. Ten of the British ships were armed with ten 13.5-inch guns each and three ships had eight guns of the same calibre. For these leviathans, Germany had no equivalent whatever. Her heaviest guns were 12-inch, of which she had eighty-two mounted on nine ships, against 286 British 12-inch guns mounted on fifty-four ships. Of heavy ordnance Germany had nothing more save 110 guns of 11-inch calibre. The British preponderance in weight of metal was simply stupendous.

Plainly there was only one thing for the German navy to do in presence of such a disadvantage. To come out and fight would be to court certain destruction; so almost the entire fleet, not only of capital ships, but a majority of the small cruisers and destroyers, were hastily withdrawn into the shelter of the Kiel Canal or into naval harbors where they were protected with characteristic thoroughness by means of booms, mine fields, and powerful land fortifications. A few vessels were caught too far from home to reach security; their doings for a brief period fill the brilliant page of German maritime history in the war to date. A few squadrons of German ships have also operated in the Baltic, but their work has no place in this article, except to explain that it was unpreventable by the British because the German Government has rendered access to that inland sea impossible by mining the waters of the international straits between Denmark and Sweden, while Denmark guards by guns and mines the neutrality of the channels which lie wholly within her territory. It is here proper to say that no reproach to German courage or German seamanship is involved in this withdrawal of the fleets to safe cover. Any other course would have been sheer insanity. Safe and ready to take advantage of any accident, they are still a potential force in the war of considerable importance.

An Unrealized Hope.

The German hope at the outset, of course, was to reduce the British superiority by surprise attacks. Admiral von Tirpitz has expressly favored this program. It was hoped that the British might be taken unawares and that by daring torpedo dashes sufficient big ships might be destroyed to bring the opposed fleets to some sort of parity. It so happened that the sudden peril of war found England at a most favorable moment. The entire naval force had recently been assembled for manœuvres, the greatest armada ever brought together had been reviewed by King George at Spithead on July 18. Its dispersal had only partially taken place when the departure of the Austrian Minister from Belgrade on July 25 revealed the crisis in European affairs. On the 26th, Sunday, the Admiralty ordered the ships of the first line to keep together, and on the 29th these set sail for a secret destination, where they were joined in a few days by the ships of the second and third lines, while swarms of lighter craft combed the waters of the North Sea and the Channel ready to give the alarm upon the emergence of any German fleet or squadron or single vessel, large or small, and bring down upon it a force strong enough to sink it or drive it back to port.

The secret of the battle fleet's destination has been well guarded. Conjectures that the rendezvous is in northern waters has been confirmed, oddly by the Archbishop of York in an account which he has written for the London Times of a ten days' visit of spiritual ministration which he paid to the ships. All through the short grey days and weary nights of the winter, according to the Archbishop, the entire fleet kept cruising through all extremes of weather. In the long summer days it still holds its grim vigil. What harbors it uses in case of need, whence or how it receives its supplies of coal and food, whether it has incurred any losses by storm or misfortune, are matters unknown outside the narrowest official circle. The single incident of the Audacious being damaged by a mine reached the world by accident. Even now no English reference book acknowledges it. In all probability, the strength of the fleet has been increased by some nine super-Dreadnoughts, armed with 16.6-inch guns. These ships were nearing completion when the war broke out. But on this point, also, the Admiralty maintains a profound silence and the censorship enforces an equal reticence on the press.

Has Absolute Sway.

Whatever its vicissitudes, the fleet, under Admiral Sir John Rushworth Jellicoe, controls the destinies of the war at sea with absolute sway. It has not fought; it does not seek a battle; but it is ready to fight if anything appears to fight it. If it could reach the German ships, it would attack them. But the work is done without fighting. Simultaneously with the concentration of the main fleet, minor squadrons were sent out to sweep the waters about the British Islands free of enemy warships and enemy traders. The British vessels in the Mediterranean, co-operating with the French, cleared the great trade and military routes to the Far East. Orders went forth by cables and wireless to the ends of the earth, sending scores of cruisers and destroyers hither and thither, making prizes of such German vessels as they could find and causing all the rest to intern in home or foreign ports. At the same time, the seaborne commerce of England and her allies was, and has continued to be, carried on in security to an extent beyond official expectation, the German submarine activities notwithstanding.

England remained safe from invasion. The few naval raids attempted on her coasts were rendered practically abortive and were punished by the destruction of German warships venturing into the North Sea. The great overseas Empire of Great Britain enjoyed entire immunity from attack, whereas British cruisers seized some German colonies and by isolating others rendered their capture easy. Movements of troops from India, Australia, New Zealand, and Canada to European battlefields were made safe and sure. Transfers of soldiers amounting by this time unquestionably to more than a million men have been effected between England and the Continent, absolutely without loss. The army has been kept supplied with all its needs in the field—so far as transportation goes—without the slightest loss at sea.

Finally, the great enterprise of turning the enemy's rear by the occupation of Constantinople, which supervened upon Turkey's entrance into the war, could not even have been undertaken without mastery of the seas at large and a powerful, local striking force of warships. The mastery of the seas is wholly England's contribution to the work. She also furnishes in ships and soldiers a great share of the fleet and army engaged in the immediate operations. The fate of the attempt is still undecided, but hardly uncertain.

That the British investment in warships has been vindicated as to its wisdom by the war is demonstrated by the irresistible logic of events.

MODERN SOLDIER'S EQUIPMENT INCLUDES ARMS AND ARMOR LIKE THOSE OF ANCIENT WARRIORS

To the left is a soldier of the Allies begoggled and muzzled against German poison gas, wearing a species of equipment not unlike that ancient Chinese warriors originally used in opposing "stink-pot" and "smoke-ball" attacks. In the centre and on the right are two bombers, or hand grenade flingers, each wearing the steel skull cap worn in action as late as the seventeenth century. The pair also carry hand grenades, along at the waist, and wear steel breast plates.

ARMORED CAR LIKE TURTLE.

Original Ideas as to Protection From Gun Fire.

A novel type of armored car has been designed by a resident of Lowell, Mass., which contains some very original ideas as to protection from rifle and gun fire. The car is shaped exactly like a turtle, the upper and lower shell being joined at a distance of about sixteen inches above the ground.

The wheels are almost entirely covered by the armor. The latter is composed of steel shells, curved to represent a turtle's back, the inventor claiming that such construction renders the persons in the car immune from rifle and machine gun fire, as the bullets are deflected into the air. Loopholes for firing, a periscope for steering, emergency doors in the rear and on both sides, a powerful motor under the driver's seat and a quick-firing gun mounted on a revolving base—these are all parts of the design.

For Bayonet Practice.

English recruits are being taught how to skillfully use the bayonet by means of a mechanical device consisting of a wooden frame, from which several thickly woven straw balls are threaded. These balls may be dropped in rapid succession by means of a spring. As each ball falls the soldier tries to pierce it with a bayonet, working hastily so as to stab each one in turn. Besides training the fighting man to use the weapon quickly and accurately, this exercise also develops his wrist muscles.

KING ALBERT'S SISTER A NURSE

IS PERSONALLY SERVING THE WOUNDED BELGIANS.

High Praise Attributed to Duchess of Vendome by an American Writer.

Ruth Wright Kauffman, an American writer, gives the following description of Duchess of Vendome, sister of the King of the Belgians, who is serving her country as a nurse:

The eyes of ancient kings were on us in the grand salon at Belmont, while her Royal Highness, Henriette, Duchess of Vendome and Princess of Belgium, the sister of King Albert, told me simply, and as woman to woman, of the sufferings of her people.

"We are poor!" said the Duchess of Vendome. "All our money, everything, is in Brussels! I may not even send a letter to the friends of my childhood, nor may they write to me. If a letter slips through it is by mere chance!"

There was a sweet, rising inflection in her use of my language, and a pleasant lack of emphasis. Each syllable fell precisely into its place, and each phrase had a rythmic swing. I might better say a rythmic sing. It was her large, blue eyes that gave emphasis, steady and true, reflecting the tortures of Belgium; more than once they held tears.

"Our beautiful bourgeoisie were so happy!"—I wish I could produce the intonation with all its charm. "You remember our beautiful bourgeoisie, and how the restaurants and the cafes were crowded in Brussels, and how glad you were when you passed by to see everyone enjoying himself after his day's work? Our bourgeoisie has vanished; many must even ask for their food and clothing!"

Her Royal Highness is a splendid, large woman, the kind one likes to think of as of the race of queens and kings. There is something very motherly and tender about her, perhaps because she is herself the mother of four children. One feels instinctively that she is cool-headed and capable and that she would not let her hand tremble if she held a glass of water to a dying soldier's lips.

Helps the Dying.

She has done more than that for her dying soldiers. With her own hands she has nursed them back from the door of death to the gate of life.

Under the personal supervision are five hospitals, two at Neuilly, just outside of Paris, where she has a house; two at Cannes, where his Royal Highness Mgr. Duke of Vendome has a large establishment; and one at Calais; and there is another hospital at Vangirard, Paris called the Hospital of St. Michael, founded by the Duke of Vendome and under his personal direction. At Cannes, Madame la Duchesse has mostly to do with the executive side of the St. Charles and St. Jean Hospitals, but there, too, she has taken charge individually of several interesting cases.

Dieudonne Capelle, for instance, was a sergeant of the Second Regiment of Belgian Carabiniers, a brave fellow who fought from Liege to Louvain with heroism. He had an ugly wound in the shoulder and in the arm. At first he was nursed at Calais and was later sent to Cannes to the hospital St. Charles, where he had his left arm amputated and lay at the edge of death for weeks.

The Duchess of Vendome nursed him during this time. As it was picturesquely put, "he was her wounded."

When she is at Neuilly-sur-Seine she goes each morning to the hospital and performs regular nurse's duties from 9 o'clock until noon in the hospital ward.

Busy Every Minute.

Not a moment of her day is occupied in thought of herself; it is her duty to her country and her love of her people, and if she is not doing manual labor for the ill and wounded, she is sitting on committees and gathering together sheets and blankets, underwear, shirts, condensed milk, preserved meat, anything and everything for the destitute.

"There are weeks," said her lady-in-waiting, "when we have not a penny, and they write for food. We have had to ask the Chamber of Commerce of London to send for us, and they have been most generous; sometimes we have had to borrow for as long as three weeks. When food is asked for, it must be sent, and immediately, or the people starve."

"My brother does not think of himself," said the Duchess of Vendome. "But," she added, "the soldiers at the front are well enough, compared with some others. They do not lack, and they are kept courageous because they know there are doing something fine and heroic. It is for the wounded and the civilians that I am most distressed, especially for the poor little babies.

"At my villa St. Jean Hospital at Cannes I so very much need fifteen more beds for the wounded, and I have no means to get them. The French Government provides 2 shillings a day for each of the wounded, but that is not enough. To instal a bed for one month costs 60 francs from an individual. That is $12.

"We ask," wrote the Princess, taking the pencil with which I made a few notes from my hand, "for linen, sheets, towels, and money."

Dyers Depressed by Some Colors.

The word "blues," a mental depression that makes the acquaintance of most of us at some time or another, is supposed to have originated from the well-authorized belief that persons who work in indigo dyeing establishments are subject to melancholy. Paracelsus, an author of the sixteenth century, asserts that blue dyes are injurious to the health and spirits. Another accredited origin of the word derives it from the German blei, or lead, since lead from its weight and resemblance to darkened skies has always been held to typify melancholy.

THE EVACUATION WAS PRE-ARRANGED

WHAT RUSSIA'S MILITARY ORGAN SAYS.

Giving Up Poland Was Part of the Russian General Staff's Plans.

The evacuation of Poland was decided upon by Russia in 1910, declares the Russky Invalid, the Russian military organ, in a discussion of the general staff's before-the-war plans for the defence of the western frontier.

"Before the war," says the Journal, "Russia anticipated that in the event of war Austria and Germany, because of their rapid means of mobilization and immense technical resources, would turn their attention first of all against Russia. To frustrate this plan it was decided in 1910 that the Russian territory jutting into Germany and the fortified places west of Brest-Litovsk should not be organized for a state of war. The region further east was chosen for the concentration of the Russian forces.

Depth an Advantage.

"It would have been dangerous to attribute too great an importance to and to have held on the Narew and Vistula, with their fortified towns. It is better to take advantage of the depth of our theatre of war to draw the German armies far from their base and to force them to exhaust themselves. To this end it was necessary to sacrifice the Polish salient. Three months have elapsed since the Russian army started to put this plan into execution. Constant marching, fighting and privations weaken the enemy. There are already evidences that the moral force of the German army is weakening in its attack, and prisoners confirm that this weakening is not only moral, but physical.

"This war will be decided by the armies in battle, and it is of no importance where this battle will take place. Thus our retreat assures us victory, for our armies are only now beginning to develop, while an abundance of munitions of war awaits us in the near future, thanks to the mobilization of the national industry, and to the orders placed abroad, whereas for the moment the enemy is in a favorable position in this regard.

Not Wasting Garrisons.

"A glance backward shows that at the beginning of the war the Germans threw the mass of their army against France. This leap forward on their part had happy results for us, for we advanced into enemy territory notably in Galicia; now the tables are turned. However, it is impossible to hamper the liberty of movement of the Russian army in any particular region or on any particular frontier, and it would be impracticable to waste garrisons in defending fortified towns which are none too safe, as the Austrians did in Przemysl. That is why, examining, after a year of war, the map of the Russian front, we see the necessity for the living Russian armies to manœuvre and deploy on their base line. This would be the most useful object to aim at especially in view of the situation which has prevailed since the month of April.

Wearing Out the Enemy.

"At the present time we have against us nearly all the German cavalry, nearly all the Austrian army and more than half of the total German forces—about 70 divisions—and the enemy artillery has numerous guns of all calibres. The Russian army is offering a heroic resistance; it is not only standing up under the most hellish fire, but it is inflicting countless losses upon the enemy, and wearing him out, notwithstanding his technical perfection. We are getting nearer to our supplies of ammunition, by means of which we will correct our lines and throw back the enemy. If only for this reason we can say that the evacuation of Warsaw, the line of the Vistula-Ivangorod-Novo-Georgievsk will make certain that the Russian offensive this time will be definite and irresistible.

"Russia has the most definite plans for the issue of the campaign, while maintaining at the same time the firm resolution to wage this fight to a victorious end."

Dumas Foresaw German Peril.

There remains a story by Alexander Dumas which has not been translated into English. Now a translation is to be published by Stanley Paul, under the title, "The Prussian Terror." The story was originally published in France before the war of 1870, with the title "La Terreur Prussienne a Frankfort." Dumas' object was to awaken France to her danger from the rise of Prussian militarism. When the Prussians terrorized the "free" city of Frankfort, after beating the Austrians at Sadowa, he went there to collect his material.

THE LATE MRS ROBT BROWN

It is our sad duty to record the death of one of our esteemed residents in the person of the late Mrs Brown who died at her home, 9th con Bruce, at the comparatively early age of 53 years after a long illness suffering from anemia, rheumatism and heart leakage, borne with a calm resignation in the Master's will and firm in the hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ. The subject of our sketch, whose maiden name was Julia McLean, fifth daughter of the late Mr and Mrs Allan McLean who were among the early settlers of this line and helped to establish the church here of which they were active members, thus giving their children all the advantages of a Christian training. About 26 years ago Julia became the wife of Mr Robt Brown of the 6th con. Their union was blessed with three daughters and one son. After the death of her parents Mr Brown bought the old homestead and moved to the farm where she was born and where last Tuesday, Sept 7th, she entered upon her eternal rest, deeply regretted and sadly mourned. Everything possible was done for the comfort and recovery of Mrs Brown. Her sister, Mrs Rae, of Vancouver, who is a skilled nurse, was with her for over two months. Mrs Brown was a kind neighbor, willing to help the sick or any one in trouble; an affectionate wife and mother. One of the last services she was able to perform in her life was in connection with the completion of a beautiful autograph quilt, which she managed and sold under the auspices of the W H M S and gave the proceeds to the church here. The children are: Mrs Schmidt, 6th con Bruce; Evelyn, Florence and Robert Hilker at home. For these children and the heart-broken husband and father the deepest sympathy is felt, also to her five sisters—Mrs Rae, Mrs Muddel and Mrs Hurst, of Vancouver, B C, Mrs Brown of Underwood, and Mrs McLean of the 10th con; and two brothers, Hugh of Underwood and Donald of Alberta we extend sympathy. The funeral to Lovat cemetery was one of the largest in this section. The services at the house and grave were conducted by Rev Mr McNab, B A, and Mr Barker of Port Elgin.

HORSES POISONED

Four horses belonging to Mr George Graham, a North Keppel farmer, were accidentally poisoned through eating seed wheat that had been treated with formaldehyde to prevent smut. Two bags of grain had been left on a wagon in the barnyard, and five horses that were loose in the yard broke open the bags and consumed nearly all the contents. The next morning the horses were found lying around suffering intensely. Two died before a vet could be secured, and two others later, while there is a chance of saving the fifth. The spectacle of the five helpless and suffering horses was a pitiful sight, and hundreds of people in the neighborhood went to lend a helping hand in saving the poor brutes.

A Sample of the Oats Grown on these Valley Lands

STRIKING FACTS IN GOVT. REPORT

Building of Grand Trunk Pacific Line Reveals Many Fertile Valleys in B.C.

"The 'Back to the Land' movement is taking place steadily but surely throughout the province of British Columbia and if this movement is directed along right lines we shall soon be supplying our own markets and eventually exporting."

Such is the declaration made by Mr. W. E. Scott, Deputy Minister of Agriculture in the British Columbia Government. This official, with Mr. W. T. McDonald, Live Stock Commissioner, has just returned from an extended tour through the central portion of the province for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the new country along the Grand Trunk Pacific's Transcontinental Line, now open for through passenger service.

In his report, the Deputy Minister says:—

"There have been many opinions expressed about the lands in Central British Columbia contiguous to the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Our observations led us conclusively to the opinion that this part of the province is a country, the future of which is assured as a stock raising and mixed farming country.

"After leaving Prince Rupert, on the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, there is practically no land suitable for agricultural purposes until Terrace is reached, 150 miles from Prince Rupert. Here the Kitsum Kalem and Lakelse Valleys extend on each side of the Skeena River. There is probably an area of 116,000 acres of land in these two valleys suitable for agriculture. Considerable development has been effected lately in the Kitsum Kalem Valley. The clearing here, in comparison with our coast districts, is comparatively light. The soil is very productive and is well suited for general mixed farming purposes. Dairying, poultry raising and small fruit and vegetable growing may be prosecuted successfully. The district is particularly well suited for growing strawberries and other small fruits, the quality of the berries being very high and realising good prices on the Prince Rupert market."

The Bulkley Valley.

"Our next stop was at Smithers, in the centre of the famous Bulkley Valley. A very large amount of development work has been undertaken during the past year in the magnificent valley. The quality of a large proportion of the land is all that could be desired, and very good crops are raised thereon. Crops of oats promising to run 100 bushels to the acre were seen, and all prospects were most encouraging. Farmers are realising that the time has arrived when they should develop their lands, and land-clearing operations are in evidence on all sides.

"It is difficult to estimate the amount of land suitable for agriculture in this wonderful valley, but it runs into many hundreds of thousands of acres.

Nechaco Valley.

"Proceeding along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific, Fraser Lake is reached. A considerable number of settlers have gone into this district lately and are proceeding to clear land and develop their holdings. The next stop was at Vanderhoof, in the centre of the famous Nechacho Valley. We were immensely impressed with the enormous extent of good land in the Nechacho Valley, most of which can be cleared at a very low cost indeed. A large number of settlers have gone in there, and on all sides one sees signs of activity. Settlers' log houses are springing up in every direction, and considerable energy is being shown by most of them in clearing their lands and getting them into crops. Fields 100 acres in extent in grain were noticed.

"There are many tracts of good agricultural land adjacent to Prince George, whilst at the same time there is a considerable area of jack pine land, where the soil is light and therefore is not the best land for agricultural purposes.

"The wonderful country visited between Hazelton and Prince George has a great future ahead of it, now that transportation has been effected. It is a big country with a big future, and, as soon as times improve and conditions right themselves, a big forward movement must take place. The country traversed grows magnificent crops of timothy, oats and barley. What may also be grown successfully if care is exercised in getting the seed sown as early as possible so as to avoid damage from frosts. Potatoes and other vegetables and small fruits do very well, but my observations lead me to the conclusion that this part of the province is not adapted for growing tree fruits commercially. Certain of the hardier varieties may be grown all right for home use, but every effort should be made to prevent this country being advertised by any interested parties as suitable for commercial tree fruit growing. It is, par excellence, a stock and mixed farming country."

FIVE THOUSAND MILES OF KHAKI

A UNIFORM AT THE FRONT LASTS ABOUT A MONTH.

Difficult Task of Clothing Great Britain's Vast New Armies.

On the outbreak of war a statistician at the War Office estimated that five thousand miles of khaki would be required to provide the new British armies with uniforms and overcoats, and this estimate was probably, roughly speaking, correct, says London Answers.

By the middle of August every available mill in the North of England was turning out the khaki lengths as fast as the machines could do the work.

A story was told to the writer of two manufacturers who set out on a race to see who would first produce one hundred miles of khaki, the loser to subscribe five hundred pounds to the National Relief Fund.

For many days and nights the mills of the two manufacturers vibrated to the dull whirring of machines, for the work proceeded without an instant's stop. One night the two manufacturers met at their club at eleven p.m. They had each instructed their manager to telephone to the club directly the hundredth mile of khaki came off the machines, which it was anticipated would be done some time before midnight.

Lost Through a Breakdown.

So far, the two mills had been racing almost neck and neck, and it was difficult to say which would turn out the complete hundred miles of khaki first. At about a quarter to twelve the telephone-bell of the club rang, and the waiter informed one of the manufacturers that he was wanted. He rushed to the 'phone, and his friend and competitor went with him. After a few minutes the manufacturer rang off, and then, turning to his friend, said: "A piston-shaft snapped when they had done all but six yards of the hundred miles."

Almost immediately afterwards the telephone-bell rang again, and the other manufacturer received the news that the hundred miles of khaki had been run off the machines.

The loser at once sat down at the writing-table and drew a cheque for five hundred pounds for the Relief Fund, and the winner did the same, for he said that, but for the accident at his friend's factory, he would have lost.

Made in Stock Sizes.

And while the mills were producing khaki-lengths as fast as machines could make them, the Army Clothing Department were busy making arrangements for converting the khaki into uniforms and coats for the men at the Front, and for the uniformless armies training in different parts of the country at home. It was a titanic undertaking, this, of clothing millions of men, and whatever criticism may be levelled at the Army Clothing Factory, the broad fact remains that it accomplished, in face of unparalleled difficulties, the immense task set it with almost incredible rapidity.

The uniforms are made in different sizes, according to the standard measurements for each military unit, and a certain number are made in excess of these measurements, to meet the needs of such cases as exceptionally tall guardsmen, etc.

In a couple of months a quarter of a million of khaki uniforms had been turned out of the Army factory, as against a normal output of about twenty thousand of ordinary uniforms in peace time. But this, of course, sufficed but to meet a fraction of the immediate requirements. Eighty per cent. of the uniforms turned out of the Army Clothing Factory in the early months of the war had to be sent to our Army in France.

Lasting a Month Only.

The average life of a uniform at the Front is not much more than a month. In the trenches it is usually shorter. A soldier, after he has taken a couple of spells in the trenches of, say, three days at a time, with an interval of two days between, frequently finds his uniform in rags, held together mainly by cakes of mud and pins. The next spell he gets in the trenches, he gets a new uniform, and the old one is burnt.

Over four million uniforms have been sent to the Front since the outbreak of war. A regular delivery of uniforms is now made to the troops in France, but in the early days of the war it was impossible to guarantee a regular supply.

A story is told of a company of a certain regiment who, on coming out of the trenches, went to indulge in the highly-prized luxury of a good wash-down. They were informed by a quarter-master that new uniforms had arrived for them from the base, and that their old ones would be burnt.

The men gladly got rid of their ragged, mud-caked uniforms, which were gathered up and taken off to be burnt by the quartermaster's patrol; but, unluckily, the uniforms that had arrived had been taken possession of by another company a few hours previously, and no more were available for a couple of days. During that time, the unlucky company in question had to live in their overcoats, and shirts, and strangest garments fashioned out of blankets.

It was, of course, some months before uniforms were available for the troops at home, except in quite small quantities.

The writer heard of one irritable regimental quartermaster who was constantly worrying the clothing factory for uniforms for his regiment.

"You might, at least, send us our share of any uniforms that are available," he wrote; "whereupon the reply came back: "All right; as matters stand at present, your share is one button, which is enclosed herewith."

And when one considers that at that time there were probably not more than a few thousand uniforms to divide among the armies at home, the button was probably not much under the share that could be fairly allotted to one regiment.

Boots by the Million.

But uniforms are not, of course, the only articles of a soldier's outfit. There are such things as overcoats, putties, socks, shirts, and boots, and all these articles, after the outbreak of war, were wanted by the millions.

Something like five million pairs of boots were provided from the various boot factories in the incredibly short space of time of four months. The armies at the Front, of course, have the first call on the available supply. The quality of the Army boots is about what would cost you 27s. 6d. per pair retail, and they last a soldier in the trenches about a month.

The indifference of Tommy, by the way, to the manner in which he is clothed makes it sometimes rather difficult for the authorities to provide him with a proper kit. Every soldier who is ordered from home to the Front is entitled to an entirely new rig-out from head to foot.

A couple of days before a soldier is ordered from home to the Front he is instructed to attend at the quartermaster-sergeant's office to receive a new kit, but he frequently neglects to attend to this instruction, and goes on active service in a kit he may have had for months. The new kit may be sent after him, but, in any case, it is generally some time before it reaches him, and it may be appropriated by someone else.

T. A. Must Have His Joke.

One company of a certain regiment received the kits they ought to have taken with them, when leaving home, two months after they had arrived in Flanders. By this time the company were in rags. And so, unhappily, were the new kits. What happened was that the new kits had been appropriated by another company of the same regiment, badly in want of a new rig-out themselves. After the garments had been worn for some time the company got a fresh rig-out, and, for a joke, repacked the old things, and sent them to the base for the company they were originally intended for.

One most important article of the soldier's active-service outfit is his identification-plate, upon which is stamped his name, number, and the company to which he belongs. It is from these plates that the lists of killed and missing have often to be compiled, and hence mistakes occasionally arise.

An Irish soldier once lost his identification plate, and was reported as missing. As a matter of fact, he was wounded, and invalided home. In the hospital at home he read, to his surprise, in a daily paper his name among the missing.

"Begorra," he said, "and I'm missing, am I? And it's small wonder I am with a German bullet inside me that they can't find. But when they do, it isn't me that'll be missing, but the bullet!"

MAKING WINTER GARMENTS.

German Textile Factories Are Working Day and Night.

All the textile factories along the Rhine, and also those around Prague, Budapest and Vienna, are said to be working day and night turning out winter garments for the armies. Large orders have been placed with Swiss manufacturers of heating appliances for the German army. A Berlin automobile manufacturer is said to have discovered a system of curtain for motor cars which not only protects from the rain but also from the cold, and permits a ready change of the color to accord with the foliage of the country.

The winter campaign seems to be looked forward to without much apprehension in Germany, as the measures taken to economize food supplies have been so effective that no lack of provisions is feared. In Austria, however, according to reliable reports, the situation will be more serious, as the same precautions were not taken and their application is not so easy as in Germany.

Weeding Out Graft.

The French Government, which has been running down and prosecuting vigorously cases of corruption in the purchase of army supplies, has caused the arrest of two technical agents, one in the Marine and the other in the War Department. These agents were detailed to inspect shells manufactured at the works of Saut-Du-Tarn. M. Leblond, Director of Works, also has been arrested. He was accused of having paid monthly subsidies to the technical agents, in return for which the agents are said to have been less rigid in their inspection.

"Good-Bye, Good Luck to You."

THERE isn't much we 'aven't shared since Kruger cut and run,
The same old work, the same old skeff, the same old dust and sun!
The same old chance that laid us out, or winked an' let us through;
The same old Life, the same old Death. Good-bye, good luck to you.
— Kipling.

DANGER OF DISEASE.

Hon. Mr. Burrell Expects Need of Vigilance After War.

In his annual report of the work of the Department of Agriculture, Hon. Martin Burrell calls attention to the fact that the quarantine service of his department will probably be called on to exercise much greater vigilance when the soldiers begin to come back after the war, and a new tide of European immigration sets in. "History tells us," says Mr. Burrell, "that war is ever accompanied and followed by pestilence. The present war, with its carnage quite unprecedented in the history of the world, and its enormous aggregations of troops, is already proving the truth of this, in spite of the advances of modern sanitary science. Cholera, plague and typhus fever are reported to be spreading steadily. There is for this country the immediate danger of disease being brought by invalided or other soldiers returning from the war zone. There is also to be apprehended the danger from the return of our forces at large when the war is over and demobilization takes place, and from the large immigration that will follow after the war."

Mr. Burrell points out that during the past year Canada was saved by watchfulness at ports of entry from the inroads of any epidemic disease from abroad. At the various quarantine stations 253,608 persons were inspected, and a total of 543 persons were quarantined. Asiatic cholera is reported in extraordinary violent form among the troops in southern Austria and northern Hungary, while typhus fever is stated to be rapid in Serbia and Austria. The deaths from it amongst the soldiers, says Mr. Burrell, are already said to exceed 60,000.

Reference is made in the report to the fact that there are in the Leper Lazaretto, at Tracadie, N.B., sixteen patients—seven male and nine female. This is the smallest number in years. Amelioration of symptoms and sufferings is claimed to be following the system of treatment now being carried out at the Lazaretto, and two former inmates discharged in 1912 still remain "cured."

It's the easiest thing in the world to convince the average man that he is smart.

THE WOMEN OF PARIS.

Smile Despite War's Horrors, Says Rudyard Kipling.

The Paris Temps publishes two private letters written from Paris by Rudyard Kipling. In his first letter the author says:

"For the first time I see and really understand the face of Paris. One knew its soul, but the outward aspect was always masked. I was much struck by a certain look in women's eyes, a look not of dreams, but of realization, as if they already were regarding greater distances. What courageous vivacity and determination they possess to smile despite everything. I bow before a manifestation of courage whose touch is an light. One strange thing I heard, a laugh which methinks never sounded since the revolution. It was the guttural laugh of a woman of the people telling a story about Germans killed. The laugh came after mentioning the number.

"What a wondrous day in honor of the dead France and England will celebrate together every year to come. I foresee special ships laden with pilgrims to attend the ceremony. Nothing is more interesting to me than to see our soldiers in France and the real solidarity between them. I hope soon we will extend our front. They speak of doing it by detachments. I was greatly struck by the healthy appearance of the French soldiers, but the new vision of Paris will remain in my soul until death. I fancied my admiration for France couldn't grow. I was wrong and begin only just to understand what she is."

In the second letter Kipling says:

"I just have time to thank you and try to write something of my impressions. It was a revelation, an experience surpassing all words I can say, and of which I am extremely proud. Yet I maintain that a year ago France herself did not know what she was."

Twelve Brothers Killed.

Josef Plootzer, a Tyrolean (Austria) farmer, has lost twelve sons since the beginning of the war. Five of the brothers were killed in Galicia and seven on the Italian front. The oldest one was forty and the youngest 18 years old.

Aspen-leaves were once considered a great remedy for ague.

To "The Day."

Some day fresh green will creep along the Belgian lanes,
And wayside flowers will open to the May,
And on the grave of my dear son grass grow again
But not to-day.

Some day the birds will build again round Lille,
And on the Dunes will little children play.
Some day kind Time will stay the aching of my heart,
But not to-day.

Some day the widows of Louvain will cease to weep,
And from the ashes of those ruins grey
Will rise a city fashioned by the whole world's love,
But not to-day.

Some day the soldiers will come back from France
And Canada be decked with banners gay,
And I may see them marching comrades of my boy,
But not to-day.

But on that Golden Someday which the future holds,
When trumpets blow and angels line the way,
My boy shall come to meet me down the glittering ranks
And he will say:

Welcome, brave mother heart, The Day at last has dawned,
The parting and the pain have passed away,
And I shall see, my ears shall hear, my heart again grow young
Upon that day.

—F. CAMPBELL, Belfast.

THE REBUILDING OF EUROPE

AREA LARGER THAN BRITAIN LIES IN RUINS.

What Germany Will Have to Face in the Way of Builders' Tasks.

The great war is not over yet. Indeed, according to one of our greatest authorities, it has only just begun. No one can ever venture to prophesy what the damage will be before it is finished, says London Answers.

Up to date an area larger than the whole of the British Isles lies in ruins. Four-fifths of Belgium, ten departments of France, three-quarters of Poland, nearly the whole of Galicia, a slice of East Prussia, part of the Baltic provinces of Russia, as well as a rapidly-growing portion of the Trentino and South-Western Austria, are practically destroyed.

Besides these, the Serbian capital and three hundred square miles behind it are laid waste, while the Gallipoli Peninsula has not a town or village intact.

Some months ago a well-known Belgian lawyer set himself to estimate the actual losses inflicted on his country by the brutal and unprovoked inroads of the German hordes. His name is Monsieur Henri Masson, and we give some of his figures in round numbers.

Running Into Many Millions.

Liege and Louvain have, he says, suffered to the extent of seven millions each, Namur five millions, Dinant three millions. At Chilleroi not only the town but all the fine factories in the neighborhood were destroyed. He puts the damage there at over twenty millions.

Antwerp has suffered to a similar extent, while the damage to rural districts amounts to fifty-six millions.

Railways and other State property have been destroyed to a value of nearly fifty millions. The total of the damage to this one little country is probably two hundred and twenty-five millions.

Later, a paper was read before the Royal Statistical Society in London by Mr. Cramond on "The Cost of the War." In this he estimated the destruction of property by the Germans in France at one hundred and sixty millions.

In round numbers he gave the damage done to property in Galicia by the fighting at one hundred millions, but this figure must by this time be quite doubled.

Germany confesses to a loss of fifty millions by the Russian invasion of East Prussia, and she herself has done double that amount of harm in Russian Poland.

Making an Early Start.

As for the damage done in Russia herself, in Serbia, and in the Trentino, we have no figures. Put it as low as fifty millions—an absurdly small estimate—and we find that at the present moment nearly eight hundred million pounds' worth of property has been wasted and destroyed.

France, with characteristic pluck, has already set to work to repair damages, and the Northern Railway alone has contracted with a British firm for a hundred steel bridges, for rolling stock, rails, sleepers, etc.

But the fact is that all the steel works in the world will not be able to cope with the railway reconstruction alone; while, as for the rebuilding of houses, every mason and carpenter in Europe will find his hands full.

Then take the roads. Thousands of miles of highways have been absolutely destroyed by the haulage over them of huge guns and great trolleys carrying stores. There is no question of remetalling. They will have to be remade.

An Aid to Peace.

This country has, so far, happily, escaped being an actual area of war. With the exception of comparatively trivial damage done by raiding cruisers and Zeppelins, our homes and factories are intact. This is very good for us, for immediately after peace is declared we shall be swamped with orders for all sorts of material for making good war's damage. The United States also and Canada will find their hands full.

All this will make for future peace. Men all over the world will be so busy with the reconstruction of houses, roads, railways, and the like that they will not have time for casting cannon and shells. And, as Germany will no longer remain as a threat to the world's peace, it is not impossible to hope that this is the last of the great wars.

GRAND DUKE'S VOICE.

Deep, Clear Tones Seem to Thrill Czar's Soldiers.

"The Grand Duke's voice is one of the striking things in his personality," says Rt. Rev. Herbert Burr Anglican Bishop of Northern Europe. In describing a recent interview which he had with the Commander-in-Chief of the Russian armies.

"His voice is not only very deep, strong, and clear, but it has a peculiar sound and satisfying effect upon the ear," explains the Bishop, "and it seems to me that his soldiers listened as though they loved just to hear him speak.

"The Grand Duke is a tall man, standing far above everyone else, and he has a very serious, almost sad, expression.

"There are three qualities which I have observed him to possess. He is a man of quick decision in emergencies; he has the faculty of gathering round him the best and strongest men in the country; and he has the modesty and humility which is the mark of real greatness. He has no desire for popularity or applause; he does not care who gets the credit so lung as the thing is done."

EXPLAINS WAR TO CHINESE.

Former Head of Pekin University Gives British Side of Case.

Britishers in China, whose interests have been seriously affected by the publicity campaign of their German adversaries there, are endeavoring to counteract the effect. The Rev. W. E Soothill, formerly the head of the Tai Yuan Fu University, has written a paper in the Chinese language (in which he has a reputation as a scholar) explaining the war from the British point of view.

In the document, which is being circulated throughout China, he says that hitherto Germany has possessed a distinct advantage there, because of the Chinese name for that country—"Ta Te Kuo," or Great Virtue Nation. The name conveys the idea to the ordinary man, the writer states, that Germany is distinguished above all other nations for its Te (virtue). The names applying to England and France are respectively Ta Ying Kuo (Great Brave Nation) and Ta Fa Kuo (Great Law Nation); and it is interesting to note that applying to America is Ta Mei Kuo (Great Beautiful Nation).

IN THE CLUTCHES OF RHEUMATISM

The Great Suffering of a Calgary Lady Before Relief Was Found

There is still a very prevalent belief that rheumatism is due to cold or wet weather. This belief is probably due to the fact that when the blood is thin and watery there is an acute sensitiveness to atmospheric conditions and a change to wet weather often means a return of the excruciating pains. Rheumatism, however, is rooted in the blood, and it can only be driven from the system by building up and enriching the blood. Hot baths and outward applications of liniment may give temporary relief, but cannot cure. If the disease is not attacked through the blood, it simply fastens itself more firmly on the system, and the sufferer ultimately becomes hopelessly crippled. The truth of this is proved by the case of Mrs. Frank Ford, of Calgary, Alta. Mrs. Ford says: "I was an almost helpless cripple from rheumatism. It seemed to have settled in every joint. My arms and hands had to be bandaged. My ankles were so swollen that I had to use crutches. After doctoring for a long time and growing steadily worse, the doctor advised me to go to Banff Springs. I stayed there for eight weeks taking daily baths and returned home poorer in pocket by about $150 and not one bit improved in health. I then entered a local hospital, but did not derive any benefit. I was in such constant pain that I almost wished to die, and I felt sure I would be a lifelong cripple. It was at this stage that a friend who had been greatly benefitted by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills urged me to try them. I began the use of the Pills and after taking them a few weeks the swelling in the joints began to go down and the pain was relieved. This greatly encouraged me and I continued the treatment until in the course of three months the cure was complete. I had thrown away the crutches, could walk anywhere and do my own housework, and I never felt better in my life than I do at present time, and all this is due to the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I have also given the Pills to my daughter who suffered from anaemia and she has gained in flesh and become a strong, healthy girl."

If you are suffering from rheumatism or any weakness of the blood give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial and they will speedily restore you to health and strength. BULLET-PROOF GARMENTS.

Steel Head and Chest Guards Save Soldiers.

The military chiefs of the great nations entered the war a year ago with the settled conviction that any form of protection for the soldier's body against the missiles of destruction would be vain and valueless. It was not long, however, before the German soldier, who had received a forage cap to do his fighting in, was clamoring for his patent leather helmet, spike and all. The very practical French soldier began wearing at times any lightweight metal vessel that would fit his head. On both sides, but chiefly on that of the Germans, special chest protectors were being worn.

In European countries where military conscription is in force inventors for years have been working on bullet-proof garments. While in America a certain type of inventor devotes his time to producing a perpetual motion device, in Europe the same type works on an impenetrable waistcoat and becomes the butt of all the jokesmiths.

In the early days of the war it was found that soldiers received an exceptionally high percentage of head wounds and the French war authorities took official cognizance of the fact. But while they were studying the matter the French soldier was quick to see a remedy. He improvised a head covering with tin cans, saucepans, anything that would fit. Finally the lid of his canteen was requisitioned. This was worn, not, of course, in the charge, but in the watchful waiting of the trench.

It served to weaken the blow of projectiles, and was even quite efficient against those shrapnel bullets and high explosive fragments which came over the trench parapet almost spent or weakened in force by ricochetting.

The French war department, impressed by the utility even of a canteen lid, gave an order for the immediate manufacture of 700,000 light metal head protectors. These cost only 7 cents each, but they allowed the canteen lid to go back to its prosaic employment and they served for a valuable experiment. A record was kept, and it was found that this new headgear was successful in sixty cases out of one hundred.

Recent photographs from the front of soldiers in action have showed some French soldiers with breast protectors. The Germans also are wearing them to a considerable extent, and it is understood that the hostility of the authorities to them does not now exist.

"I see that somebody says many a man is a poet without knowing it." Well, that's something we've got to be thankful for."

LIFE AT THE DARDANELLES.

Scotch Soldier Gives Wonderful Pen Picture of Fighting.

The following description of trench life at the Dardanelles was written by a soldier, aged 21, to his mother in Scotland:

The chatter of the trenches is wonderfully cheerful; a mail from home, football, racing, reminiscences of festive occasions, and little happenings of the fight are all occasions for cheery banter. Then, of course, there is the greasing—not kitten, but all as a part of the day's work. For the eye, all around the blue-grey muddy trench bank, sun-dried and parched, occasional glimpses of dusty plane trees, old Achi Baba's wicked top. And the men, some on lookout duty at periscopes and rifles ready for every offering target; others cleaning their rifles, mending their clothes, reading books, cooking, smoking, or eating. A queer, narrow life, but full of quiet interests. The sun blazes overhead, the guns boom, the shells scream and burst, the rifles crackle and the bullets whistle, and the silly drama of war goes on while good men die. Stretcher parties make their way along the narrow path with their sorry burdens, voices are hushed, for a pal is badly hit. Oh! the pity of it all.

All but the lookouts asleep, sprawling in the dust in attitudes of deep fatigue. Very little smoking, hushed voices, queer shadows, and the red flash of rifles. Such is the night picture. Officers and working parties move stealthily about, picking their way among the sleeping figures, as considerate as possible, but sometimes evoking from somnolent humanity an outburst of unexpected trenchese. Suddenly up goes a flare, and all the queer picture becomes more queer in the varied chiaroscura of intense localized light.

SLUGS HARD.

Tea and Coffee Are Sure and Powerful.

Let the tea or coffee slave be denied his cup at its appointed time! Headache—sick stomach—fatigue, etc.

"Strange that thinking, reasoning beings will persist in the use of coffee," says a Western man.

He says further that he did not begin drinking coffee until he was twenty years old, and that slowly it began to poison him, and affect his hearing through his nervous system. (Tea produces about the same effects as coffee, because they both contain the drugs, caffeine and tannin.)

"Finally, I quit coffee and the conditions slowly disappeared, but one cold morning the smell of my wife's coffee was too much for me and I took a cup. Soon I was drinking my regular allowance, tearing down brain and nerves by the daily dose of the nefarious beverage.

"Later I found my breath coming hard, had frequent fits of nausea, and then I was taken down with bilious fever.

"Common sense came to me and I quit coffee for good and went back to Postum. I at once began to gain and have had no returns of my bilious symptoms, headache, dizziness, or vertigo.

"I now have health, bright thoughts, and added weight, where before there was invalidism and the blues.

"My brother quit coffee because of its effect on his health and now uses Postum. He could not stand the nervous strain while using coffee, but keeps well on Postum." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

"LADY KITTY" IS TURK'S BRIDE.

Daughter of Lord Beresford Married Edward Blacque Bey.

The romantic marriage of Miss Kathleen Beresford, the daughter of Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, took place more than a year ago, but is just becoming generally known. Shortly before the war broke out, Miss Kathleen, married Edward Blacque Bey, a young Turkish diplomat who was born in the United States, when his father was Turkish Ambassador in Washington. He is the brother of Richard Blacque Pasha, Councillor of the Turkish Ambassador in Vienna, also born in America, who married in the summer of 1911 Miss Josephine Kahlmann, the daughter of Arnold Kahlmann, a millionaire of St. Paul, Minn.

Miss Kathleen Beresford, known among her own circle as "Lady Kitty," came over from London to act as Miss Kahlmann's bridesmaid at St. Paul, and she afterwards spent considerable time with Dr. and Mrs. Blacque in Berlin and Vienna. Her own marriage took place very quietly. It is stated, as the war was looming near, and shortly afterward the bride and bridegroom left England through fear of encountering the misfortunes of the "allers." Miss Kathleen had, of course, become a subject of the Sultan upon her marriage, and her husband, an officer in the army of his country, was liable to arrest and detention in a concentration camp.

They are now in Vienna, and Miss Kathleen is outspoken in her denunciation of the war, blaming all the diplomats indiscriminately for her exile from Great Britain. She is much attached to her father, Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, and was his companion for yachting parties and various kinds of sport. She is a petite, pretty brunette, with the typical charm and wit of the Irish maiden and at Waterford, in Ireland, the seat of her father's family, at whose head is the Marquis of Waterford, "Lady Kitty" is much beloved.

Edward Blacque, like his brother, Dr. Richard Blacque, was educated in England and France. Their mother was an English lady and their father a man of great distinction in his generation.

TROLLOPE THE HUNTSMAN.

Sometimes Got Into Difficulties When Out With the Hounds.

In the recently published biography of Anthony Trollope, by Mr. T. H. S. Escott, there appears a characteristic anecdote of the novelist. Trollope was always an enthusiastic huntsman, but since he had a rather heavy seat, and was obliged to wear glasses, he sometimes got into difficulties when out with the hounds. "His popularity in the field," writes Mr. Escott, "generally brought him timely relief in answer to his call.

"On one occasion he had been making up lost ground after a fall in the middle of a ploughed field. The fellow sportsman who answered to his cry was no less a personage than the present field marshal, Sir Evelyn Wood. 'For heaven's sake,' exclaimed Trollope, 'be careful! I am afraid to move lest I should trample on my spectacles, which have just fallen off my nose!'

"Quick as thought the future field marshal alighted from his horse and retrieved the glasses. Having fitted them to his nose, Trollope rejoined the hunt with as much serenity as if the little accident had never occurred."

Of course the average man is above the average. If you doubt it, ask him.

Wonder where the men who talk to themselves get the idea that they are brilliant conversationalists?

Father—There, now, look pleasant, boys; here's a penny for each of you! (After the picture is taken) Finely done; now give me the pennies back again.

Weight of a Grain of Wheat.

The grain, as a measure of weight, has its name from being originally the weight of a grain of wheat. A statute passed in England in 1266 ordained that thirty-two grains of wheat taken from the middle of the ear and well dried, should make a penny-weight, twenty of which should make an ounce, while 12 ounces went to make a pound. The pound, therefore, consisted then of 7,680 grains. But several centuries later the penny-weight was divided into twenty-four grains, which made the troy pound 5,760 grains. The pennyweight was the exact weight of a silver penny. The standar grain was prescribed by act of parliament in the reign of George IV.

Fifty years ago Florence was the capital of Italy.

Rubber Sheets for Ships.

The loss of the Lusitania, draws attention once again to the possibility of rubber as a sheathing or lining for the hulls of ships to avert or minimise a catastrophe such as that which then occurred. A good deal of research is understood to have taken place more or less on these lines, and the granting of patents for apparently hopeful devices has been mentioned from time to time. Experiments have shown conclusively that rubber is almost invulnerable to explosive attacks, and the application of the principle to shipping does not seem to present insurmountable difficulty.

PAISLEY, SEPT. 23rd, 1915

Rev. John MacNeill to go to London, England

The London Times is quoted in a despatch to The Toronto Globe as saying that Rev. John MacNeill, of Walmer Road Baptist Church, Toronto, would be asked to become preacher in the City Temple, London, one of Britain's famous Non-Conformist churches. Rev. R. J. Campbell, the present occupant of the Temple pulpit, is now going on active service in the war, and as Rev. John MacNeill supplied for Rev. Mr. Campbell for three successive summers in recent years, it is quite probable that the call will be extended to this brilliant Bruce County man who is widely known as "one of the most prominent of the younger men of the Baptist Church."

Liquor Case Dismissed

One of the local option charges against T. F. Pearce, heard before Justices J. C. Gibson and J. A. Chapman on Thursday last, was dismissed, while the other was adjourned until Thursday of this week, and may not be finally disposed of for another week or ten days. The first charge arose out of the search of Mr. Pearce's premises on Aug. 10th by Messrs Leitch and Stewart, when six bottles of whiskey and a case of beer were found in the house. This being considered a large quantity for a private supply, Mr. Pearce was charged with selling liquor. Several witnesses were examined, and plenty of evidence given to show that liquor had been freely disposed of at Pearce's garage, but those who obtained it said drunk it there all aware that they did not pay for it. Friendly drinks with a little party of three or four, after a ride in defendant's car, or to a single individual who happened around and gave a helping hand at fixing the car or merely dropped in to have a chat, was all that the evidence could be made to show. There was no transaction in which booze was exchanged for money or its equivalent. Mr. Pearce stated that he had been advised several years ago to take an occasional drink for his health's sake. When he disposed of the cheering wet goods in the manner mentioned by witnesses and acknowledged by himself, it was handed out in a purely friendly way. A genial, generous host was he. Though the calls were somewhat frequent, the garage owner was always found to be as hospitable as a Scottish laird. With a view to meeting what looked like circumvention, Mr. Mickle, counsel for the prosecution, asked that the charge be changed to one of keeping for sale. This was done, but was not sufficient to secure a conviction, the magistrates dismissing the charge. When the second charge was proceeded with it was brought to a standstill by the non-appearance of an important witness, hence the adjournment. This charge is for selling liquor, and is based on the finding of an empty whiskey bottle and another partly full of that liquor, when a second search of the Pearce premises was made on Aug 23rd. Mr. Robertson, of Walkerton, appeared for defendant.

Death of Pte. Thos. Archer

On Thursday last a message came to the Archer family from the commander at Niagara training camp that Pte. Thos. Archer was very ill, and asking that his friends take him home. His brothers, Wm. A. and Albert left for Niagara on Friday, reaching there at 3 p.m., only to find that the camp officials had sent him to Toronto by a boat which left there only half an hour before their arrival. His illness and subsequent death was due apparently to mental depression, as he had been in a very depressed condition for some days at camp, refusing to eat any food. After being taken to the hospital he lapsed into an unconscious condition from which he did not rally, and death occurred on Sunday night. The deceased was a son of Mrs. Archer, 13th Bruce, and was 40 years of age. He learned the blacksmithing with Mr. M. Daniel, and for about 15 years has been working at different places in Ontario, latterly at the Soo. He enlisted at Port Arthur and joined the 79th Batt. for overseas service. The remains were brought to Paisley on Tuesday, and the funeral takes place from the home of his brother, Mr. A. E. Archer, Albert St., on Wednesday after noon, to Stark Vale Cemetery. Service at the house at 2 o'clock.

From Pte. Sam Fleming in Belgium Trenches

Ping St, Belgium, Aug 27th

To the Editor of THE ADVOCATE:

Well, Mack, I got THE ADVOCATE yesterday for the second time in the trench. Last trip we were in the firing line seven days. Our engineers blew up the German sappers that trip. I thought we were in for a go with them, but nothing came off outside some sniping. We had seven or eight casualties. This time we had Saxons on our front. The second morning I was on a listening post in the crater where they blew up the mine, and heard our boys yelling over "Hello, Fritz, what have you got for breakfast?" So I bowed my head up to see what was doing. The Germans were all on top of the parapet waving at us. They waved for us to meet them half way, so I up and out to meet them. Had a great shake hands with four of them, and traded jack knives, coat buttons, tobacco and badges. We got fits from our officers. Two of them were put up on the carpet for it. We are going out of the firing line tonight for a rest. A fellow gets tired of this sitting in the trenches watching for Fritz to come over, but he has been quiet since he got fleeced at Ypres the last time. We could hear them at it from here. They are full up of the fighting here. We have lots of artillery here. They are throwing a few shrapnel over now. They make a fellow duck his head at first, but we soon get used to them. It makes a fellow think when on watch, over where the German sappers are at work and do not know when they may blow you sky high. A fellow would never need any burying, as he would never be seen again. Our fellows got a dozen German sappers last time we were in here. I am glad I will be out of this at four o'clock to-night. One thing, we are well fed, with lots of tobacco free, and about two hours' sleep out of every twenty-four while in the trench. I will finish this to-morrow from the piggery about a mile back in the woods.

Well, Mack, this is better this morning. A fellow can stretch his legs here and have a stroll around. We are in the King of Belgium's farm stables. His hunting grounds are between us and the trenches. We go through them to our trenches, and they make great cover from the German guns. We carry our rations about a mile through them every day.

I think this is one of the best countries under the sun outside of old Canada. There are great crops here. A man would not believe unless he saw them. They grow four times as much on a piece of ground as we do in Canada. I have seen wheat a good six feet high. I pitched on a load the last time we were in billets for a Belgian farmer.

Well, Mack, this is pretty rough work in this letter but it was written within thirty yards of the German trench. You can take the best part out of this for a letter for The Advocate as I have not seen any letters from the front in it since we came over. Hoping I will see this in about six weeks from now. We get our mail every day in the trenches. I think this will be all this time.

Good-bye, with best wishes to all in Paisley. I guess we will have to thresh Germans this fall instead of grain in Bruce County.

Extracts from the Motor Vehicle Act of Ontario

In view of the disregard of regulation in the driving of automobiles, some extracts from the Motor Vehicle Act of the Ontario Legislature are given herewith:

No person shall for hire drive a motor vehicle on a highway, unless he has procured a license to do so from the Provincial Secretary. The license must be produced when demanded by a peace officer.

Every such vehicle must be equipped with an alarm bell, gong or horn, and the same shall be sounded approaching crossings and whenever reasonably necessary to notify pedestrians or others of its approach.

After dusk or before dawn every motor vehicle must carry on the front a lighted lamp in a conspicuous position.

A motor bicycle must have on the back a marker furnished by the provincial secretary, showing in plain figures, not less than 3 inches in height, the number of the permit of such bicycle.

Every motor vehicle, other than a motor bicycle, while being driven on a highway, shall have attached to and exposed on the front and back thereof in a conspicuous position a marker furnished by the provincial secretary, showing in plain figures not less than five inches in height, the number of the permit. The marker on the front to be as far forward and to be as high from the ground as will render it distinctly visible, and the marker on the back so placed that the lower edge will not be lower than the body of the motor itself. A lamp must be so placed as to illuminate conspicuously at all times between dusk and dawn the number placed on the back of the vehicle. The numbers must be kept free from dirt and destruction.

No motor vehicle shall be driven upon any highway within a city, town or village at a greater speed than 15 miles an hour, or on other highways at more than 20 miles an hour. Anyone who drives recklessly or negligently, at any speed, or in any manner dangerous to the public, having regard to all the circumstances, shall be guilty of an offence under the act.

No person shall drive a motor vehicle upon a highway in a race or on a bet or wager.

No person under the age of 18 years shall drive a motor vehicle.

No intoxicated person shall drive a motor vehicle.

Reasonable precaution must be taken to prevent the frightening of horses, and outside the limits of any city or town a horse must not be approached, if going in the opposite direction, at a greater rate of speed than 7 miles an hour. If going in the same direction, signal shall be given to the driver of the desire to pass, so that the passing may be done safely. If necessary, the motor vehicle or motor shall remain stationary as long as may be necessary to allow such rider or driver to pass. In case the animal appears to be frightened, the occupants of the motor vehicle shall render assistance to the rider or driver.

If an accident occurs to any person through the presence of a motor vehicle on the highway, the person in charge of the motor vehicle shall return to the scene of the accident and give his name and address in writing to the person sustaining loss or injury.

Penalties for infraction of the provisions of the act run from $10 and $50 for the first offence up to imprisonment not exceeding six months.

Section 285 of the Criminal Code reads as follows: Everyone is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, having the charge of any carriage or vehicle, by wanton or furious driving, or racing or other wilful misconduct, or by wilful neglect, does or causes to be done any bodily harm to any person.

A MYTH ABOUT LIFE

Probably it was Jason Flintax—with his neighbor's clothes under his arm and a memory of the time his neighbor saved him from a bear in his troubled mind—who invented the notion that life is awfully complex. People have gone on embroidering that idea ever since. The notion that life gets more complex the more machines there are is now pretty firmly rooted.

We do not suppose that life, in fact, is any more complex now than it was in Adam's day, or that it was ever, in its big outlines, anything but a very simple affair. If you will consider it candidly a moment you will probably agree that for you in the big interests that count most for real success or failure, it is quite simple. You know whether you are going wrong or right. If you think you do not know, just take yourself into the woodshed for five minutes and listen carefully to what yourself says about it. Of course you may commit errors of business judgment and thereby be less successful than if you had judged correctly; but you know well enough that is not the big question.

The complexity is really a delusion. Thanks to modern inventions you can elope with your stenographer by steam road, electric road, automobile, jitney bus or airship; but the important choice in the matter is as simple as it was when all travelling was done on foot. You can dubitate a long while over the hundred and one varieties a modern barroom offers, but the essential choice is what it was to Noah, with only a single brand.

You know whether you are right or wrong.

West Sure to Go Dry, Says Hon. Edward Brown

Canada's three great western provinces, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, will all be dry in the not far distant future, in the opinion of Hon. Edward Brown, Provincial Treasurer in the Manitoba Government, who was in Toronto last week.

"I look ahead, not so very far distant, either, and see prohibition in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba," said Mr. Brown. "The Manitoba measure will probably be voted on early in December, and I think it will carry." He pointed out that Alberta would be dry next July, and that Saskatchewan's new system was likely to result in prohibition. "In Manitoba now all bars close at 7 o'clock in the evening," he stated. He explained that under the private control the liquor consumption in Saskatchewan was $50,000 a day, and now it is $2,000 a day.

Mr. Brown is in Toronto on business for his Government.

The people of the west were interested in three things now: Transportation of crops at reasonable rates, Government insurance as in Great Britain, which did some underwriting when the war broke out, and favorable access to United States markets. "We look to the Dominion Government for action," he stated. "The western farmer is entitled to every dollar he can get for his wheat, and there should be no obstacles in his way."

SUFFERED EVERYTHING

For Years, Restored To Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Canadian women are continually writing us such letters as the two following, which are heartfelt expressions of gratitude for restored health:

Glanford Station, Ont.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and never found any medicine to compare with it. I had ulcers and falling of womb and doctors did me no good. I suffered dreadfully for years until I began taking your medicine. I also recommend it for nervousness and indigestion." — Mrs. HENRY CLARK, Glanford Station, Ont.

Chesterville, Ont. — "I heard your medicines highly praised, and a year ago I began taking them for falling of womb and ovarian trouble.

"My left side pained me all the time and just before my periods which were irregular and painful it would be worse. To sit down caused me pain and suffering and I would be so nervous sometimes that I could not bear to see any one or hear any one speak. Little specks would float before my eyes and I was always constipated.

"I cannot say too much for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, for there are no medicines like them. I have taken them and I recommend them to all women. You may publish this testimonial." — Mrs. STEPHEN J. MARTIN, Chesterville, Ontario, Canada.

JACKSON—MacLEOD

On September 18, in Bonar Presbyterian Church, Toronto, the marriage of Florence B., daughter of the late Alex. MacLeod of Paisley, to William Jackson of New York, was solemnized by the Rev. Alex. Macgillivray. The bride, who was given away by her uncle, Mr. John MacLeod, of Kincardine, wore a white chiffon dress and lingerie veil. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson have gone to Niagara Falls, Albany and Bermuda, the bride travelling in a navy blue suit and large black velvet hat. They will live in New York.

Their Home Destroyed

The friends of Mr. Edward Passmore and family, formerly of lot 8, con. 10, Bruce Tp., who went to Saskatchewan a few years ago, will regret to learn of the serious loss they have suffered by the burning of their home. The fire occurred on a Saturday evening at 8:30 o'clock. Mrs. Passmore, who was at home alone, the rest of the family being at Woodrow, had put some fine coal on the fire and was keeping the supper warm. There was an explosion shortly after, a piece of the stove striking Mrs. Passmore on the head, partially stunning her, and while she was able to escape from the building and carry some small articles with her, the house and contents were a total loss. The house was worth fully $1,000 and was insured for $400. The contents, worth as much more, were insured for $450. The loss is a particularly serious one, and while neighbors are rendering every assistance in their power, it will take a long time to get things into anything like their former state of comfort.

A Pair of Die-Hards

A capital little story is told of two Lucknow devotees of the bowling green who attended the recent tournament at Walkerton. Their rink had lost and the pair had retired to the quiet of their room and gone to bed. Owing to the crowded condition of the house they had to double up—both occupying the one bed. The game was being played over again in imagination and conversation, in which ways it is so fatally easy to play well and win. Presently a dispute arose as to which of the two was the better player. In imagination each could see himself laying a shot right up against the "cat," putting on just the right kind of a guard, in short, playing all round his antagonist. Neither would yield an iota, they couldn't sleep and they couldn't wait. So up they got at 2.30 a.m., and away they went to the bowling green to settle the dispute in the only one way. The bowled, but it wasn't as easy on the green as it had been on the pillow, and one, of course, had to acknowledge defeat. Then they walked back to the hotel, crawled into bed and slept the sleep of the satisfied. These men should be sent to the war.—Lucknow Sentinel.

CHAPTER IX.

Eighteen months have passed since Mark Sutherland left his home. Eighteen months of persevering study, of unsuccessful efforts, and of varied wanderings, find him, at the close, in Cincinnati, quite penniless and nearly hopeless. His efforts to find employment here are unavailing. He has not even the means to pay his board.

In a listless and disappointed mood, Mark Sutherland entered the reading-room of the hotel, and, taking up the daily papers, began to look over their columns. At last, in the Intelligencer, his eye lighted upon an advertisement for a classical and mathematical teacher.

He called for writing materials, and immediately wrote and mailed a letter of application. He was scarcely anxious about the result—only a little interested to know whether he should get the situation.

At length—as generally happens after expectation sickens and dies—the unlooked-for letter arrived. It contained a proposition from Colonel Ashley, of Virginia, to engage Mr. Sutherland as private tutor, to prepare his two younger sons for the university, offering, in remuneration, a very liberal salary, and requesting, in the event of Mr. Sutherland's acceptance, that he would reply promptly and follow his own letter in person as soon as possible.

Mark sat down and wrote at once, closing the contract, and promising to be at Ashley by the first of March.

It was now near the last of February. He sold his trunk, paid his bill at the hotel, and having money enough remaining to take him to Virginia, left the same afternoon by the steamboat up the river and by the stage at Wheeling. After two or three days' travelling through the most sublime and beautiful mountain and valley scenery in the world, he arrived, late one evening, at the little hamlet of Ashley, situated in a wild and picturesque gap of the Blue Ridge.

Here, at the little inn, he shortened supper, and purposed to spend the night. But he had scarcely entered the little bedroom allotted to him before the head of the host was put through the door, and the information given that Colonel Ashley's carriage had come to meet Mr. Sutherland.

He found the parlor occupied by two boys, of about thirteen and fifteen years of age. The elder lad, cap in hand, inquired respectfully:

"Are you Mr. Sutherland, sir?"

"Yes, my son; have you business with me?"

"Father has sent the carriage for you, sir. My name is Henry—he's Richard. St. Gerald, you know, is in Washington. He is in Congress, you know, and has made a great speech—"

"Oh, sho! He's a great deal older than we are; and he's only our half-brother besides. You don't know everything," said the younger boy. Richard, addressing the last phrase to his brother.

"I am happy to meet you, Henry—how do you do, Richard?" said Mr. Sutherland, giving a hand to each of the boys.

"And so this eloquent and admired St. Gerald Ashley is a relative of yours?"

"Our brother," said Henry.

"Our half-brother," amended Richard.

Hereupon another scuffle ensued, which Mr. Sutherland ended by saying:

"Come—shall we go on to Ashley Hall, or will you take supper first here with me?"

"Take supper first here with you."

"It was kind to come and meet me. But how did you guess that I should arrive this evening?"

"Oh, we did not guess. Father thought it about time you should come and he sent the carriage. Father would have come himself, only he stayed home to read St. Gerald's great speech."

"St. Gerald" was the hero of Henry's worship.

While they supped, their horses were fed and watered. It was quite dark when the carriage drew up before the door of a large, rumbling old building of red sandstone, scarcely to be distinguished from the irregular masses of rock rising behind and around it. A bright light illumined the hall, where the travelers were received by a negro man in waiting. Henry and Richard, breaking violently forward, threw open the door upon the right, exclaiming:

"Father is here. He is come, father!"

A genial wood fire blazed and crackled in the wide, old-fashioned chimney of this room; and near it sat an old gentleman, engaged in reading a newspaper. He calmly laid aside his paper and stood up, slightly trembling with partial paralysis, but received Mr. Sutherland with the fine courtesy of an old-school gentleman.

The boys hurried about their own business.

The man-servant placed an arm-chair for Mr. Sutherland, and when the latter was fairly seated, the old gentleman resumed his own seat.

A stand, with wine, sandwiches, cake and fruit was placed between them; and while they discussed these, the old gentleman, in an indifferent sort of manner, said:

"By the way, Mr. Sutherland, have you seen Monday's paper, with the debate on the tariff? Here it is; look over it. If anything strikes you, just read it aloud, will you?"

Mark found the "debate" to be all on one side, and in the mouth of one individual, to wit, Hon. St. Gerald Ashley, of Virginia. He ran his eye over it—the old man pretending to eat, not to interrupt him.

"Do you wish me to read this debate aloud, sir?" asked Mark.

"Yes, yes," said the old man, smiling, and crumbling crackers; "yes, if it will not tire you."

"Oh, by no means," answered Mark, and began.

The celebrated speech was indeed a masterpiece, and Mark Sutherland was an admirable elocutionist. He read, became deeply interested, and before long was betrayed by the old man's enthusiasm and his sympathy into declamation, interrupted now and then by Colonel Ashley exclaiming: "That's it! Hear, hear!"

Finally, laughing at the fever into which he had worked himself and his hearer, Mark finished and laid down the paper. It was past eleven o'clock."

"Thank you, sir. You have given me a treat. It was as good as if I had heard it spoken." Soon after he rang for a servant to show Mr. Sutherland to his room.

Early next morning Mark Sutherland arose. And with the restlessness of a heart ill at ease, he walked out upon the grounds, and reviewed from the bitter retrospections of the past in the novel aspect of the country around him.

There was something startling and inspiriting in the abrupt, fastern, rugged, yet vigorous and productive aspect of this mountainous region.

The Ashley plantation filled the whole of a small valley, shut between two curving spurs of the Alleghanies, and watered by a branch of the Rappahannock. The Ashley house, an irregular but massive building of red sandstone, was situated at the foot of the mountain; behind it arose sheer, rocky rucks, intermingled or covered by dark evergreens of pine and cedar; before it, at some distance, flowed the branch; around on every side were gardens, shrubberies, orchards, wheat and cornfields, and half concealed by trees or jutting rocks were the negro quarters; in the midst of the open fields stood the barns and granaries. The plantation was an independent, isolated little domain in itself.

There was a solid, jolly old homeliness about it, very comfortable in contrast to those other scenes. Mark felt this while contemplating the old home.

He was interrupted by Henry and Richard Ashley, who seized the one his right hand and the other his left, and boisterously informed that breakfast was ready, and had "been waiting ever so long."

He returned their greeting and accompanied them to the breakfast-table, which was set in the old oak parlor where he had passed the evening.

Two ladies, in simple, graceful morning dresses of white cambric, sat near the fire, occupied with needle-work; Colonel Ashley stood with his back to the chimney, with the paper in his hand.

On seeing Mr. Sutherland, the old gentleman conducted him to the ladies, saying: "My dears, this is Mr. Sutherland; Mr. Sutherland, my—"

But before another syllable was spoken the elder lady had lifted her face, started up with a blush of pleasure, and extended her hand, exclaiming:

"Mark Sutherland! Is it possible!"

"Mrs. Vivian! Miss Vivian!" exclaimed Mark, extending a hand to each, impulsively.

"Why, how strange that we should meet here!" said Valeria.

"A most pleasant surprise!" responded Mark.

"The surprise as well as the pleasure is mutual, I assure you! But how did it happen?"

"I am sure I do not know."

"Nor I. Can you guess, Rose?" and Mrs. Vivian turned to her step-daughter, who remained silent, with her fingers in the clasp of Mark Sutherland's hand.

"I inquired only in jest, but now I do believe you could tell," persisted the lady, looking intently at the maiden.

Rosalie's pale face slightly flushed; she withdrew her hand, resumed her seat, and took up her work. Colonel Ashley expressed no surprise at this reunion; but, as with stately courtesy he handed his niece to the head of the table, said: "As Mrs. Vivian arrived only yesterday afternoon and retired at once, and as Mr. Sutherland reached here last night, there has been no time for conversation about our arrangements."

"Ah, yes; that's all very well; but you'll never make me believe that Rose is not at the bottom of this, somehow," laughed the widow. Her eyes met those of Rosalie for an instant, and the spirit of mischief was quelled.

Colonel Ashley invited Mr. Sutherland to his study, where he began to unfold his plan for the education of his boys. Mark inquired when he should enter upon his new duties, and requested to defer the commencement until Monday.

The interview then closed. Colonel Ashley told Mr. Sutherland that he would find the ladies in the parlor, and bade him good-morning.

Mark opened the parlor door and saw and heard the fragment of an earnest conversation between the mother and daughter. Mrs. Vivian sat upon the sofa. She was nimbly and nervously stitching away at a piece of muslin embroidery.

Rosalie sat on a cushion before her, with her hands and her needlework fallen idly on her lap, and her pale hair fallen back from her paler upturned brow and earnest eyes, that were fixed upon her mother's. She was asking in open accents: "Oh, mamma! can this be possible?"

"Not only possible, but true, Rose!" replied the lady.

"Oh, mamma! do not let him meet such a shock; prepare him for it, mamma."

"I cannot; how could I? Hush—here he is," said she, perceiving Mark. And all was changed!

"Come in, Mark. Draw that easy chair up here to the sofa, and sit down."

Mr. Sutherland took the indicated seat.

"It is surprising that we should all meet here unexpectedly in Alleghany County," said Mrs. Vivian:

"I certainly had not anticipated such a pleasure. I did not know that you were related to Colonel Ashley."

"Colonel Ashley is Rosalie's great-uncle—her mother's uncle. Colonel Ashley's daughter was married last year, and Rosalie was invited to take her abdicated place. Last winter was rather too cold for her here. I spent the season in Washington. Next winter I intend to take Rose to Louisiana with me."

"Indeed, mamma, you shall not immolate your happiness upon my health. You shall just spend your winters in Washington, where you enjoy life so much, and your summers at the watering-places, where you meet again your gay and brilliant friends. You shall visit me in the spring and autumn intervals."

"Oh, a truce, Rosalie! I rather think I like you, child, and prefer to see you well. There's Robert with the horses already, Rosalie; the morning is really cold; and don't let him take you for, child. He would not imagine he had tired you to death till you had dropped from your horse."

Rosalie arose and left the room, smiling to a young man who entered as she left. "Mr. Bloomfield," said the lady, presenting him to Mr. Sutherland. Mr. Bloomfield was a sufficiently pleasing specimen of a well-bred country beau—moderately tall, broad-shouldered and deep-chested, with regular features, fresh, ruddy complexion, clear, merry blue eyes, and lips whose every curve expressed the good humor and benevolence of a kind, contented heart.

"You mustn't take Rose far, Robert."

"I will take her only to mother's."

"And you shan't tease her with any more nonsense! I can't put up with that, you know."

Robert Bloomfield blushed violently and, to his great relief, Rosalie appeared, attired for the ride. Mrs. Vivian surveyed Rose; to be sure she was well defended from the cold and finally yielded her in charge of her escort.

Mrs. Vivian and Mark looked at them through the window and saw him place her in the saddle with a careful and tender solicitude, when Mrs. Vivian turned to Mark and said:

"I like that good-humored boy. He is a young man of independent fortune, irreproachable character, fair education, and most excellent disposition, and he has loved Rose for more than a year. Yet he is not worthy of her! He wants polish. He came to see me last winter in Washington, got fitted out by a fashionable tailor, and took him to an evening party. Just think, when presented him to a belle, of his holding out his hands to shake hands with her, telling her he was glad to see her, and hoping that it ever she passed through his part of the country she would pay his mother and sisters a visit, etc. And then, when the elegant Mrs. A. inquired if Mr. Bloomfield waltzed, just fancy him blushing furiously, and saying that he would rather not—that he disapproved of waltzing!"

TO INSURE YOUR CORN CROP BUILD A SILO.

A silo is not only the safest form of crop insurance for the Wisconsin farmer, but is stock insurance as well. The succulent form of feed helps to keep the herd in good health, and insures a milk flow.

The farmers who have silos are not uneasy because of the backwardness of the corn crop. Even if the season has been backward, they are confident that the crop will go into the silo in fine shape for the stock. And many farmers who, before this year, have not thought of investing in silos, are now asking themselves: "What kind shall I build?"

The value of silage as a feed cannot be overestimated during any year; but in a year like this the worth of a silo in making sure an otherwise somewhat doubtful harvest is emphasized.

On the Farm

Common Sense in the Hog Lot.

The question of which breed of swine to select for the economic production of pork is perhaps of less importance to-day than in the past. The leading swine-breeders have begun to recognize the fact that they must shape their favorite breeds to meet market demands. As a natural result, the type of all the leading breeds now conforms to a fixed standard that meets the demands of the packing-houses. The hog that best meets the demand of the present time is a well-muscled hog, that will supply a fair amount of lard, and fat meat well marbled with lean, and be ready for market at any desired age.

Practical pig-owners, and feeders of market hogs look for good quality, depth, length and width of form, and uniformity of type, regardless of the breed, color and characteristic markings. However, it is essential that we select our breeding animals from some well established breed, for promiscuous mating of swine of various types has a tendency to destroy the types of all breeds employed in the crosses and to throw away the result of years of systematic selecting and mating and perpetuate a certain fixed type in the breed. This point has been illustrated by mating a half Poland China and half Chester White sow with a pure-bred Berkshire boar. The pigs resulting from the cross were red, spotted, speckled, and striped, showing that the cross was lost, and with it the improvements in color and markings. The result was the return of the offspring by the principle of heredity to the original scrub type.

All of our swine, particularly the improved breeds, which are but a modified form of the original, will not produce themselves perfectly unless guided by the hand of man. Whatever breed is selected, should be kept pure, and only the best used for breeding.

The man who makes a specialty of producing pork, should grasp every opportunity to improve his breeding stock, the same as the man who is breeding registered swine.

Uniformity of type is an important thing in the successful management of breeding-hogs, especially near market time, for a uniform bunch of hogs will bring more money on any market than a mixed lot. A pure-bred lot of hogs are much more apt to mature together and please discriminating buyers.

In selecting a breed we should give particular attention to its adaptability to the environments under which it is to be placed. Some are good rustlers, some are more quiet and better adapted to small feed lots.

The breeds that have proved best suited to our climate and conditions in the hands of farmers and feeders are the safest breeds to invest in. We all have our preferences, our likes and dislikes, our favorite color markings and our hobbies, but from the viewpoint of dollars and cents there is no best breed. All breeds possess many good qualities, and some less desirable ones, and the man who makes a failure with one breed can hardly hope to succeed with another. Judicious care will bring success with any breed.

All practical hog-growers agree that crossing the breeds is a dangerous practice, and that the best results are attained by sticking to one breed. Still, some men still cling to the idea that it is possible to incorporate all the good qualities of the different breeds into a cross-bred animal. It is a disastrous belief if put into practice. There may be certain instances when crossing will give good results, as in the production of pig pork.

The man who is experimenting with the various breeds and crosses, in search of something better than has yet been found, may have a mission, but such line of investigation is not practical for the man who must depend upon the return from his swine-feeding for his farm profits. He is on safer ground if he confines his taste and skill to improving one well established breed and leaves the experimenting to the man of leisure and means.

Oats make a fine ration for hogs but as a rule they are too expensive. Fed to sows just after farrowing, oats cannot be surpassed for keeping them in good condition. A feeding floor will save itself in feed and manure in a single year, provided it is made of waste material around the farm.

A cement feeding floor is a joy to any lover of swine. It is rather expensive to commence with, but its durability makes it a paying investment in the long run. Brick makes a fairly good feeding floor, but to be effective requires a deep foundation of broken stone, sand and cinders, and this is expensive.

A field of rye sown in the early fall will help out the grain supply wonderfully in the late spring.

It is a prevalent notion that hogs cannot thrive except they have a mud hole in which to wallow. Nonsense! Pigs thrive better on clean pasture, clean floors and clean water than they do in dirty surroundings. In the summer time the hog seeks the mud hole in order to cool himself and to rid himself of the flies, not because he naturally likes mud better than clean water.

Many people imagine that if they give the pigs plenty of skimmed milk they do not need water. Milk changes to solid food almost the moment it enters the pig's stomach and is, therefore, not a substitute for water. It costs nothing to soak hard grain in warm water, and when fed to pigs its digestibility is increased.

There are scores of theories about watering animals, but our experience is that the best judge of the matter is the animal itself. If it can always reach water when it needs it, it will take care of its own wants.

A STOREHOUSE OF WORK.

Tremendous Labors of Sir James Murray on New English Dictionary.

Sir James A. H. Murray may be said to have reared his own monument in that prodigious achievement of the lexicographer's art, the New English Dictionary, the last volume of which was almost ready to go to the press when he died. A task of vaster scope in all the long history of the cult of words was surely never undertaken, says The Boston Herald. Here was a richly endowed scholar who gave 36 years of his life to the search for spellings, meanings, derivations and pronunciations that ran back to the beginnings of English literature. He had his volunteer assistants in every Anglo-Saxon country—several thousands of them—and 5,000 authors of all periods were consulted to supply him with material. At the time his work had to be left for completion to others the stock of quotations accumulated numbered 6,000,000, all written on slips of paper that turned the scale at six tons. And out of this industry and this scholarship comes a dictionary of about 300,000 words.

How much of it will fit into everyday use? A good many of the 300,000 are long obsolete; even of those still in good standing now many do we really need? Shakespeare captured his world audience with about 15,000, and Milton wrote himself into fame with 8,000. It is estimated that the average literary man of to-day uses 4,000, and the "man in the street" not over 2,000. The English country yokels of "slow, bovine gaze" whom George Eliot describes have probably 300 to their credit; the peasants in certain sections of continental Europe are known to live the bucolic life on a vocabulary of about 100 words by actual count.

And yet the people who will nibble thus sparingly at Sir James Murray's great encyclopedia of our language are the very people who dictate dictionaries and supersede them by usage even while they are in the making. It is they who have rendered possible this priceless record of our Anglo-Saxon tongue; it is they, too, who in the years to come will call for fresh surveys of our everliving and everchanging speech. We shall need a New English Dictionary long before Americans have begun to spell phonetically and dub themselves "Usonians."

The word "brat," now a term of contempt, was once an ordinary expression for a small child.

Dainty Dishes.

Italian Potatoes.—To two cups hot mashed potato, add one teaspoon onion juice, one tablespoon finely chopped parsley, one well-beaten egg yolk, four stiffly beaten whites, one-half cup grated cheese, and salt and pepper to taste. Pile lightly in baking dish and brown.

Pineapple and Honey Salad.—Pare one small pineapple and remove eyes. Chip into thin small slices. Beat together three tablespoons olive oil, two tablespoons honey, one tablespoon lemon juice and few grains of salt. Dress pineapple with this, let stand thirty minutes, then serve on lettuce hearts.

Ginger Pudding.—One-half cup molasses, one and one-half tablespoons melted butter, one-half cup sour milk, one teaspoon soda, one and five-eighths cups bread flour, one tablespoon orange juice, one-half tablespoon salt, one-half teaspoon ginger, grated rind one-half orange. Dissolve soda in sour milk, then add other ingredients. Beat all thoroughly, pour into well buttered mold and steam about fifty minutes.

Stuffed Flank Steak.—One flank steak, one sliced onion, one cup soup stock, one-half cup bread crumbs, one tablespoon melted butter, salt, pepper, minced parsley and one teaspoon kitchen bouquet. Remove muscle at one end of steak and score steak across grain. Dust with salt, pepper, parsley and bread crumbs, pour butter over, roll and tie in two or three places. Lay in baking pan or casserole, add onion, stock and kitchin bouquet and bake one-half hour in moderate oven. Remove string and serve.

Sweetbreads With Mushrooms.—Beef sweetbreads are cheaper than calves' sweetbreads, and, cooked rightly, are just as good. They must be cooked longer than the sweetbreads. Soak the breads an hour in salt water. Parboil until tender, break apart, remove veins and skin and put into dripping pan with a few slices of bacon to a pair of sweetbreads, one turnip, one carrot, parsley, celery, a few peppercorns, leaf of mace, and one-half cup water. Add pepper and salt and bake, basting often until well glazed. Remove breads and place on rounds of toast. Strain gravy, thicken with flour and water and add enough kitchen bouquet to make it a nice brown. Add one cup cooked button mushrooms; either fresh or canned. Pour sauce over sweetbreads, garnish with parsley and serve.

Delicious Devil's Food.—One cup butter, one cup granulated sugar, one cup brown sugar, one cup milk, four cups flour, one-half cup molasses, one-half cup chocolate, one-half cup boiling water, four eggs, one teaspoon cream of tartar, one-half teaspoon soda, one teaspoon each of allspice, cloves and cinnamon, one-half teaspoon grated nutmeg, two cups raisins, one cup citron, one cup English walnuts. Cream butter and sugars together, add molasses and yolks of eggs and beat thoroughly. Mix spices, cream of tartar and soda in flour. Dissolve grated chocolate in boiling water and add to mixture. Cut up citron and raisins into small pieces, add broken nuts and dust in flour. Lastly add beaten whites of eggs. Bake in three layers in moderate oven and put together with caramel filling. Will keep fresh for months.

Pot Roast of Veal.—Four pounds rump of veal, two ounces suet, one pint stewed tomatoes, three diced carrots, two teaspoons salt, one-eighth teaspoon of pepper. Try out beef drippings in iron kettle and remove cracklings. Put in meat and brown slowly, taking care not to use too much heat, as that will make it stick and burn. When properly colored, remove from pot, season, and add remaining ingredients to drippings. Pour in pint of boiling water or stock, replace meat, and put in bones. Cover tightly and cook slowly from three to four hours. When meat is tender remove and let cool slightly, so that it will not fall apart when cut. Thicken gravy with a tablespoon of flour or corn-starch dissolved in cold water, and allow it to boil for five minutes, strain and season with half-teaspoon Worcestershire sauce. Small shoulder of veal, boned and rolled, can be used in this way.

Useful Hints.

If new stockings are washed before wearing they will wear longer.

Articles should touch each other as little as possible while frying.

Stone jars with tight-fitting covers make excellent bread boxes.

Baked beans will be better if they are parboiled before they are put into the pot for baking.

When frying be sure that the fat is hot enough to answer the test before the article is put in.

Don't throw the feet of chicken away, but clean and skin them carefully and put them in the stock pot.

Keep the dishes containing food closely covered and the refrigerator will be kept free from odors.

If you are using tinned food of any kind empty it into china or glassware at once when it is opened.

Wood alcohol will take vaseline stains from wash goods. Soak them a few minutes in the alcohol.

When a metal teapot is not in use, put a lump of sugar into the pot and this will prevent its becoming musty.

It is a good idea to put a heavy Turkish towel on the bottom of the dishpan when washing fine china or glass.

Warm cake and pie pans and rub the inside with a paraffin wax. This is superior to greasing pans with butter.

The water in which fresh tongue, mutton or chicken has been boiled may be used for soup or added to the stock pot.

If a sugary coat is desired on lemon meringue pie, sift powdered sugar over the top before it is put into the oven.

Don't pour away the water greens have been boiled in until it has become quite cold, otherwise it will leave an unpleasant smell.

If you are going to be away from home for a few days, leave your potted ferns, etc., with water in their saucers so that they will not dry out.

Potatoes are not so apt to rot if the cellar is not kept too warm. Sprinkle air-slaked lime among them and cover them lightly to keep the light away.

A neat pile of heavy cheesecloth squares in the kitchen drawer will save dish towels from getting stained up during the fruit season. They are cheap and easy to hem.

When separating yolks from whites of eggs sometimes a speck of yolk slips into the white. To remove this dip a clean cloth into warm water and wring it dry, touch the speck with the end of this and it will cling to it at once.

There is no better way to keep cider sweet than to keep the air entirely from it. This is very difficult, as each time cider is drawn air will get in. With ordinary sweet cider put into as small a vessel as is convenient what will be needed for immediate use and many like vessels.

For a fancy work or sewing apron use colored cloth instead of white. The color is helpful and restful to the eyes, especially if green is used. Green silk or plain green chambray are excellent materials to use, offering a restful contrast to the white materials upon which one is so often working.

One of the many dainty articles that can be made from handkerchiefs is a collar for a child. The handkerchief may be either silk or muslin hemstitched. Fold in the shape of a triangle, cut a round out of the centre for the neck, and down through one point. Hem neatly round the neck and along the cut edge. Sew a frill of lace round the lower edges, or if liked it can be crocheted with silk lace threads. Work the border and round the neck and down the fronts with a fancy stitching in white or colored washing silk.

DYE CAVALRY HORSES.

Rendered Inconspicuous at a Distance When Painted.

French war horses will soon all be painted a color called here "horizon blue," which is found to render them as inconspicuous as possible at a distance. Stained with a new tint, horses will merge into the landscape in a remarkable manner.

The problem of making the horses invisible, or nearly so, was solved by Dr. Lepinay, of the Society of Comparative Pathology, to which the French War Department had appealed.

Permanganate of potash was tried by the War Department to color horses; but it proved unsatisfactory because it was irritating to the animal and was of little use unless applied to the horse before he shed his hair.

Dr. Rueland, a recognized authority, devised the use of picric acid for giving horses a khaki color. The acid, an excellent antiseptic, especially serviceable for burns, has proved to be without irritating effect on the horse.

It has been suggested, however, that the aim should be to approximate the horse's color as closely as possible to that of the soldier's uniform.

All unprepared for the war, they had been obliged to send their men into the field in highly conspicuous colors—dark blue tunics and red caps and trousers.

The garb of the French troops is now of a "horizon blue," an attractive shade at close view and as nearly as possible invisible at a distance. The question then was how to give this "horizon blue" tint to the horses.

Dr. Lepinay gets the color by mixing methylene blue in a special way with tannin. Experiments show that it neither is toxic nor irritating to the horse. Care must be taken in applying it to raise the hairs and work it into the grain.

THUNDER TIPS.

In a Flat Country Thunder Peals Are Loudest.

Lightning is accumulated electricity discharged from the clouds. Thunder is the noise made by the concussion of the air when it closes, or "bangs to" after it has been parted by the lightning flash.

A certain part of the noise is due to chemical air changes produced by the electric fluid. When thunder seems like one vast crash it is because the lightning cloud is near the earth and the sound vibrations reach the ear at the same moment, and so seem like one sound.

An irregular broken roar of "heaven's artillery" means that the lightning cloud is distant, and the thunder noise vibrations, having further to travel, reach the ear at different times. Sound takes a second to travel 380 yards.

When thunder "growls" the storm is further distant still. What is called "rolling" thunder is due to the echoes of the peal reverberating among masses of clouds and terrestrial objects.

Not all know that the reason why summer lightning is so often without thunder is that the disturbance is so far away that the sound of the thunder is lost—that is, the vibrations are exhausted—before they can reach us.

It is in a flat country that thunder peals are heard at their best. Hills and mountains break the peals and make them harsh and irregular.

It may seem a pity to destroy the belief in "thunderbolts," but, as a matter of fact, there are no such things. Thunderbolts, so called, are globular lightning.

Other "bolts"—"fulgurites" really—are due to the fusing of flinty matter in sandy soils by the action of the lightning.

Thunder storms are generally preceded by hot weather, and followed by cold, showery weather.

The Queen of Bulgaria

THE most recent photograph of Eleanore, Queen of Bulgaria, which was made on the porch outside the Royal Palace at Sophia, shows her wearing the simple native costume of her subjects. Queen Sophia before her marriage to the Bulgarian King was the Princess Eleanore, of Reuss-Kostritz, a favorite at the Russian court. She is distinguished for her work in the Red Cross field, having been head of one of the largest Red Cross hospitals during the Russian-Japanese War. She may be called upon soon, should her country be drawn into the present war, to again do the effective Red Cross work for which she is noted.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, SEPTEMBER 26.

Lesson XIII. — Obedience and Kingship—Review. Golden Text: Psalm 21. 1.

We have been studying this quarter about men who showed strength or weakness in obeying or disobeying God's laws. The first young man, named Absalom, had every reason to be strong, but became weak and helpless and finally met a miserable death because he broke one of God's laws by disobeying the commands of his own father. If he had obeyed God's word (Eph. 6. 1), he would have been strong in the hour of trial.

The next young man started out in life strong in body, mind and spirit. His father, David, gave him such good advice when he was anointed king that he could not but be strong if he followed it (1 Chron. 28. 9). One of the first things Solomon did was to make such a wise choice that his strength was greatly increased. He found the very source of strength and drew upon it for many years (Prov. 3. 10). He was chosen to build a great and splendid temple to the Lord, a place which should be a strength and tower to the nations.

A beautiful queen, hearing of Solomon's glory, came to visit him to find out if all she had heard was true. She found his glory greater than she had dreamed, and she learned that it was God who had given him all this glory and wisdom (Prov. 8. 11).

Solomon's son, Rehoboam, lost his strength by thinking more of himself than he did of the people over whom he ruled. His people were divided and he was weakened. It was something in his heart that made him fail in his day of opportunity (Prov. 16. 18). When the kingdom was divided, the larger share of it fell to Jeroboam, who was not of the royal family.

Jeroboam lost his power by doing a wrong thing in his effort to keep the people loyal to him. He disobeyed one of God's commandments when he did this (Exod. 24. 4, 5a).

But a good king came to reign in Judah who increased his strength by doing what was right in the sight of God. He relied upon God for his strength, and God never failed him. God had promised, and Asa relied upon the promise.

Ahab was a weak king because he disobeyed God's laws, but a strong and fearless prophet came to him bringing a message from God. The prophet drew his strength from God, who never fails (1 Pet. 5. 7).

Elijah the fearless prophet made a wonderful test with the prophets of Baal, in which he proved God's power to be greater than any earthly power, though over four hundred were combined against him. While their test failed, his succeeded, because he prayed in a way that was acceptable to God (Prov. 15. 29).

After this test Elijah seemed to show signs of weakness, and he was discouraged. He went into the wilderness alone, and there God gave him strength. In order that he might prove his new strength, God sent him on an important mission. Elijah did prove the new strength which he had received in the wilderness (Psa. 46. 10). He found it sufficient for his new needs.

Ben-hadad had a great and powerful army, but this availed him nothing, for he lost the power to control the soldiers when he lost the power to control himself. The young men who had trained themselves to obey overcame and defeated Ben-hadad.

In Psa. 72 the writer prays for a king to come in whom there shall be every element of strength—mercy, justice, gentleness, forgiveness, faithfulness, fearlessness. A king came whose reign shall never cease. He is the example of strength through obedience. He is our brother Jesus Christ, the son of God our Father.

BANKING PROGRESS IN CANADA

A striking illustration of the financial progress throughout the two older provinces of the Dominion during recent years, with respect to banking facilities, is graphically shown in a new edition of a Bank Map of Ontario and Quebec which has recently been issued by the Department of the Interior at Ottawa. According to the information which has been incorporated in the publication the number of branches in operation in 1901, the first year for which statistics of this nature are given, totalled approximately 500, in comparison with 2,000 at the present time. This interesting compilation of current banking information is valuable also as a Railway Map, showing as it does the location, on the various main and branch lines, of all towns and cities. This, together with other general information, makes the publication very useful for reference purposes.

A copy may be procured free of charge upon application to F. C. C. Lynch, Superintendent of the Railway Lands Branch, Department of the Interior, Ottawa.

RUSSIA HAS HUGE PROBLEM.

2,000,000 Who Fled From War District Must Be Cared For.

More than 2,000,000 refugees from Poland and Western Russia have poured into the interior, furnishing the Government with an enormous problem in its efforts to care for them. Three-quarters of these fugitives are aged men, women and children unable to support themselves by work, and they must be supported by charity.

Most of the refugees from the war districts carried with them into the interior only such clothing as they could wear and food for a few days' use. Tens of thousands are already on the verge of starvation, though the Russian Government and every charitable organization in the country are doing their utmost to extend succor.

The Czarina and the Royal Princesses have sent large contributions to various towns to be expended for the sufferers. This will serve only as a temporary relief, however. The Government recognizes that caring for the refugees is not a matter of weeks, but of months—possibly of years.

Even if the war were to end tomorrow the task of caring for the refugees would not be removed. In its retreat before the Germans the Russian army has laid waste the entire country through which its pursuers must pass. Whole towns have been destroyed with dynamite when there has not been time to accomplish the same work with the torch.

ASKS WAR CHANT AT GRAVE.

Officer Leaves Soldier $40,000 to Relate Experiences Over Tomb.

A French soldier, fighting in the Argonne, has just inherited an estate valued at $40,000 from an eccentric army officer, who lived in the soldier's native village. The only condition attached to the legacy is that the soldier must, from time to time, visit the grave of his benefactor and relate there some of his war experiences. The will says:

"Being without family, I leave the whole of my fortune to Paul Cambon, farmer. I desire thus to show my gratitude to him for having for many years listened patiently and with every air of interest to the stories I used to tell of the war of 1870. I trust that he will be spared to return to his village after the present war, and my only request to him is that he come occasionally to my tomb and there relate some of his own war experiences."

GUNS FIRE KNIVES.

A French Invention Destroys Wire Entanglements.

One of the best defences against the attack of modern infantry has proved to be wire entanglements, thousands of miles of which guard the fronts of the opposing armies. Whenever a good defense is found, however, then human brains set to work to find some means of overcoming it. So well made and so intricate have been the entanglements, however, that the highest explosives have sometimes failed to clear a way, and the French have hit on an invention. This is a gun which fires a special heavy four-bladed knife. The knife revolves rapidly when fired, and cuts a way through the strongest entanglements, so opening a way for a bayonet charge. It has the great advantage over all other methods that it does not involve any risk to the soldiers, who formerly had to place the explosive bombs beneath the wire, with every chance of being shot while doing so.

EXAGGERATED CLAIMS.

Germans Say They Have Captured 1,100,000 Russians Since May.

Since May 2, German troops have captured 1,100,000 Russians, according to an official review of military operations issued in Berlin.

The review declares that at least 300,000 Russians were killed or wounded in the same period, asserting that the estimate is conservative.

The review devoted to the results of the offensive movements in Poland, Galicia and Russia, reads as follows:

"In the fighting since May 2, 1,100,000 men have been captured, and at least 300,000 killed or wounded. This is a very conservative estimate; the real figures are likely higher.

"The armies which were struck first at the beginning of our offensive were annihilated. Their losses were made up, however, by withdrawing troops from other regions, especially those held ready to invade Turkey, garrisons of Russian fortresses and half-drilled men hurriedly transported from the interior."

"I haven't heard of any."

"But sometimes they come along unexpected, don't they?"

"I suppose so."

INTERESTING OLD LETTER

As an illustration of the means sometimes resorted to in order to get liquor into "dry" territory the following letter is published in The Goderich Star. The letter was written from Calgary under date of March 8, 1889, to William Campbell of Goderich.

"Dear Sir: I send you an order for one carload of dairy salt to contain one hundred barrels, provided you can fill the following order: 275 gallons common rye whiskey, either Gooderham & Worts' or Walker's; 50 gallons five-year-old rye; 10 gallons brandy; 10 gallons Scotch; 10 gallons Irish, Jamieson's preferred; 10 gallons Tom gin; 10 gallons Holland gin; 10 gallons Port wine; 10 gallons sherry wine; 5 gallons Jamaica rum. I want it put up in five-gallon kegs, one keg to be put in each barrel of salt, which will take eighty barrels, they to be loaded in the car first, the remaining twenty containing nothing but salt to be placed at each end of the liquor close to doors of the car. You may describe the different kinds of liquor by some small mark on barrels and state in invoice as I will be able to sort out. You can ship as one carload of salt. As you know, this is a prohibition county and they would confiscate the whole car if they got on to it. If you can fulfill the order draw on me at once for full amount including salt, through the Imperial Bank here, and when you are notified that it is paid you can ship. I want nothing but the best of liquor and I will allow you ten per cent. on first cost for your trouble of packing. It will be necessary for you to use the utmost caution in packing, for it would be a big loss if it was reported from here and confiscated. Hoping to hear from you at an early date. Yours respectfully." The order was not filled.

Invented Gas Tank

It may be of considerable interest to our readers to know that A. Stroome, who a few months ago opened a garage in the skating rink, has invented the best up-to-date gasoline tank on the market today, which is now patented, and will, no doubt, be a perfect boon to hardware merchants, as it can be installed in perfect running order for $150. The tank has a rotary pump with a glass register gauge tube. Should an auto come in and order six gallons of gasoline, but the auto tank holds only four, the registry gauge is there in plain sight and anyone can tell how much he is getting, while the drain pipe will return the extra gasoline to the ground tank. A rubber tube connects this little tank which runs directly into the auto tank, saving much labor, with no handling whatever. It's perfect safety is another fine feature; no danger of blowing up with a safety tank of this kind. Mr. Stroome has already had fifty applications for tanks, and should he see fit to sell his right to a large firm with a royalty, he would make money. Over 3,000 gallons of White Rose gasoline have been sold in the short time since the tank was installed. Mr. Stroome has also invented an apparatus for jacking-up cars, which is a great improvement on anything on the market.—Tecumseh News.

Tobacco Fund Scandal

Mr Arthur Private, a clever young Englishman, who launched the tobacco Fund in Canada is being accused of graft. Arthur made a strong appeal for the poor soldier through the columns of the Canadian newspapers. The people took kindly to Arthur's suggestion and showered thousands of dollars upon him, but Arthur could not stand the prosperity and paid as high as $300 a week for hotel board and attention. He chartered a special train from Montreal to Hamilton. He paid as high as 6 per cent. to his staff of collectors at the Toronto Fair. Young Mr Private appears to have made his graft on short weight and cheap brand of tobacco. Out of the post cards which were received from a soldier at the front stated: "We appreciate the spirit in which the tobacco is sent, but the manufacturer of it ought to be shot." Arthur Private came to this country as "special commissioner of the Overseas Club Amalgamated Tobacco Funds." His stationery conveys the information that His Majesty the King is patron of the Overseas Club. After his latest transactions had been exposed through the newspapers, Arthur hurriedly decided to return to the Old Country. The atmosphere of the Land of the Maple became too smokey for him.

Lost Her Right Eye

Mrs. Wm. Byers, of the County Line, had her right eye removed on Tuesday. About two weeks ago while running a cream separator she knocked her eye against the machine and ruptured the eye ball. The wound was very painful and as there was no hope of saving the sight, Dr. Armstrong and Dr. Burt, of Owen Sound, decided to remove the eye and the operation was successfully performed on Tuesday.

CANTIRE

Harvesting has been greatly hindered by the continued wet weather and threshing will consequently be slow. This week will probably see most of this year's grain inside the barns, and viewing it from every angle, the year has been unusually bountiful.

Th trustees and scholars of Cantire school have for a week or more been doing some speculating as to who the mischief maker was who had no more to do than climb up and cut the bell rope every night, just where it goes through the ceiling. The mystery was solved when a saucy squirrel was noticed scampering round the roof. The rope has been spliced with a piece of wire and has since managed to keep intact.

Judge Klein on Patriotism

At a public meeting to devise some means for purchasing machine guns at Wiarton recently The Echo reports as follows: Judge Klein who happened to be present gave a most practical address. He told the audience that he was brutally frank, but his frankness was appreciated and he was heard with pleasure. He stated that it was of no purpose to be in a church unless we did something practical and it was of no use to profess our loyalty unless we showed it. His mother was born in Germany, his father in Alsace, and the first national anthem he heard was the French. He stated correctly that we pay too much attention to sport at this time, such as baseball, lacrosse, bowling, etc. The bowling tournament in a town he could mention would cost $300 and he thought it should be withdrawn and the money spent in purchasing a machine gun. In 1895 he had gone to the Northwest during the rebellion. He belonged to the 32nd Bruce and 350 men offered to go in one week. There was no patriotic fund, no socks for the soldiers; he closed his office and left his wife and child and at his own expense went there for three months. Should not men do the same thing now? He would not buy from any business man who would not give to patriotic purposes.

Miraculous Escape

The report of a miraculous escape from death by lightning came from Vickers, a station on the C.P.R., a few miles from Durham. Lightning struck the house in which Miss Short, the village teacher, boards, and the current passed down to the sofa on which she was sitting. Miss Short was badly injured about the limbs and breast. Her clothes caught fire and she received some serious burns, but the medical men say that she will recover. Prompt assistance extinguished the flames. The sofa was completely shattered and a dog which was lying underneath was instantly killed by the current. Miss Short's escape is said to be nothing short of miraculous. The young lady comes from Arthur, Ont.

—The indications are that the potato crop this year in this section of Ontario will be the most absolute failure in the history of the country. A farmer near here the other day ploughed up eight rows and did not get enough good potatoes to last the family a week, and even the apparently good ones are showing signs of decay since being picked. The merchants of the village are already making arrangements for the importation of potatoes from the Maritime provinces and the Canadian North-West.—Milverton Sun.

"Well?" said Mrs. Vivian, looking up after a pause.

"Yes—well?" inquired her companion.

"You have not made a single comment. You're thinking of your relatives. Mark, you must question me if you want me to tell you anything."

"My mother——" began the young man.

"She is living with her husband at Cashmere."

"With her husband!"

"Is it possible you did not know she was married?"

"I never knew it—I never dreamed it!"

"And why not? Why may not a widow remarry?"

"Nay—I do not know, I'm sure," said Mr. Sutherland, with his eyes fixed upon the floor. "My mother married! Please tell me to whom?"

"To whom? Who was it likely to be but Dr. Wells?"

"Our old family physician!"

"Why, of course. You know he had been pleased with her a long time."

"That my mother should have married!"

"She never would, Mark, had you not left her."

"And she is happy, you say?"

"Comfortable, Mark. Your mother and Dr. Wells make 'a comfortable couple.'"

"I am not so much grieved as surprised," said Mr. Sutherland. "There was another—my cousin."

The face of the lady grew troubled—she did not speak.

"Is India well?" again spoke Mark.

"India is well. She was the belle of Washington last winter—her beauty the theme of every tongue—the envy of every woman, the madness of every man."

Mark Sutherland grew pale and shivered.

"Among her own sex there was no rival star. She divided public interest and attention only with St. Gerald Ashley."

Mark Sutherland's whole strong frame was convulsed. He started up and paced the floor; then, seizing his hat, rushed out of the room.

"And I was to prepare him for it, Rosalie told me!" exclaimed Mrs. Vivian, looking after him, as the pity of her heart grew strong.

CHAPTER X.

In the meantime the two young riders took their way up a long, crooked pass of the mountain.

The morning was glistening with brightness and freshness. At length the young man broke the spell.

"I cannot bear this suspense! I cannot, indeed."

Rosalie stole a glance at his clear, blue eye and ruddy cheek, and a smile lighted up her countenance.

"Ah! you may laugh! You have the most unimpressionable heart I ever saw. But good and strong as my constitution is, it will break down. Then perhaps you would pity me."

"But, Robert, my pity would be very poor compensation for lost health."

"I don't know! If I could make you feel for me any way or at any cost, I should be glad."

"I do, Robert. I feel a very sincere esteem and friendship for you. Surely you cannot doubt that."

"Oh! yes, you are good to me to a certain degree. Your heart is like a peach!"

"Like a peach!"

"Yes; it is superficially soft and impressionable, but the core of it is hard and rough. Oh, Rosalie, can't you try to like me a little?"

"I like you very much without trying!"

"Oh, you know what I mean. Can't you love me well enough to be my own? Tell me, Rose!"

"Oh, Robert, how many times have I told you—no?"

"—but I won't take no for an answer! All my affections and hopes are freighted in you, and I will not resign you. I will go on hoping against hope! It is impossible any one loving as I do, should not win love in return."

Rosalie watched and heard him with wondering and sorrowing interest. She gravely said:

"Yes, it does seem impossible, if we did not know it to be often really impossible. It does seem unjust!"

"You own it to be unjust that I should give you so much—my entire heart, with all its affections and hopes—and get nothing back in return—or next to it! Rosalie, I don't want your esteem or friendship. Give me nothing, or give me your whole heart and hand!"

"I would to Heaven I could do it, Robert! I would to Heaven I could give you my heart. I should then be a happy and enviable girl; because I believe you a most excellent young man, whose only weakness is your regard for me. But I cannot, Robert. With all my friendship for you——"

"Don't name it!"

"I must, Robert. When you talk of love, my heart grows hard and cold; it has no response for you."

"And you say that to drive me out of my senses?"

"I say it because it is the simple truth. I think, with you, it is strange so much priceless love should be thrown away."

"Good heaven, how cool she is!"

"I have a problem for you, Robert; and I want to see it, with all your mathematics, you can solve it.

"Thus, then: A loves B—or rather, Aaron loves Belinda with a perfect passion; he thinks, by reason of its great power, it must win. But Belinda involuntarily turns from Aaron and fixes her affection upon Charles, who does not in the least return it. Now, why should these cross purposes exist?"

She spoke in a light, bantering manner. She stole an arch glance at her companion, and said:

"Are you putting an imaginary case?" he asked.

"Nay, answer my question before asking another."

"Well, then, yes! I will tell you how this ought to end, and how it shall end, too. Belinda will soon feel it to be unwomanly to leave her heart in the possession of one who undervalues the priceless treasure; she will yield it up at the demand of the rightful owner."

"You think so?" said Rosalie, averting her face and bending down and stroking her horse's mane.

"I know so; because man's love is the conquering love. But were you putting an imaginary case?"

"Yes, I was putting an imaginary case."

She drew rein.

"What is the matter, Rosalie? Are you tired?"

"Yes, I think so," she answered, wearily.

"Rest awhile, and then we will go on."

"No—I must go home—the air is very chill," she said, shivering.

"And you are pale," he observed, gazing at her with earnest, affectionate interest.

She returned that gaze with a pensive, grateful glance, saying: "Indeed, I feel I ought to be very grateful to you for caring so much for a poor, sickly creature like me. I thought every one preferred blooming girls; but you attach yourself to poor, pale me. Dear Robert, I am very, very grateful for your love. I do wish I could be more than grateful." And detaching a white rose from her bosom, she handed it to him.

And they turned their horses heads and went down the mountain path toward home.

CHAPTER XI.

Rosalie Vivian and Robert Bloomfield reached home just as the carriage containing Colonel Ashley rolled into the yard.

"Robert, will you not come in?"

"No," mournfully replied the young man, assisting her to alight.

"We have strawberries for the first time this spring."

"Nonsense!" exclaimed Robert, contemptuously.

"Oh, then, there's no more to be said, of course!"

"Good morning, Rosalie!"

"Good morning, Robert; but won't you shake hands with me?" she asked, offering her hand. He seized that little hand and squeezed and pressed it to his lips, mounted his horse and galloped away.

Mrs. Vivian came forward to meet Rosalie. "Are you tired, love? You look pale and wearied."

"A moment's rest will restore me, dear mamma."

"Come in and sit down while I take off your things." She sat her down in a deep-cushioned chair, ordered a cordial and then removed her hat and riding skirt. When she had made Rosalie take a cracker and a little glass of anise-seed cordial, Rosalie, reclining upon the sofa, Valeria, sitting in the easy chair, inquired:

"Why did not Robert come in?"

"I do not know, unless it was because he did not wish to do so."

"Have you quarreled?"

"Quarreled! Dear mamma, I never had a quarrel and never expect to have one—least of all with Bob."

"There is no reason you should not have a lover's quarrel. Have you and Robert had a 'lover's quarrel?'"

"No, indeed; I assure you."

"Yet Robert went away offended." Rosalie looked distressed.

"Rosalie, will you let me speak to you frankly?"

"Certainly, dear mamma; I would turn my heart inside out and show you its most hidden secret."

"Well, then, are you and Robert engaged?"

"No, mamma."

"He has not yet proposed, then?"

"I scarcely know, mamma, whether I ought to reveal poor Robert's confidences."

"You did not reject him?"

"Yes, mamma."

"I'm astonished! How long ago has this been?"

"Twelve months ago Robert first did me the honor of offering his hand, and I gratefully declined it."

"Well, has he ever renewed his proposals?"

"Yes, mamma, several times."

"And you have continued to reject them?"

"Of course, mamma."

"And yet you still accept his attentions?"

"Was I—am I wrong, mamma?" asked Rosalie.

The lady sat with her hands clasped upon her knees, in a simple attitude, with her eyes fixed in sorrowful doubt upon her child.

"Do you ever mean to review your decision?"

"Never, mamma, I assure you!"

"Are you very certain, Rosalie?"

"Certain, dear mamma, beyond all doubt."

"And yet you keep his company. I am surprised!"

"Is it not right, mamma?"

"If it were not you, I should say it is unprincipled!"

"Why must I not keep poor Robert's company when he takes so much comfort in my society?"

"Comfort! Do you call it comfort? No, Rosalie, it is a feverish, consuming hope that keeps him at your side which it is your bounden duty to extinguish forever."

"Mamma! I don't quite understand you. I am very sorry that I cannot return Robert's regard——"

"Oh!" exclaimed the lady. "I am very glad you are not engaged to him nor ever likely to be."

"But why add ingratitude and coldness?"

"To refuse his attentions would not be either the one or the other, and it is your duty."

"When Robert has no consolation but my company——"

"To say he has no other intoxication would be to utter the truth. Rosalie, there is a kindness that is cruel. And there is a cruelty that is kind, and that is what you must show him now."

"Mamma, if you think it wrong I will never ride with him again."

"And avoid him as much as possible, Rosalie."

By this time the young girl had quite recovered from her fatigue and she arose and left the room, to prepare her strawberries, she said.

She passed into a pleasant back room connected with the pantry and dining-room, but opening upon the garden and devoted to certain light dessert preparations. It was, indeed a pleasant apartment, looking out upon a fresh, verdant, rural scene. Rosalie sat down in the midst of the room with a basket of fresh strawberries on her right hand, an empty basket to receive the caps on her left, and a cut glass dish on her lap. And as her nimble fingers capped the strawberries she began to sing; while she was busily engaged she chanced to look up and saw Mark Sutherland approaching the house. He met her glance and smiled. She was in a merry mood.

"Come in, Mr. Sutherland; I have got something for you very nice!"

Mark came in and she said: "Make a bowl of your joined hands now, and here!"

She poured into his hands some fine large strawberries, adding:

"These are the first fruits of the season."

"Let me first merit them by helping you."

"Will you help me?"

"Certainly; that is, if I am not intruding."

"Oh, no! this room is open and common to the whole family; why, it is the pleasantest room in the house. We prepare our fruit here."

Mr. Sutherland drew a chair on the other side of the strawberry basket and went to work, actuated by some whim, no doubt. After a little desultory conversation, Mr. Sutherland said:

"I believe, dear Rosalie, that I owe this situation to your friendly remembrance, and I have been waiting some hours for an opportunity of expressing my thanks."

Rosalie's face flushed to the temples.

"I am deeply obliged and grateful to my fair patroness."

The blush deepened, crimsoning her face. She waved her hand deprecatingly, impatiently; she began: "Mr. Sutherland——" and stopped, as it were, choked.

"Miss Vivian, are you so unwilling to receive my acknowledgments? Then must my gratitude be silent but not the less deep."

Again she essayed to speak, and the words came vehemently, impetuously.

"I had no agency in procuring this situation for you, Mr. Sutherland. How could you suppose for an instant that I or any one else that knew you could deem this position a fit and proper one for you? No! could I have dared to interfere, it would have been to prevent your coming here."

There was a tone of honest, earnest indignation in her voice, looks and manners that utterly astounded Mark Sutherland.

GERMANY TO BLAME.

Learned Bavarian Places Responsibility for War.

Dr. Gruber, one of Barvaria's most learned professors, has been lecturing on "War, Peace and Biology," and comes to some remarkable conclusions.

"This war, he declares, was inevitable and unavoidable. It might have been postponed, but it had to come sooner or later. It is idle to debate who is most to blame for the outbreak of hostilities. As a matter of fact, Germany was to blame, says the professor; not blame-worthy in any moral sense. Germany is to blame because she had stretched and used her power to its utmost, because in 4 years it had increased in population from 40 to 68 millions. The war was, therefore, a biological necessity.

The war says the professor, has become a battle of ideas, caused by varying conceptions of human development and of human freedom.

In conclusion, Professor Gruber mentioned certain "biological demands" for the future. One of these must be a strengthening of the nation by a large increase of the population, and to such an extent that Germany will be rendered invulnerable. If the population of the Empire grows at the rate of the first five years of this century it will have reached 250,000,000 in the year 2,000.

THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT OFFERS SUGGESTIONS FOR FRUIT PRESERVING.

In an advice circulated throughout Canada, the Fruit Branch Dept. at Ottawa suggests as being best for preserving purposes, certain brands of peaches: St. Johns, Elbertas, Crawfords and Smocks, and for plums Bradshaws, Gages, Lombards, Reine Claude.

The advice is timely and to it may be added that many of the most successful makers of preserves have for years insisted on securing from their grocers the St. Lawrence Extra Granulated Sugar (Pure Cane).

It is well known that the slightest organic impurity in sugar will start fermentation in the jam, and St. Lawrence Sugar which tests over 99% pure has never failed the housewife. Grocers everywhere can fill orders for this sugar. The best way to buy it is in the original refinery sealed packages 2 or 5 lbs. cartons, 10, 20, 25, and 100 lbs. bags.

Identifying Dead Soldiers.

Each of the armies in this great war, says the Christian Herald, has a system that enables it to identify the dead. The Russian soldier wears a numbered badge; the French soldier has an identification card stitched into his tunic; the German soldier has a little metal disk that bears his name; the British soldier has an aluminum disk, with identification marks and church affiliations; the Japanese soldier has three disks, all alike, one round his neck, another in his belt, and another in his boot; and the Austrian soldier has a gun-metal badge, with his name on a tiny parchment leaf within. The Turk is the only soldier so lightly valued that he carries no badge. Identification is evidently regarded as unnecessary in his case.

The World's Finest Tea

"SALADA"

B72

Tea out-rivals and out-sells all others, solely through its delicious flavour and down-right all-round goodness.

Protect the Skunk.

The skunk stands among the most important animals that choose for their diet insects harmful to the farmer. It is the best-known enemy of army worms, including the common army worm, the wheat head army worm and the fall army worm, all of which are destructive to small grains, corn and grasses, and cause heavy losses every year to farmers, according to the United States department of agriculture's biologist.

Two kinds of tobacco worms, which also attack tomato and potato plants are eaten by the skunk in large numbers. These worms change their diet from tobacco to tomatoes with such adaptability that they have spread over wide areas in the United States. The skunk's eagerness for the worm is such that he will dig them out from the ground in great numbers in the late summer and destroy them.

The white grub is also dug for by the skunk and consumed by him, and the strawberry growers generally regard this animal with favor, even though in its eager search for the grubs it may uproot the plant or eat a few berries. The skunk also eats many mature May beetles and June bugs which hatch from the white grubs.

Skunks also destroy the hop grub, grasshoppers, cut-worms, crickets, sphinx moths, sweet potato beetles, Colorado potato bbeetles, field mice and rats. The animal is especially useful in destroying the rats and mice that commonly infest farm buildings. If a skunk takes up his residence near premises where these rats are abundant, it will remain there if not disturbed until practically all of the rodents are destroyed.

So useful an animal should be fully protected. With insects increasing with wonderful rapidity, the farmer and gardener is put to great expense and labor in fighting them, and any animal that will help the cultivators of the soil to fight their insect battles should be encouraged and protected. Many farmers are shortsighted enough to kill every skunk they can find, to obtain for the skin a price that seems high, but is nothing as compared with the good it does.

Protect Stock From Flies.

Relief from attacks by flies may be brought to live stock on the farm by the use of sprays. The following spray is suggested by F. L. Washburn, entomologist of the Minnesota college of agriculture.

Three parts of fish oil and one part kerosene. The spraying is best done with a knapsack sprayer, and it takes only two or three minutes to spray a steer or horse. The spray appears to keep off all flies for two days.

The Split Log Drag.

The split-log drag has contributed more toward the economic maintenance of public highways than any implement of modern usage. It does not require special acts of the legislature, bond issues or expensive educational campaigns to make it available as usually proceeds construction work. A drag can be built or purchased for $20 and easily operated by anyone who can drive a team.

Pruning Don'ts.

Don't prune with an ax.
Don't cut off the lower limbs.
Don't cut off the short spurs.
Don't leave stubs.
Don't use dull tools.

FRESH AT NIGHT

If One Uses the Right Kind of Food.

If by proper selection of food one can feel strong and fresh at the end of a day's work, it is worth while to know the kind of food that will produce this result.

A school teacher in the West says in this connection:

"At the time I commenced the use of Grape-Nuts my health was so poor that I thought I would have to give up my work altogether. I was rapidly losing in weight, had little appetite, was nervous and sleepless, and experienced almost constantly a feeling of exhaustion.

"I tried various remedies without good results; then I determined to give particular attention to my food, and have learned something of the properties of Grape-Nuts for rebuilding, body, brain and nerves.

"Since using Grape-Nuts I have made a constant and rapid improvement in health, in spite of the fact that all this time I have been engaged in strenuous and exacting work.

"I have gained twelve pounds in weight and have a good appetite, my nerves are steady and I sleep sound. I have such strength and reserve force that I feel almost as strong and fresh at the close of a day's work as at the beginning.

"Before using Grape-Nuts I was troubled much with weak eyes, but as my vitality increased the eyes became stronger.

"I never heard of another food as nutritious and economical as Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason."

ALFONSO ALONE GETS A HOLIDAY

SPAIN'S KING SPENT SUMMER AS USUAL.

The King and Queen of Spain Could Not Go to England this Year.

The Spanish royal family is one of the few in Europe which takes its summer holiday as usual, unvexed by the momentous issues of the war. There seems to be no doubt that Spain will remain neutral as long as the war continues, this being possible through her geographical position away from the theatre of war. King Alfonso and Queen Victoria did not go to England for their annual summer visit because, of course, that would indicate their sympathy with Great Britain in the war, and would be considered unneutral. The Queen has been accustomed to go to the Isle of Wight to visit her mother, Princess Henry of Battenberg, while the King enjoyed the Cowes regatta.

The summer air of the Spanish capital is said to be far from healthy, and the death rate is double that of London, consequently Queen Victoria and her children have took up their residence at La Granja, near the city of Segovia, only an hour's trip by motor car to the capital. The King goes back and forth nearly every day, acting as his own chauffeur, to meet his Ministers and keep in close touch with official affairs.

Royal Summer Home.

He has loaned an apartment at the Prado Palace, not far from Madrid, to his cousin, Prince Alfonso, and his young wife, Princess Beatrice of Saxe-Coburg Gotha. She is a younger sister of the Queen of Rumania, and was educated in England, when her father was enjoying his English title of Duke of Edinburgh. She and Prince Alfonso made a runaway match a few years ago, and King Alfonso showed his displeasure by depriving his cousin of his military honors.

King Alphonso

The Prince went to France and obtained a commission in the French army, and wanted to fight with the French soldiers in this war. His mother, the Infanta Eulalie, lives in Paris, and is ardently sympathetic with the allies. King Alfonso persuaded his cousin to give up such an idea, and he has rewarded him by reinstating him in the Spanish army.

The King is spending the latter part of the summer at San Sebastian, where he is particularly happy, because he spent most of his babyhood there, growing strong in the sea breezes. He likes to go down to Miramar, the private palace of his mother, the Dowager Queen Marie Christina, which is close to the sea in the Bay of Biscay. He has only to cross the road from the garden to get into the sea.

The King's Bath.

The royal children take possession of Miramar, to the complete satisfaction of their grandmother.

The children are dressed simply in sailor suits with short socks, and they stay out of doors most of the day, playing in the sand or going in bathing. When the King takes his dip in the sea he begins by seating himself in his mother's garden in a little summer house built like a railroad car. It is run down into the water, and the only way the curious spectators on the beach have of knowing that the King is in their midst is by the violet flag with the royal arms in gold, the "Pendon de Castile," which is hoisted over the commodious bathing machine. The moment he enters any building this flag is unfurled, and etiquet demands that he must take his sea bath with it floating over his head.

QUAINT INN NAMES.

Germany Holds the Record for Fantastic Names.

Scattered throughout England are some curious inn names, but Germany probably holds the record for out-of-the-way signs and fantastic names. The most absurd results are usually obtained by the name of some animal with a more or less unsuitable object. The Comfortable Chicken and the Cold Frog, both of them in Berlin, are certainly left in the shade by the Angry Ant (Ort, in Westphalia), and the Stiff Dog (Berlin). The Lame Louse is an inn in a suburb of Berlin, and not far from it is the thirsty Pelican, The Dirty Parlor, the Bloody Bones, the Musical Cats, the Four Hundredweight Man, and the Boxers' Den are all in Berlin or the neighborhood, and the Old Straw Bag in Leipzig. The Open Bunghole is in Stadtchen, in the Palatine, and the Shoulderblade in Jerichow. The Last Tear is a landlord's notion for the name of his inn, situated near a graveyard, visited by returning mourners, and is of frequent occurrence throughout the Fatherland.

NOTHING TO EQUAL BABY'S OWN TABLETS

There is nothing to equal Baby's Own Tablets for little ones. They are absolutely safe and are guaranteed free from opiates and never fail in giving relief from the minor ills of babyhood and childhood. Concerning them Mrs. Albert Bergeron, St. Agapit, Que., writes: "My baby was suffering from constipation and teething troubles and Baby's Own Tablets quickly cured him. Now I always keep them in the house." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

RECOVERS HIS SPEECH.

Wounded British Soldier Also Able to Hear Now.

Robert Beck, of Chicago, who was made deaf and dumb by an injury sustained while fighting with the British Army, suddenly recovered his speech and hearing in a Liverpool hospital. Beck, who was a motor cycle policeman in the Chicago force when the war broke out, became a despatch bearer with the British troops, and was struck down by a sniper's bullet in Flanders. He was taken to Liverpool.

From the day of his injury he had been unable to hear or speak until he was taken with other convalescents to a moving picture entertainment in Liverpool. While watching a comic picture he suddenly burst out in laughter. The next moment he found that he was able to talk and hear normally.

Tea on the Battlefield.

Tea suddenly becomes one of the items of war material, and the price has gone up in the primary market about thirty per cent., with prospects of a real shortage and still further advances in price. When warring armies start buying tea for rations on the field with its attendant great waste, and the entire Russian people are suddenly deprived of vodka and turned to tea, then it can scarcely be surprising that such a fluctuation should occur in the price of tea.

Messrs. Henderson & Co.'s latest monthly circular issued from Ceylon and just to hand states: "A feature of the market was the record prices paid for flavory teas. The oldest members of the tea trade in Ceylon could not remember such high prices being realized before."

OLD AND NEW IN WAR.

Battles Are Won By Poisoning the Air By Chemicals.

One of the curious features of this war is the reversion to methods of fighting counted obsolete. The grenades, bayonet-sparring, airmen's darts, and many others, remind us of ancient days. And there is talk of rigging out the soldier in steel helmet, cuirass, and shield. In truth it would not take long for the Roman legionary to get his hand in this new Gallic war. The "Black Marias" and "Jack Johnsons" he would hardly take kindly to. But once "blooded" to the artillery the rest would come to him as all in the day's work. For the Roman man-at-arms was ever a great man with the spade and the short "gladius" it was that won Rome's battles. How he would smile to hear that the French are abbreviating their bayonets. Macaulay says somewhere that the nation that shortens its weapons lengthens its borders. May it be so in this case!

All the brave superfluities of war—the waving banners, nodding plumes, sabretaches, bushies, feather bonnets, epaulettes, sashes, and ribbons—all that clinks and shines and flames have been taken away. The calling of the soldier has no more part in the lust of the eyes, the pride of the flesh. Battles are won by poisoning the air by chemical prescription.

About the only good thing some men have is a reputation for being bad.

Appendicitis Prevented Life Lengthened Health Maintained

Doctors say if people kept their bowels in proper order there would be no such diseases on record as appendicitis. It is due solely to neglect, and is therefore preventable. If you have constipation, bad breath or headache you need medicine right away. The moment you suspect your bowels are clogged you should take Dr. Hamilton's Pills, the smoothest regulator of them all. They move the bowels and cleanse the liver so smoothly you scarcely notice the effect. But you get the action just the same. Taken at night you wake up next morning, clear headed, hungry, rested, energetic, feeling like a different man. Why don't you spend a quarter to-day and try Dr. Hamilton's Pills. They work so easy, just as nature would order, never gripe or cause headache. Finest thing for folks that are out of sorts, depressed, lacking in color and spirits. Folks that use Dr. Hamilton's Pills are never sick, never have an ache or a pain,—feel good all the time simply because the system is clean, regulated and healthy. This you can easily prove yourself.

TRUE PATRIOTISM.

The excellent patriotic work of the File Indians at Balcarros, Sask., continues, and the Canadian Pacific through Mr. W. R. Baker, the Secretary of the Company, has received another encouraging report. It was in October last year that thirty-three of these colonists subscribed $802.10 to the Patriotic Fund, each farmer giving a certain number of bushels of grain, which when sold amounted to the above sum. During the winter that followed, the now famous File Indian Brass Band gave concerts, thereby raising another $212.00, which went to the Belgian Relief Fund, and since March last, the Red Cross Branch of this Colony has raised $500.00 and endowed a bed in Cliveden Hospital. The young Indian women have done a great deal of knitting and sewing. The branch has a membership of 86, while there are only one hundred and sixty souls—thirty-eight men, twenty-six women and ninety-six children—in the colony. The patriotism of these Indians does not stop here. Two young men went to the front with the second contingent, and six more are going with the next. The File Indians lay claim to having the oldest Red Cross Society member in the British Empire in the person of Pointed Cap. This celebrated character says that he is the ripe old age of 107, and on November 12th next will attain his 108th year. He is now an "associate member" of the Red Cross, and proudly wears on his heart the little red cross, the emblem of the society. It is quite possible that in addition to the six latest recruits for the front, older members of the colony will go, as one man who is the father of nine children has expressed his intention of so doing, and his wife says "I will not stop him." Despite the fact that a hailstorm last month destroyed all the crops in the colony, the File Indians are not downhearted, and have made arrangements to continue their good work during the coming winter months to aid the boys across the sea, thus showing a patriotism worthy of a king.

The Diplomatic Way.

"My neighbor, in the most urbane way, has notified me to keep my chickens out of his garden."

"And you."

"With the utmost courtesy I have informed him that my chickens may go where they please."

"You must have been reading up on diplomatic matters."

"Yes, it all illustrates current progress. A year ago, over the same episode, we would have been scrapping."

The Power of Cheerfulness.

Go forth to-day with cheer in your heart! And go forth on every day. Surprising will be the power of it. You will soon redeem the errors of the past; you will do better work and more work. And your cheerfulness and work will cheer, inspire and uplift everyone around you. Oh, wonderful is the power of cheerfulness! Oh, wonderful is the good it does.

For Appearance Sake.

One day Pat appeared on the street with a huge tear in his coat sleeve.

"Look here, Pat," protested a friend, "why don't you get that hole mended?"

"Not Oi, sir," said Pat, "a hole may be the result of an accident, but a patch is a sure sign of poverty."

NUMBER 23 THE PROPRIETORS

HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

The Rose, the Thistle, the Shamrock,
Dear emblems over the sea,
Are all of them loving tokens
Of the homage we offer thee.

The central king of the nations
Is throned on the hub of the wheel,
And all the spokes are British oaks,
And the fellocs are bound with steel.

The God of Light sustain thy might!
And may'st thou never forget
The weal of those mighty dominions
On which the sun doth not set.

The pulse of thy Sovereign power
Vibrateth in every land,
We pray for peace, but if it cease
We're all at the King's command.

From this fair land of the Maple,
This granary of golden wheat,
We bring our tribute and fealty
And lay them at thy feet.

This the prayer of Canadian hearts,
May thy Majesty never lack
The men or the might to defend the right,
And the fame of the Union Jack.

Three cheers for the King of England!
With three for the Red, White and Blue!
May the King have peace and plenty,
And the love of his subjects, too.

In a Bad Fix.

The well-beloved bishop of a certain Southern State is so absent-minded that his family is always apprehensive for his welfare when he is away from home.

Not long ago, while making a journey by rail, the bishop was unable to find his ticket when the conductor asked for it.

"Never mind, bishop," said the conductor, who knew him well, "I'll get it on my second round."

However, when the conductor passed through the car again the ticket was still missing.

"Oh, well, bishop, it will be all right if you never find it!" the conductor assured him.

"No, it won't, my friend," contradicted the bishop. "I've got to find that ticket. I want to know where I'm going."

"I dreamed last night that I owned the earth!"

"I didn't say they were fine. I merely said I must say so."

This is to certify that I have used MINARD'S LINIMENT in my family for years, and consider it the best liniment on the market. I have found it excellent for horse flesh.

In London they tell of an American woman of great beauty and attractiveness who is devoted to the Irish cause. At a social function one evening she chanced to remark:

"Really, I believe I was meant for an Irishwoman."

Whereupon a Celt arose to the occasion:

"Pardon me, madam," he said, "a good many would back me in saying that you were meant for an Irishman."

The Paisley Advocate

PAISLEY, SEPT. 30th, 1915

—There was no "Anzac region" a few months ago, but it has figured much in the recent dispatches from the Dardanelles. The name is made up of the initials of "Australian-New Zealand Army Corps," a body of colonial troops whose courage and stubborn fighting have given the region a name that will probably stick.

Every once in a while we hear a farmer say: "Well, the corn I planted the middle of June is the best and heaviest I've got." And yet how we desporded, and even declared corn planted at that time could not produce a crop. And probably some refused to plant, and those who did plant worked in despair and without hope. Let us learn the lesson, "Seed time and harvest" are promised, and "your labor shall not be in vain." A little more trust would burnish up hope, brighten to-day and lead to gratefulness to-morrow.

—God made the air for us to breathe, or rather made us to breathe the air. A great many people do not seem to know this from the way they hermetically close up the doors and windows of their sleeping rooms and then proceed to manufacture an atmosphere composed mostly from the effluvia and carbonic acid gas from their own bodies. People talk about the danger of night air. It is not nearly so injurious as people believe. Besides it is the only air on hand during the night. The beasts breathe it and are vigorous and hearty. There ought to be a constantly flowing stream of outside air into our rooms during sleep. We do not mean a draught blowing upon us, but nevertheless night air should constantly come into our sleeping apartments. Good ventilation is better than all the drugs in the world.

Bishop Matheson: "That the politics of our country have been growing more and more impure as years go on is a sad and self-evident fact. It seems almost as if no political party can remain long in power before corruption creeps into it and spreads like a dread disease until it gnaws upon its vitals and kills it. Revelations of wrong doing come to the surface here and there like hideous local eruptions, and it is not encouraging to be told that these are only slight compored to what is covered up and remains seething underneath. The situation, I repeat, is most menacing to the future well-being of our country. There must be a cleansing of the springs of our political life or else our whole character and ideals as a Canadian nation will be gravely imperilled. The cleansing is in the hands of the electors who must see to it that only clean men are placed in public positions, and not only that, but that only clean men will be kept there.

—The "big drive" by the allies on the western war front has been started, and the success of the initial movement warrants the hope that the German invaders may be expelled from the soil of Belgium and France within a short time. The cable news of Sunday was the best from the theatre of war for months. Following up the tremendous artillery firing which has been going on continuously since the early part of the year, the allies made important advances at different points during the last week-end, driving the enemy from stronly entrenched positions, inflicting heavy losses, taking thousands of prisoners, and securing enormous quantities of supplies, ammunition and guns. Unwounded Germans taken by British and French 23,000, five miles of enemy positions taken by General French and line penetrated 4,000 yards — nearly 2½ miles. Fifteen miles of trenches captured by General Joffre, and penetrated 2½ miles. British within 12 miles of Lille. The Belgians made successful attack along the Yser canal. In two days the Allies took more than 20,000 prisoners, more than 30 field guns, unnumbered machine guns and vast quantities of material. The losses on both sides are reportedl .to have been fearful. Every known engine of destruction has been used by the Germans and Allies in the terrific conflict that is still raging furiously, with no signs of abatement. Thousands of bodies are lying on the field unburied for more than 100 miles. The results achieved in this great Franco-British victory are considered to be more important even than the victory of the Marne. On the eastern front the Russians are making counter attacks on the German advance and inflicting great losses on the enemy. Canadian forces were not engaged in the fighting of last week, but are now held in readiness for any call for their services.

Paid Two Fines

For running his auto for hire without license Mr. T. F. Pearce was prosecuted on two charges laid by Constable Leitch, and was convicted on each on the strength of evidence elicited at the recent local option court. The fines, with costs, amounted to $16.80. Mr. Jas. Craig, jr., was also charged with violating the same regulation, but when the case came before the beak it could not be proved, as both autoist and passenger swore that there was no payment for a ride to Hanover and back.

Death of Rev. Josias Greene

One of the most notable figures in the itinerancy of the Methodist church in this province passed away at Clinton on Sept. 20th, in the person of Rev. Josias Greene, at one time pastor of Paisley congregation. The deceased was in his 82nd year, and had been almost sixty years in the ministry. Although superannuated for several years, he has preached almost every Sunday during that time, and his continuous activity was a surprise to all who knew him. Two daughters survive, Mrs. (D.) C. W. Thompson and Miss Beatrice at home.

Young People's Banquet

The rally banquet held by the Young People's Guild of Knox church on Monday evening provided a very interesting and profitable evening's entertainment. After the repast had been disposed of a programme of after-dinner speeches was carried out. Mr. Alex McKay filled the position of toastmaster. Speeches were delivered by Messrs. J. A. Logie, J. R. Laidlaw, J. H. Steele, J. Brown, D. D. Campbell, Wm. McKenzie, Dr. Allen and Rev. C. C. Little, B.A. Musical numbers were rendered by Misses May Warren and Emily McInnes and Mr. D. McKenzie.

Cavill—McCartney

The home of Mr. Edward McCartney, of 12th con Elderslie, was the scene of a happy event on the 15th of September, when his second daughter, Miss Florence Mae, was united in marriage to Mr James Cavill, of the furniture and undertaking firm of Hope & Cavill of Paisley. The bride entered the parlor leaning on the arm of her father, as the beautiful strains of the wedding march played by Miss Myrtle, sister of the bride, floated through the room, and the Rev. Mr. McEwen spoke the words which united two hearts for the remainder of life's journey. Little Verna Olebe, of Hanover, made a very pretty flower girl. The bride was attractively gowned in a hand-embroidered dress of white habutai silk, and her going away suit was of navy blue with Georgette crepe and hat to match. Immediately after the ceremony the guests sat down to a bountiful and delicious wedding supper. The young couple left next morning for a wedding trip to Toronto and other points, and on their return took up their residence in Paisley. The esteem in which the young couple are held was shown by the numerous and valuable presents received. THE ADVOCATE joins in the good wishes to Mr and Mrs Cavill. They have taken up housekeeping in a house on Queen St north.

WAR TAX POINT

Interesting Matter Decided by the Dominion Government

A matter of importance to the public and the railways has been settled by the Government. A nice point has been raised as to the possibility of refund of the war tax in case a person should change his or her mind in regard to the contemplated trip by train or boat. Accordingly the railways submitted the questions to the Government—what should be done in case unused tickets presented for refund to agent before the train starts; to agent or general office after train departs; the same or some following day; in the case of passenger tickets; in the case of sleeping car tickets; in the case of parlor car tickets, in the case of steamship tickets. The answer which the railways received was as follows: There can be no refund of the tax under any circumstances. Once the ticket is sold and the tax collected, it is as though it were in the Dominion coffers and nothing but an act of Parliament can get it out again. It was explained by the Dominion authorities that in order to prevent the confusion that would arise in applying literally the millions of tax stamps that would have been required on railway tickets and the consequent difficulties which would have ensued owing to delay in affixing and cancellation of stamps, the present method had been adopted, and, that as none of the public could have reasonably expected a refund on a stamp that had been affixed and cancelled if a ticket were refunded upon, so also no refund may be expected wherever a tax had been collected, and the ticket unused and refunded upon. In other words, the act of purchase of the ticket in accordance with the Tax Act is a completed transaction so far as the collection of the tax is concerned, and under the circumstances as the law now stands could it be refunded. To make a refund of the tax possible a special act would have to be passed by Parliament.

THIRTY YEARS' FIRE

Scotch Moonshiners Blamed For Strange Unquenchable Flames

A fire which raged for thirty years and defied all attempts to extinguish it sounds like a fantastic romance; yet this phenomenon actually took place some ninety or one hundred years ago. Some illicit whiskey distillers had set up their plant in the workings of a disused coal-mine, on a lonely part of the South Sauchie Coalfield in Scotland, but an accident, entirely independent of the activity of the revenue officers, compelled them to change their quarters. They discovered that one of their furnaces had caused a smouldering fire in the abandoned coal-seam, and, failing in their efforts to extinguish it, the "moonshiners" left the place in a hurry, needless to say, without reporting the occurrence to the authorities.

The fire in the old pit continued to smoulder, until at night the flames issuing from the mouth of the shaft, attracted the attention of the inhabitants around; but it was found that the fire had reached such a point that all attempts to get it out proved futile.

AILING WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Mrs. Doucette Tells of her Distressing Symptoms During Change of Life and How She Found Relief.

Belleville, Nova Scotia, Can.—"Three years ago I was suffering badly with what the doctors called Change of Life. I was so bad that I had to stay in bed. Some friends told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it helped me from the first. It is the only medicine I took that did help me and I recommend it. You don't know how thankful and grateful I am. I give you permission to publish what your good medicine has done for me."—MRS. SIMON DOUCETTE, Belleville, Yarmouth Co., Nova Scotia, Canada.

WHO INVENTED THE NEWSPAPER "SCOOP"?

Founder of London Times Gets Credit—Trafalgar One of His Triumphs—Spent Money

In England the newspaper "beat," or "scoop," is sometimes called an anticipation. Whatever its name, it is one of the most important features of modern journalism and may be considered almost an invention of that famous daily, The London Times.

John Walter founded The Times in 1785, and was the first to understand the popularity of overwhelming importance of early information. He was not satisfied by the treatment he received from the British postal authorities of his day and proceeded to organize an independent news service. It is not hard to imagine the enormous cost of such an enterprise; but he was able in this way to beat the government again and again with important political and military news. He printed an account of the capture of Flushing twenty-four hours before the government at London knew anything about it. He sent to "cover" the Peninsular Campaign the first of all war correspondents.

In Napoleon's Day

The Battle of Trafalgar, where Nelson scored his great naval victory over the French and the Spanish fleets in 1806, was first announced in The Times. From the field of Waterloo, June 18, 1815, Times despatches announced the downfall of Napoleon several hours before the regular military couriers reached the government officials in London.

At a time when the other and less enterprising European papers were printing conventional reports of what was going on in the Crimea War, 1855-56, where Great Britain and her allies were pitted against Russia, The London Times printed the correspondence of William Howard Russell. His letters not only gave early and complete reports of the campaign, but were amazingly outspoken in their criticism of how the war was being waged, and ultimately led to the fall of the British Ministry, then in power, and an entire revision of the plan of campaign.

Crimea and Suez

One of the most celebrated of "scoops" was the announcement by The London Times (in the third of a series of long editorials—not in the news columns at all) of the exceedingly important fact that Disraeli had purchased on behalf of the British Government a majority of the stock of the Suez Canal Company. This coup on the part of the astute Prime Minister was actually suggested to him by one of the editors of The Times, and was one of the most important political steps ever taken by Great Britain.

During the year 1903 the foreign intelligence of The London Times cost about $250,000. A single cable message, on the subject of a revolution in Argentina, cost $6,000. During the Boer War The Times supplied its readers with war despatches from some twenty-four correspondents, but the censorship to the present war has been as hard on the "scoop-getter" as on the spy.

CANADA'S FOOD FISH

Artificial Culture on Grand Scale by Government

Artificial fish culture is a necessity in connection with some of Canada's best food and game fishes. This is due in the first place to over-fishing. Then many of the feeding and spawning grounds in the lakes and rivers have been ruined by the careless deposition of industrial and other wastes. These conditions apply with especial force to such lake species as the whitefish, one of the finest of the food fishes. In 1816, approximately 221 million whitefish fry were distributed in the Great Lakes.

During the 1915 season three new hatcheries were put into operation. One of these, situated near Kenora, Ontario, was designed for the propagation of whitefish and has a capacity of 70 million eggs. A second, at Thurlow, near Belleville, Ontario, replaces a smaller one that had been in operation in former years at Newcastle. It accommodates eight million salmon trout and over 60 million whitefish, and the third, in Qu'Appelle park, has a capacity o f50 million eggs. The Kenora hatchery however, is used for pickerel as well as whitefish, although the latter is the fish chiefly handled, the fry being used in stocking the waters in the Lake of the Woods district.

Canada's fresh water fisheries have an annual value of about $4,000,000 and, if wisely conserved, are capable of great expansion. In districts such as the Lake of the Woods region, keeping the waters stocked with game and food fish serves to further enhance their value as tourist resorts. Canada is certain to be visited by an ever-increasing number of tourists within the next few years, and her lame as a "sportsman's paradise" will do much to increase the number.

—Dr. Ford, of Wingham, veterinary surgeon, has in his possession a freak of nature, a bull with five legs. The animal is two years old, and was raised on a farm in the Greenock swamp near Black Horse and is healthy in every way. All the limbs are well developed, only the fifth leg which grows from the right hip, is held a few inches from the ground, and the muscle has become stiff from not being used.

Lockie Willson, Provincial Director of Fairs, was present and delivered an address.

The Housewife's Corner

Dutch Recipes.

Egg soup paste is used in different kinds of soup, much the same as the Italians use macaroni, and it is good. It is made thus: Yolks of 4 eggs, pinch of cayenne pepper, level teaspoonful of salt, white of 1 egg and one-half cup of cream. Beat all together well, strain through cheesecloth and pour into custard molds that have been buttered, set in pan of boiling water, half their height. Bake in medium hot oven until the paste is firm in the centre; when cool cut in thin slices or fancy shapes and add to the clear soup with a little finely chopped parsley.

Milk Rivel Soup.—Grate 3 large slices of bread very fine, add 2 level tablespoons of flour, 1 well-beaten egg; mix together, rubbing with the hands until it falls apart in strings or crumbs; add 1 pint of milk, three-fourths pint of water. Bring to a boil and season with salt, pepper and pinch of sugar, teaspoonful of fine chopped parsley and tablespoonful of butter; now add rivels and cook for five minutes.

Yellow Tomato Soup.—Cook 1 quart of water and 1 pint of yellow tomatoes until soft, put through strainer; add pint of milk, salt, pepper and 2 large tablespoonfuls of butter. Add pinch of soda to milk, so that it does not curdle; bring all to scalding point and pour over large soda crackers.

Baked Fish.—Select number of small fish required and clean thoroughly, salt, pepper and lightly roll in flour. Lay out flat in baking dish, and with knife gash each fish twice, put piece of salt pork over the gash, sprinkle with chopped parsley and finely chopped onion and mushrooms over all, using one cup to 8 or 10 fish. Dot all with small pieces of butter, or one cup of finely chopped salt pork. Pour in enough soup stock to cover bottom of pan half an inch deep; if none is at hand use part water and milk. Just before putting in oven, pour juice of one lemon over all. Bake for 35 or 40 minutes, until the fish has parted from the bone. Lift with a large bread knife or cake turner if the pan is not presentable for use on table. (It is usually served with clean towel folded around pan set on large plate.)

Salt Mackerel or Other Fish.—Soak to withdraw excess of salt, put over fire in pan of cold water, bring to boiling point; remove, broil on gas broiler (or use broiler over coal fire) for 10 minutes. Serve on hot dish, with sauce made from one cup of stewed tomatoes, one onion, two tablespoonfuls of butter, and no seasoning, as mackerel is salty enough.

Stewed Chicken With Dumplings.—Prepare and cook a stewing fowl, using plenty of water, so as to have a lot of gravy; add one large onion, one dumplings made as follows: two cups of flour, one teaspoonful of salt, two eggs, one small teaspoonful of baking powder, using enough milk to make a stiff dough. Drop by small spoonfuls into boiling chicken liquor, sprinkle with finely cut parsley, cook 20 minutes. Lift in centre of dish put chicken around, and pour gravy over all.

Meat Shuffle.—Butter a baking dish well; put in layer of mashed potatoes one inch thick, then layer of cold chopped meat, two onions, one pepper; brush top with melted butter. Bake for 20 minutes in hot oven.

Potatoes Doughnuts.—One pint of milk, two ounces of butter (four level tablespoonfuls) and 10 boiled and mashed potatoes. Keep over fire until hot, beat well, let cool, then beat in the yokes of six eggs, four ounces of fine macaroni, sugar enough to sweeten, one-half cup of finely chopped citron and enough bread crumbs to enable it to mold into rolls, as thick as the finger. Roll in bread crumbs, fry in boiling fat until golden brown, drain on blotting paper and serve.

Molasses Pie.—Prepare a pie plate and line two pie tins—in each put a cup of New Orleans molasses in which has been stirred ½ teaspoonful of baking soda and 1 teaspoonful of vinegar and on top put 1 cup of crumbs prepared as follows: 1½ cups of flour, ¾ cup of sugar, ¼ cup of butter, 2 teaspoonfuls of cinnamon and one tablespoonful of mace. Rub all together until it produces a fine crumb. Bake 20 minutes in a hot oven.

Apple Custard.—Line square or round pans with a good pie paste, then fill with finely sliced apples, dust well with cinnamon and nutmeg and ¾ cup of sugar. To average sized tin make custard of three eggs, ½ cup of sugar, 1 pint of milk, beat well and pour over pie. Sprinkle in 2 tablespoonfuls of currants on each pie. Bake for 20 minutes in a moderate oven.

Genuine Ginger Cake.—½ cup of sugar, ½ cup of shortening, 1 cup of New Orleans molasses, 1 cup of boiling coffee (or water), in which dissolve 2 level tablespoonfuls each of cinnamon, allspice and ginger, ½ teaspoonful of salt, 2½ cups of flour. Bake for 45 minutes in a moderate oven.

Apple Marmalade.—Core and cut 7 pounds of apples, cook 1 pint of water, put through sieve, add same weight of sugar, grated peel of 4 lemons, 1 orange and four ounces of green ginger. Boil nearly one hour, stir frequently.

Useful Hints.

If one corner of a rug gets much more wear than the rest, turn it around from time to time.

If you find that your soup is too salt add a very little sugar. This helps to take off the salty taste.

A splendid remedy for a cut is to take the skin of an uncooked egg and place it over the wound, leaving it until healed.

To destroy moths and bright'n carpets, go over them, after sweeping with a cloth wrung out in water to which a little turpentine has been added.

After a meal dish-washing will be a small task if you keep a pan of warm, soapy water handy, and drop every fork and plate in as soon as it has been used.

Left-overs of cauliflowers can be most tastefully used up by putting them into a baking dish, covering with white sauce and buttered bread crumbs, and browning in the oven.

A cheap cut of steak will make a delicious dish if simmered slowly in a covered pan with chopped onions and a can of tomatoes. Allow from two to three hours for the cooking.

To keep a pet palm in order, the leaves should be sponged carefully every week. Don't water palms too often; let the earth become dry, then soak it liberally.

Chiffon, if not of too flimsy a character, will stand washing perfectly well. A little prepared gum added to the last rinsing water is generally an improvement. Iron when nearly dry with a cool iron and without any covering.

The great secret of frying is to have plenty of fat and to have it boiling hot when you drop things into it, so that the inside cooks without absorbing the grease.

Brass bedsteads will keep in much better condition if occasionally rubbed over with a little sweet oil; afterward wipe well with a dry duster and polish with a leather.

To keep enamelled kitchenware clean put it once a week in a large vessel of cold water, with a tablespoonful of lye added; bring to boiling point, and afterwards wash in the usual way.

A simple fruit salad can be made by cutting six bananas in pieces, adding to them a tin of pine-apple chunks cut small, sprinkling over a quarter of a pound of crystallized cherries, cut into little bits, and adding the syrup from pineapple.

If your hands are dirty after doing household work, pour on them a little olive oil, add a little castor sugar, and rub this well into the skin. Afterwards, wash the hands, using no soap, but merely rinsing them in clear, cold water, and then dry thoroughly.

To keep butter cool, place the butter in a deep dish in a basin of cold water with about two tablespoonfuls of salt added to it. Soak a clean flower pot in water and place over the butter. Re-soak the flower pot every now and then, and you will find the butter will keep nice and firm.

Where a young child appears to be in a chronic state of hunger, and is always asking for food, you may be sure that something is wrong with the constitution; it may be a form of indigestion. Some grown-up people are afflicted in the same way, and are never content unless eating and drinking.

Celery goes well with chicken and sandwiches. Only the very small heart is used, and this must be finely minced or pounded with the flesh of the chicken. Fish sandwiches may have anchovy sauce or a little chutney or capers, pounded smooth. At this time of the year something tart and acid in the flavoring of a sandwich is more welcome than many people suppose.

LIVING IN BERLIN.

Forty-five Per Cent. of People Live in One Room.

Some information on this subject is given in the new number of the Town-Planning Review. The greater part of the population of Berlin of all classes except the richest suffers, we are told, from lack of house-room. In 1900 45 per cent. of all Berlin households occupied dwellings of only one room, and 70 per cent. of the households had dwellings of not more than two rooms; yet rent absorbed from one-fifth to one-fourth of the income of the working people. Whereas as in 1711 the average number per house was 14, it is now 77. There are houses which contain 250 families each. Berlin's wide streets give an appearance of spaciousness, but the overcrowding is appalling—viz., 32,000 per square kilometre, as against only 16,000 in London, which is not exactly under-populated—with results described as "terrible" as regards alike the health and the morals of the inhabitants.

Potatoes are more wholesome baked than in any other form.

No. 8703.

Dainty Underneaths Easily and Attractively Embroidered.

A very pretty combination is the above illustration of Ladies' Home Journal Pattern, No. 8703, which can be made in three ways, giving a very desirable variety of choice in the planning of the garment. Embroidery patterns No. 14,715 and No. 14,736 will add wonderfully to this, and its application found interesting indeed. The dainty butterfly sprays contain ten motifs suitable for embroidering underwear, waists, dresses and neckwear. The scallops are three inches deep, and the pattern contains two yards. They are also suitable for finishing the bottom of underwear and dresses. The pattern cuts in sizes 32 to 42 inches bust measure, requiring in size 36, 2¼ yards of 48 inch material.

Patterns, 15 cents each, can be had at your local Ladies' Home Journal Pattern dealer, or from The Home Pattern Company, 183-A George Street, Toronto, Ontario.

CHINESE FAMILY LIFE.

Absorption of Foreign Ideas Making New Conditions.

The Pekin Gazette gives the following interesting description of family life in China, commenting that these conditions are fast changing as a result of the absorption of foreign ideas.

"The Chinese family in its old-fashioned organism is a small kingdom with the head of the family as the king and ruler of all under his roof. Except for the law of the country, his words are law. In certain cases the word of the family chief is even greater than the law of the country. The absolute power of control and punishment of the father over his sons and daughters, the latter before their marriage, and the former even after their marriage, is universal throughout the land. A proverb says: 'If a king wishes his subject to die, he must die; if a father wishes his son to be destroyed he must be destroyed.' Such is the severity of the family law. A typical case of this sort came under the notice of the writer some ten years ago even in such a modern city as Shanghai.

"A certain Li family had only one son between two brothers, and naturally he was considered the pearl of the house. At the age of 16 the boy was sent to a mission school to study and in due course he decided to become a Christian. This was strongly opposed by the whole family, especially the grandfather. But at first they smiled at the carefully advanced hint by the boy, believing that he would never dare to make such a change. They were mistaken, for the boy not long after announced that he had applied for baptism at the mission, but made it plain to his parents that unless their consent was secured he could not be baptized.

"This so aroused his parents that they shut him up in a small room, and for fear that he would escape, took every particle of decent clothing from him and clothed him in old rags. Undaunted, the boy crept through a window and interviewed the missionary, who, of course, counselled him to be patient, and told him to return home to be an 'obedient son.'

"The boy took the advice, but not until he had secured a lot of Christian literature, which he said he would read and distribute among his relatives at his native place, to which his parents had threatened to send him if he refused to give up his new faith. Finally the boy was sent to his country home in Ningpo to receive disciplinary lessons to counteract the Christian doctrine. The boy promised to write after his arrival at his native place, but no word has come since. Although no one will ever know what sort of lessons the boy received at the hands of his family-elders, it could not have been easy; for it was the custom of the Ningpo elders even to bury people alive for crimes unpunishable by state law. This, of course, was an exceptional case, but such exceptions were not by any means rare."

"Curfew" comes from two French words, "couvre feu," which mean "cover fire."

The Siberian Railway is the longest in the world. Its total length is 4,765 miles.

Only forty years ago the Japanese went to battle clad from head to foot in armor, and wearing hideous masks to frighten the enemy.

LIGHT ON GERMAN METHODS.

Nothing She Can Do Will Ever Degrade Other Nations.

The Italian Green Book sheds further light upon the hopes and devices of the enemy. As far back as March it now transpires, Germany was angling for peace with Russia in order that she might fling her whole strength against her foes in the west. The design failed then, as it has failed now, when, according to the methods of German calculation, the temptation to Russia to come to terms has been ever so much greater. Fortunately the Czar and his advisers have but one answer for such attempts to detach them from their Allies, and to break their pledged word. An international agreement is much more to Russian than "a scrap of paper." Before this war is over she will have taught the Germans more than one lesson. The latest news from the Eastern front is evidence that she is still as potent in the field as she is honest in the Council chamber. But the lesson that Germany needs most of all is one which will prove conclusively to her that nothing she can do will ever degrade other nations to the low moral plane upon which the German mentality moves.

MADE OF GUN METAL.

Great Monuments Made From Captured Guns.

The colossal monument representing the king of beasts which surmounts the memorial mound at Waterloo was cast from cannon captured in that great fight. The mound, which is artificial, consists of thousands of cartloads of earth; its summit and the gun-metal lion are reached by a flight of 226 steps.

A statue of Wellington himself, the immortal victor of Waterloo, cast in gun-metal, is on Laffans Plain, at Aldershot. This equestrian statue used to stand at Hyde Park corner, but it was so ugly that it was removed to a more lonesome situation. It was cast from French guns.

But there is a gun-metal monument, also in memory of the Iron Duke, at Hyde Park corner still. This is the well-known Achilles Monument, in which the Greek hero is represented with "sword and buckler"—his only garments. It was subscribed for by the women of Britain, as is recorded on the plinth.

The lions which flank the base of the Nelson Column, in Trafalgar Square, are also made of gun-metal from captured guns. They were designed by Sir Edwin Landseer. Some, body painted out to Landseer, when it was too late, that lions almost invariably cross their forepaws when lying down, and he was so angry at his lack of observation that he wanted to remodel them.—London Answers.

Submarine Not New.

The submarine, so far from being a modern invention, is quite a hoary veteran. As long ago as the days of the first Stuart King of England all London was flocking to the Thames to see a wonderful boat, designed by a Dutchman called Drebelle, which could travel under water as easily as on its surface; and by virtue of a mysterious liquid which replaced the oxygen in the air its crew could remain under the water for a considerable time.

THE WOUND BENEATH WATER.

Lieut. Crossley Faced Death to Save His Ship and Crew.

Not all the deeds of courage and daring are performed in the fierce excitement of the battlefield. In T. P.'s Journal of Great Deeds of the Great War there is the following account of how Lieut. C. V. Crossley, R.N.R., commanding Trawler No. 466, faced death to save his ship and crew.

Through the gray sea a small squadron of ugly, long-nosed, hump-sterned boats was quartering the waters of the North Sea. It was a unit of the East Coast Mine-Sweeping Fleet.

Behind one of these lumpy trawlers there suddenly leaped three tumbled columns of foam. Trawler No. 466 kicked a little against the sky. Her stern lifted in a jerk and her blunt nose dipped abruptly into the sea. When the lather from the mine explosions subsided, her stern was lower than it had been before, and gradually it sank lower still.

Lieutenant Crossley remained unmoved when the three great gusts of fire and noise burst from under his ship's stern, although he knew that the explosions had probably made rents in the bottom of his vessel that might bring death to all on board.

He called all hands on deck and ranged them at their stations. Then he went down the narrow iron ladders that led to the bowels of the ship. With the water washing about his feet he walked toward the stern, fumbling his way through the blackness. He heard the whisper and wash of the sea as it poured in a ceaseless rush through the wound in the ship's side. If the ship foundered, he was caught.

There was no room to stand upright, and he went on his hands and knees. The water almost reached his mouth. He crawled on through the choked space and found the rent.

The water pressed through the hole with an enormous force. Crossley examined the wound without hurry, and judged that it could be partially stopped and the ship saved.

He crawled back to the ladders, gathered his materials, and went again into that dark tunnel in the stern. All alone there, with hardly room enough to move about, fighting the inrush of the sea, fighting the clutch of the icy water that numbed him, he worked deliberately, carefully, patiently.

He managed to stop the hole so that the pumps could take care of all the water that leaked in. Then he came on deck again, rang the engines up, and pointed the snub nose of Trawler No. 466 for land. So, he brought his ship to harbor, with her pumps working hard and her stern sagging dangerously, but safe.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE.

Paragraphs About People in the News of the Day.

Madame Sarah Bernhardt has for years had a curious business custom. She insists on being paid, not, as is usual, at the end of each week, but after each performance.

Sergeant Michael O'Leary always wears his hat at the back of his head. As a compliment to him most of the Irish Guards, proud of the V.C. who captured a position all by himself, are wearing their hats at the same angle.

Mr. W. Joynson-Hicks, M.P. does the legal work of the London General Omnibus Company, and is the arch terror of people with a mania for bringing actions claiming damages for fictitious injuries sustained while alighting from the motor-buses.

Mrs. Lincoln, the wife of the British ex-M.P. spy, who is staying in London in a tall, fair woman of rather striking appearance. She was born in Hamburg, but speaks English quite fluently. Her main preoccupation is the care of her four children, who have been left in a precarious position owing to their father having fled to America.

When General Joffre pins a medal on the breast of a brave French soldier, he kisses him. The moving pictures lately released by the French authorities show him kissing a score of heroes in Alsace. The other day a Territorial at one of the picture palaces was heard to exclaim, "What would my missus say if General French were to kiss me?"

Father Vaughan's great wish has been to go to the Front and act as Chaplain to the Catholic Forces, but apparently it is thought he is too old for these exertions. You see, his appearance is very deceptive. In the pulpit thundering his outspoken sermons, he would not be taken for older than fifty. Yet in August he was sixty-eight.

There was a time when De Wet was the "hero" of more conundrums of a facetious character than any other man in the public eye. That was because, as a fair fighting enemy, we admired him. Since he turned traitor people have thought of him as little as possible, and there has not been a single "De Wet" joke, which shows how largely he has earned our contempt.

The general opinion about Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, the British M.P., whose views on the war are so distasteful to the rest of his countrymen, is that he is a disappointed man. There was a whisper that he expected an invitation from the Ministry some months before the war, but this invitation never materialized, and is not likely now.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, OCTOBER 3.

Lesson I.—Elijah in Naboth's Vineyard, 1 Kings 21. Golden Text: Num. 32. 23.

1. The Conspiracy Against Naboth (Verses 11-14).

Verse 11. Did as Jezebel had sent unto them—Their moral degradation was so deep that they were ready to follow her bidding.

12. They proclaimed a fast—They would give the trial a religious aspect.

13. Two men, the base fellows—"Sons of Belial." The trial also would be a pretense at legality.

Did curse God and the king—The charge would be that of blasphemy, not only against God, but also against the representative of God, namely, the king. Such a charge would the more readily inflame the people. (See Lev. 24. 16; 2 Sam. 16. 9; 19. 21; 1 Kings 2. 8.)

14. They carried him forth out of the city—This was according to the law (see Lev. 24. 14; Acts 7. 58).

Compare the procedure in the trial and death of Naboth with that of Jesus.

II. Ahab Steals the Vineyard (Verses 15, 16).

16. To take possession of it—It would appear that under the law the property of traitors was forfeited to the king. (See 2 Sam. 16. 4.) Ahab lost no time in taking advantage of the situation. In 2 Kings 9. 26 we learn that Bidkar and Jehu rode with Ahab on this occasion and that the denunciation of Ahab by Elijah was so fierce and penetrating that Jehu could unite it from memory many years afterward.

III. Elijah Condemns the King (Verses 17-20).

19. Hast thou killed, and also taken possession?—The prophet not only is to charge the king with his crime of murder, but to chide him for his "indecent haste" in taking possession of the stolen property. From 2 Kings 9. 26 we learn that Ahab went down to the vineyard the day after Naboth was slain.

In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth—Ahab's death is recorded in 1 Kings 22. 38-40. He was not killed at Jezreel, but near Samaria.

20. Hast thou found me, O mine enemy?—The guilty conscience of the king is pricked as soon as Elijah appears. He knows the condemnation is at hand. He is angered, however, at the quick appearance of the prophet, and looks upon him as an enemy. A man living in sin is very apt to regard one who knows of his sin as an enemy.

A lie has always a certain amount of weight for those who wish to believe it.—Rice.

In taking revenge a man is but his enemy's equal, in passing it he is his superior.—Bacon.

A noble nature can alone attract the noble, and alone knows how to attract them.—Goethe.

There is one thing that can never turn into suffering, and that is the good we have done.—Maeterlinck.

If we hope to instruct others we should familiarize our minds to some fixed and determinate principles of action.—Coleridge.

Riches.—A woman proud to call you son; a man proud to call you brother; a girl proud to call you husband; a child proud to call you father; a few others proud to call you friend.—McLain.

PRINCESS AS NURSE.

Takes a Daily Course of Four Hours' Training.

While Prince Arthur of Connaught is doing excellent work at the front, the Princess, anxious to "do her bit," has joined the nursing staff of a London hospital—St. Mary's, Paddington. Her Royal Highness is engaged chiefly in learning the dressing of wounds, and arrives at the hospital at nine o'clock each morning to take a daily course of four hours' training. She assists at the dressings, takes the ordinary turns of the nurse, and generally "makes herself one of the rest," to quote one of the other nurses.

Princess Arthur is anxious to go to the front as a nurse, but nothing definite has been decided yet. In taking up nursing work, her Royal Highness is following the example of many of our royal ladies, headed by the Queen and Queen Alexandra. It was the latter, indeed, who set the example in this direction. Among other duly qualified royal nurses at the present time are the Princess Royal, Princess Victoria, Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, the Duchess of Argyll, Princess Henry of Battenburg, the Duchess of Connaught and her daughters, and the Duchess of Albany.

The Terror by Sea

John Renfrew, sauntering up Fifth Avenue, New York, in the hot glare of a June afternoon, suddenly made up his mind to go home.

He had been out of England just three years, and had never felt home-sickness so acute, so overwhelming, so unbearable, as now.

He was one of those persons whom the novelists love to describe as a strong man, and his looks did not belie the part. He was not very young, though he had taken some pains to preserve the youth which accomplishes so much in the world with so little apparent effort.

His actual age was thirty-nine, and he had looks of a kind, a well-knit, alert figure, of which, catching a sight in the long mirror of his hotel that morning, he had suddenly pictured in uniform with an odd thrill at his heart. He was not a soldier, nor had any of his family ever done anything in the soldiering line. But now they were all at it. Even his old father, who had been retired for six odd years in a Sussex manor-house, had got into some clothes approved of for the Volunteers, and was doing Sunday route marches of fifteen miles a day.

His brothers? Already one had helped to dye red the Dardanelles sand with his blood, and it was because of that the call had come to John Renfrew—a call so loud and insistent as to be almost startling.

Hitherto he had heard it only dimly and in secret places, chiefly because he believed that he was doing his duty where he was, and indirectly helping the cause of the Allies by means of the great commercial machine to which he was attached, of which, indeed, he was already one of the honored heads.

The deciding factor, though yet he would not have admitted it, was a few lines in a woman's letter he had received from England that very day. He took it out presently when he stepped into Sherry's for the cup of tea which his English habit made his inner man call for at a given hour each afternoon.

"You ask what I am doing? I wonder whether you will laugh when I tell you. I have no gift for nursing, besides I could not be equipped in time to be of any use, and you know that whatever I try to do must be 'top-hole,' as Billy says. By the by, the latest about Billy is that he went to a recruiting office miles from Crayford Heath and lied about his age. They suspected him, however, and he has been rejected again. Mother lives in daily terror lest he repeats the experiment and comes back a soldier. I am writing this from Erith, so perhaps you can guess I'm making shells. Yes, honestly, and very good shells, too. I know that I am of use. If I did not believe it was any good nothing would keep me here. There are some to whom it is merely a new sensation, and who won't keep on, but to me it is work—God-given work—which is going to help the great sum we are going to reckon up soon.

"Soon! Oh, John, if it could only be soon. We are so tired of waiting, and so many are going every day, going for good, I mean, 'west' as they say in the fighting line. When they told us it was going to be a three-years' war none of us realized just what that would mean. I don't believe that we shall be able to stand it for more than half that time.

"Yes, I'm making shells, and the work is interesting, and my hands are ruined. But all the time I keep thinking what an occupation for a woman, whose first business should be to preserve the life men don't prize half enough. Oh, if only I were a man!"

Here she left off abruptly, and began to write on another and quite irrelevant theme.

A strange look came on John Renfrew's face, for Grace Babbacombe was the only woman who had ever interested himself, the one thought he might one day marry when everything had straightened out and the way was perfectly clear.

If there is one thing in the world which proves that a man's first youth is past it is when he begins to reckon and calculate to determine to clear the path before he does this thing or that.

Youth, thank God, has nought to do with such reckoning or calculation in the office and affairs of love, therefore is there still some remnant of the happiness of Heaven left upon a dreary earth.

He had left England without saying the decisive word to Grace Babbacombe, and had kept on writing dilatory letters to her right through, paying just sufficient attention to her to keep her heart stirred and her mind diverted from others—in a word, he had stolen and kept her youth without giving her anything in exchange.

Some poignant note other than that struck by the poignancy of the fateful hour which had struck in Britain's destiny went to the man's heart at the moment, and he saw himself, but only dimly, as he was—selfish to the core.

It was not a pleasant revelation; the truth has no time for embroidery when it really comes out to slay the unworthy and the false.

His clean-cut, brown, resolute face paled a little, and his eyes became troubled. The call had come! He knew that he ought to be at home, that there was work for him to do there, grimmer work than manipulating great army contracts which were putting money in his purse.

There were others to step into that breach. He had a fighting arm, which he had been taught to use, and his place was in the trenches. To the trenches then he would go.

The rest of the day was spent in calls at steamship and other offices connected with his journey. There was a boat going out next day, but he could not be ready, and must wait till the following Wednesday. Late that night, in his luxurious bedroom on the fourth floor of the Astoria, he wrote a letter to Grace Babbacombe.

"Sixty hours after you get this, my dear, you may look to see me face to face. I will come straight to Erith, because nobody except you will know I am in England. Do you understand what that means, Grace? It means that I want you. Heavens, how desperately I want you! I can't set it down in words. But before I dare ask you for the word which will make heaven for me out of a very troubled and, up to now, unsatisfactory earth, I shall have to be at your feet. I have been wrong, my dear, wrong all through. What I ought to have done was to beg you to come here with me to help build up the new life which is as dust and ashes in my mouth at the moment when I write.

"I know now that it has been dust and ashes all through. I've missed the best. God send it may not be too late to come up with it yet. Couldn't you have done something to show me the appalling magnitude of my folly and selfishness? It is greater because I have loved you all along, and only waited the convenient season. What happened to the man in the Bible who kept on waiting the convenient season? I seem to remember something about him, but you who read it so constantly will be able to put me right. Side by side with this overwhelming desire to see you, to hear your voice, to beg a crumb from your rich store, there is the other call. I've been among the slackers, dear woman, though I have called myself by a higher-sounding name. And I know that you have thought so, too, and it gives me courage to face you, that before I come I'll have fallen into line.

"I won't write more, because if I once let myself go there will be no damming of the flood. Love you—how I love you! If only I could see you at this moment! I should make you know and believe it.

"I am sailing on the Minotaur next Wednesday. They are warning us, of course, on this side, but there is no terror of the sea big or cruel enough to keep me from you. Good-bye, my love, my dear! If it is any satisfaction to you to hear it on paper there never has been any other. It is my wife I'm writing to, the wife God gave me, though I have been so slow at awakening to the priceleasness of the gift.

"Good-bye, no, not good-bye, it is a loathly word which ought to be wiped out of the book of remembrance.—Your faithful and repentant lover, John Renfrew."

The boat sailed duly at the scheduled hour after the company had shorn themselves of all responsibility by issuing explicit warning.

She had an uneventful voyage across the Atlantic, which for once was kind and sunny to the verge of extravagance.

It was when the low green shores of Ireland hove in sight that the terror came. It was in the full light of a glorious afternoon, when suddenly a few hundred yards away, up popped the wicked little periscope of the submarine, and the deadly torpedo was launched.

It was all over in ten minutes, and as John Renfrew struggled in the water a shot from the submarine destroyed his last chance of life.

It was all over, then, he thought confusedly as he sank into the great nothingness, but, thank God, Grace knew!

He had partly redeemed himself, given his life, such poor stuff as it was. Perhaps somewhere God, who knows all of human weakness, would be pitying and kind. Her face, like an aureole, shone upon him as he went down.

* * * * * * *

Grace Babbacombe is still making shells, and if those who work by her side have noticed any change it is only such a change as makes her more and more a miracle of sweetness and indomitable industry and high resolve.

They do not know that inside the bodice of her gown there is a talisman, the letter John Renfrew wrote in the silent night watches in the Hotel Asteria at New York. Her lover's letter, the lover who is nearer to her now than in all the years she had known him, the lover who will meet again where all the terrors and alarms will be forgotten—on the other side.

Not Likely.

"Was it your craving for drink that brought you here?" asked the sympathetic visitor at the jail.

"Great Scott, ma'am! Do I look so stupid as to mistake this place for a saloon?"

In Shakespeare's time the parts of heroines were taken by boys, there being no female actors. That is why the poet makes so many of his heroines disguise themselves in male attire.

Canaries came originally from the Canary Isles, where, in their wild state, the birds were not yellow, as we generally know them, but a dark olive green.

Rumania's Queen is Loved by Subjects

The above picture of Queen Marie of Rumania was taken when she was riding her favorite horse at a recent military review in Bucharest. Queen Marie, accredited one of the most beautiful women in all European royalty, is one of the granddaughters of the late Queen Victoria of England. She is idolized by all Rumanians. Her mother was a daughter of the late Czar Alexander II., of Russia, and she is a first cousin of King George of England, while her husband, King Ferdinand, is a Hohenzollern prince.

SOME MILITARY TERMS.

How the Many Distinguishing Names Originated.

Has it ever occurred to you to ask why a soldier is called a "private"? It is not difficult to see the reason. The name owes its origin to the fuller term "a private soldier," as opposed to a more public soldier who holds other military terms is, however, not so easy to discover. The name corporal is connected with corps, literally a body, and then, of course, a body of men. The corporal is the man in charge of a small body or squad of men. The lance in lance-corporal and lance-sergeant refers, as one would expect, to the weapon of that name. "Sergeant" is really the same word as "servant"; its origin dates back to the time when noblemen kept their own retainers to fight their battles. A color-sergeant is one who has charge of the colors; a staff-sergeant is one that is on the staff of the regiment.

The names of commissioned officers are rather more interesting. Few people will have reflected that the word lieutenant is practically identical with the expression "locum tenens." The French language is developed from Latin, and the Latin "locum tenens" (holding the place) has become lieutenant in French. A "locum" is one who acts as a substitute for someone else, and a lieutenant was originally one who also acted as representative or deputy. The original use of the word is still preserved in the compound lieutenant-colonel, which means an officer next in rank below a colonel who is acting as a colonel.

Just as corporal is connected with French corps, "a body," so captain is derived from Latin "caput" (a head), which is related to capital and other words. A captain thus means one who is at the head of a number of men.

The origin and history of the word colonel is rather complicated. It is connected with the word column. In Italian, which is very closely related both to Spanish and French, the word for colonel is colonnello, and the word for column is colonna, so that the connection between the two is easily seen. A colonel is then originally one who is at the head of a column.

The word major is short for sergeant-major, which means the major or chief sergeant. A sergeant-major was formerly a much higher rank than it is now. A general is one who has a general command over a whole regiment.

Scouts for Seal Hunters.

A novel use of the aeroplane is under consideration by owners of Newfoundland sealing vessels as a result of the failure of the seal hunts this year. It is proposed that two experienced aviators be engaged to visit the East Coast and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, just before the opening of next season to discover the herds.

"How is it you always pick out a bachelor to listen to your hard luck story?"

"A married man has troubles of his own, usually."

Bread made from pine-bark and moss is sometimes eaten in Finland.

CAREERS BROKEN BY THE WAR.

Most Young Men Have Abandoned Their Civil Pursuits.

How much of a man's success is due to himself, and how much ought to be credited to good fortune is always a difficult problem, says British Engineering. Doubtless there are some men who are entirely self-made, but they are not numerous. That most are the creatures of circumstances is shown by the way that families remain in the same social plane generation after generation. Occasionally a member goes under and disappears, and sometimes one rises to become a source of pride and envy to his relatives; but generally speaking they all maintain about the same position, allowing for the variations in the standard of living, which affect the whole country. Every parent shows his belief in the immense influence which circumstances have upon a career by the sacrifices he makes to give his children a good education. The man who has been to a public school will pinch himself to send his son to the same school or better, while an acquaintance with undergraduates at the older universities shows that many of them come from rectories and vicarages of which the stipends seem quite inadequate to support the necessary expense. Evidently the father has saved for years that his son may have a fair chance of taking his place among people of education and culture. All experience shows that the "start in life" largely determines what the career shall be to a very great proportion of humanity, and that a bad start may easily be disastrous.

These considerations are of special interest just now, when most young men have joined the Army. If conscription had previously obtained in this country, such a course would have been provided for, as in the customs of trade and the curricula of colleges would have developed in such a way as to allow of the military course being interpolated between two series of civil experiences with the minimum of disturbance. But it is entirely new to us for middle-class youths to join the Army for the course of a war. In the past those who entered did so with the idea of making it a profession for life, the only exception being during the South African War, when the Yeomanry attracted a number of adventurous spirits for a time. The numbers, however, were comparatively small, and when they returned they made their way back into civil life without much difficulty. The conditions are very different now. There are very few young men of education, between the ages of 19 and 25, that are not with the colors, and every day the pressure grows stronger on those who have hitherto resisted the country's call. Now it is just the period between the ages of 19 and 26 which gives direction and stamp to a man's career. The school age is past, and has been replaced by university, collegiate, or practical training.

KITES AID GERMANS.

A Certain Number of Soldiers Have Been Trained to Fly Them.

Most people are under the impression that the only aerial machines being used today by the armies that are at war are aeroplanes and airships. As a matter of fact, captive balloons and kites are much to the fore, and it is recognized by all the great powers that their uses are invaluable.

During the last few years the Germans have recognized the advantages gained by the use of man-lifting kites and a certain number of their soldiers have been trained to fly them both by day and by night. It is said that the passenger of a German war-kite is supplied with a camera capable of taking photographs under almost any conditions.

It is declared that the Germans are photographing some of the positions of the allies with the assistance of pigeons. Herr Neubronner, a German chemist, some time back invented a mechanical camera capable of taking instantaneous photographs which can be fitted to the breast of a pigeon by means of an elastic strap, leaving the wings entirely free. The camera weighs less than three ounces and is capable of reproducing objects when the bird is travelling at a velocity of twenty yards a second. At regular intervals a clockwork arrangement opens the shutter of the camera.

A WOMAN HEARSE DRIVER.

A Very Unusual Sight in An English Town.

Almost every day our attention is caught in the public street by the spectacle of women doing work which has hitherto been done by men, and the more we see of this emergency female labor the greater admiration we must feel for the capable and confident way that women have tackled what to them are new occupations. They can turn their hand, as the saying goes, to almost anything. On the 3rd inst. I saw, says a correspondent in the Newcastle (England) Chronicle, a very unusual sight in our town. It was that of a woman driving a hearse, then on the way to a funeral, who handled her pair of handsome blacks with the same ease and composure as we have seen a circus hand manipulate the "ribbons" of a team in the mid-day procession. She was a woman of mature years, and dressed in a black bowler hat, which she suited admirably, and a black costume, who adorned the "box" in quite a graceful way.

TWO AVERAGE CITIZENS.

One Lives on Easy Street and Other is Still Working Hard.

Sid Thatcher wanted to know how I made my money. He says:

"We were boys together and have lived all our lives in this old burg. You're on Easy street, and I'm still working at my job, and it's about all I can do to hold it down. I'm a decent enough citizen, judging by the general run of folks, and I don't know that I've done anything wrong. But you caught on and I didn't. Just where did I miss?"

"Don't forget," I says, money costs a man something. I think my money is worth all it has cost me, but when the bargain was offered to you, you passed it up. I'm not saying you weren't right, but I've never been sorry that I took the bargain."

"How do you mean," he says.

"Well," I says to him, "when we were young fellows, you were a better sport than I was. The other chaps looked to you, when it came to having fun, more than they looked to me. I was left out of many a good time that you made the most of. But it all cost you money. I lost the good times, but I kept the money."

"But a man has a right to a good time," Sid says, a little roily like, "and he's only young once."

"That's right," I says. "I didn't grudge you your good time in the old days."

"And so I shouldn't grudge you your money now," says Sid, getting a little madder.

"Well, what do you think?" and I looks him square in the eye.

"Things ain't right in this world," he says, "or a man wouldn't have to pinch and save at the very time when he most wants to spend his money, and then have to go without because he finds it hard to earn."

"See here, Sir," I says, "I'm not running affairs in this world any more than you are. The rules of the game may be wrong, but neither you nor I can change them, and if a man's going to play at all he's got to play the rules."

"You didn't save all your money; you made a lot of it out of the rise in real estate," says Sid.

"Of course, I did. And I've made a lot out of other things, too."

"I could have done just as well as you did only I didn't have the money for a start."

"That's just it," says I, "the money for a start is what comes hard. You have to pass up a lot of good times to stack up a hundred dollars, and every dollar is so fresh and frisky it's all you can do to hold it. But they seem to like one another's company, and by the time you have a couple of hundred herded together in the bank they stay quieter. And they seem to draw others—you enjoy going to the bank with a dollar when your bunch is beginning to grow. And a very few hundred dollars will give a man a start."

Sid thinks for a minute, and then he puts his hand on my shoulder, friendly like,—Sid always was a good fellow and says:

"You know my boy Gordon, don't you? He's a bright lad and has a good job and fine prospects. But he's a free spender. I wish you'd have a talk with him some day. Do that for me, just for old time's sake, will you?"

"Not to give him good advice," I says. "I'm not stuck on myself that I feel able to give good advice to anybody.

"No," says Sid, "but you and I have got pretty far along the road, and I'd like him to know how things look to you now. Perhaps what you have to tell him and what I have to tell him may help him a bit."

WITH THE ARTFUL DODGER.

Pilgrimage to Interesting Spots in Dickens's London.

Dickens knew his London with wonderful thoroughness. He was acquainted with secret passages and dark lanes, and among them he found much romance. Such is the devotion of his innumerable disciples that many spent the sunshine on a recent afternoon in tracing the devious ways of the Artful Dodger and the innocent Oliver among the byways of Finsbury and Holborn.

Many of the slums of which Boz wrote so intimately have (thank goodness,) disappeared. He did much himself to cause their disappearance. But William J. Roffey, the well-known Dickens lecturer, who knows his seamy London as well as the Artful Dodger himself, was able to conduct a party of members of the Selborne Club to many landmarks associated with the career of Oliver Twist.

One of the most interesting spots to which he led the enthusiasts was the abode of Mr. Fang—the magistrate drawn from actual life, who sentenced young Oliver to three months on the false charge of stealing Mr. Brownlow's silk handerkerchief. Mr. Fang was such a thin disguise for the notorious Mr. Lang that the gentleman was crossed off the rolls very soon after making his appearance in the novel. Mr. Lang's offices were in Hatton Gardens and are now occupied by a firm of lithographers.

We once heard of a man who never told a lie—but he was dead long before we heard about it.

After coaxing a girl to sing, one usually has to do something desperate in order to get her to quit.

GARLIC FOR LUNG TROUBLE.

Said to be Greatest Foe of the Tuberculosis Germ.

Dr. William C. Minchin, a British practitioner, announces that he has achieved excellent results by the use of garlic as a remedy for lung complaints.

Dr. Minchin relates that his attention was first drawn to garlic by the case of a young man who came to him with a very severe case of tuberculosis of the bones of the leg and foot. He advised amputation. This the sufferer refused. Six months later he met the young man, walking about, with his leg almost well. The youth told him he had been treated by a man whose name he gave, with a poultice which had been known for generations as a scrofula cure. The man in question told Dr. Minchin that the poultice was composed of onion, salt and pounded garlic in almost equal proportions. Dr. Minchin readily isolated the garlic as the active ingredient and began experimenting with it. He was astonishing successful.

It seems that the treatment has long been a favorite one in Italy. Tuberculosis is uncommon in Italy, where garlic is used universally; the leading Italian physicians in New York say it is alarmingly prevalent among the children of Italians in America, children who do not eat garlic, largely because their school fellows and other associates ridicule them for smelling of it.

Garlic is allied to the onion family. Its pungent flavor and acrid smell are due to a chemical substances called allyl sulphide. Onions, shallots and chives also owe their flavor to the same substance, but garlic has far more of it than they have. In a teaspoonful of garlic juice there are about two drops of allyl sulphide. The bacilli of this disease seem to be poisoned by allyl sulphide.

No substance is known that penetrates the human body as allyl sulphide penetrates it. You can prove this for yourself in a very simple way. Crush a few cloves of garlic and tie them like a poultice on the sole of your foot; after about twenty minutes ask someone to smell your breath. The odor of garlic will be pronounced. This means that the allyl sulphide has soaked through the skin of your feet, been taken up by the blood and lymphatics and carried by them throughout the body until the lungs are giving it off into the air.

It is known that the allyl sulphide is absorbed principally by the lymphatics, that system of tubes and glands which runs like the blood vessels throughout our systems, carrying the serum that supplies the blood with its fluid and bathing every tissue of the body. This lymph carries the allyl sulphide to the lungs, skin, muscles, liver, kidneys, bones—in fact, it impregnates every organ with it. So, no matter where the tubercle bacilli may be lurking it gets at them.

Our medical authority cites many cases of various forms of tuberculosis from consumption to lupus, which he has cured with garlic. One case was that of a boy of 10, the bones of whose hand were so seriously affected that part of one finger had been amputated and there was free suppuration through three sinuses in the palm. Once every twenty-four hours a poultice of crushed cloves of garlic mixed with lard was applied to the diseased hand. Garlic acts as a blister, so at first the boy suffered a little from the burning, but he soon got relief and within a few days was free from pain. Within six weeks from the commencement of the treatment the boy's hand was entirely healed.

TUBE MAIL CARS NEXT.

Have Been Used in Paris for Some Time.

Parliament recently gave permission to the post office authorities to construct a miniature tube railroad for the purpose of conveying letters and parcels across London in half the time formerly taken. In two tubes, nine feet in diameter, little electrically propelled trucks will run, and parcels and mail bags will be stacked on them. The first postal tube is to be constructed between Paddington and the eastern district office at Whitechapel.

Driven by electric current and controlled by switches at intermediate stations, the mail tubes will not need drivers. They will hurtle through the tubes at about twenty miles an hour, carrying the mails from point to point in half the time that motor vans threading their way through traffic in the streets above would take.

Two tubes are utilized in the scheme, one for up trains and the other for down trains. To avoid any possibility of collisions—for mail trains will be dispatched along the tubes every few minutes—the line is divided up into sections, so that when the train has passed over one stretch of rail it becomes "dead" until it has reached another section. This form of postal tube has been used in Paris with much success for some time. The cost of the new tube for London, which is said to be six and one-half miles long, will be $5,000,000.

Jumps From Buggy and Meets Her Death

Mr Joseph Hanna, of the 10th of Kinloss, along with his wife and little boy about five years of age, came to town on Saturday to visit their daughter, who is stopping on Mechanics Ave and attending High School. They remained until Sunday and a happy little reunion took place.

It was shortly after dinner on Sunday when the parents started to return home, as they had a long drive ahead of them. They were going down the hill on the Durham Road, just at the edge of the town, when one of the rings in the bit spread, causing the horse to run. Mr Hanna hung on as best he could and talked to the horse, at the same time saying to his wife "Stay with the rig," as he thought the horse would stop on going up the hill over the iron bridge. Had Mrs Hanna done as her husband asked all would have been well, as the animal was brought to a stop about the middle of the hill. But the poor woman became excited and feared her little son would be killed. She threw the child out to safety and then followed, but proved less fortunate. When the father started back on the road he met his little son who told him that "Mamma would not speak." The mother had struck the back of her head on the hard gravel, breaking her neck, and lay unconscious. An auto was hurried to the scene and conveyed both mother and child to the hospital, but she never came to, death taking place within an hour. Beyond a few scratches the little boy was not hurt and was able to go home that night with his father and sister.

The body was taken to Morrison's undertaking parlors and that night conveyed to the family residence in Kinloss, the funeral being held on Tuesday to the Teeswater Cemetery.

Besides her husband and a family of one son and three daughters, deceased leaves to mourn her loss her aged mother who resided with her; two sisters, and a brother living near Wingham, all of whom have the sympathy of the community.—Kincardine Reporter.

Pibroch of Donald Dhu

Pibroch of Donuil Dhu,
Pibroch of Donuil,
Wake thy wild voice anew,
Summon Clan Conuil.
Come away, come away,
Hark to the summons!
Come in your war array,
Gentles and commons.

Come from deep glen and
From mountain so rocky,
The war pipe and pennon
Are at Inverlochy.
Come every hill-plaid and
True heart that wears one,
Come every steel blade and
Strong hand that bears one.

Leave untended the herd,
The flock without shelter;
Leave the corpse uninterred,
The bride at the altar;
Leave the deer, leave the steer,
Leave nets and leave logues,
Come with your fighting gear,
Broadswords and targes.

Come as the wind comes, when
Forests are rended,
Come as the waves come, when
Navies are stranded:
Faster come, faster come,
Faster and faster,
Chief, vassal, page and groom,
Tenant and master.

Fast they come, fast they come;
See how they gather!
Wide waves the eagle plume,
Blended with heather.
Cast your plaids, draw your blades,
Forward each man set!
Pibroch of Donuil Dhu,
Knell for the onset!

Mrs John Kidd and sons Victor and Sheldon met with a runaway accident on Thursday last. They were driving to Tiverton, and when opposite Mr Fred Schnittker's farm the horse shied at a pig, and made for the ditch. The three occupants of the buggy were thrown out into the ditch, which is about six feet deep there, and all sustained bruises and other minor injuries, fortunately escaping with no serious hurt. The buggy was wrecked, while the horse is none the worse.

WALKERTON

Judging by the comments in the various papers in Bruce county last week, the action of the county council at Walkerton on Sept 9th, in donating $4000 a month to the Patriotic Fund to aid in caring for soldiers' families as long as the war lasts, is being well received by the ratepayers of Bruce. This will mean $48,000 per year or 13½ mills on all the taxable land in the county. Mr N C Rees, organizing secretary of the Canadian Patriotic Fund, who addressed the county council here in support of the grant, showed that during the first year of the war the average sum contributed for patriotic purposes was $1 per head throughout the Dominion while Bruce county had given only 12c per head. In recruiting Bruce county was also far behind, and had the rest of Canada enlisted in the same proportion as Bruce there would only be 40,000 Canadian soldiers under arms instead of 320,000 men now in khaki in the Dominion. The recent stimulus in recruiting here, together with the generous county grant shows that Bruce is taking steps to wipe out the disgrace and to place this county at least on a par with the rest of the Dominion.

The Board of License Commissioners for Ontario will hold their first meeting in Walkerton on Tuesday, Oct 19th, at the court house at 10 a m, when applications for tavern licenses for the south riding of Bruce for the year commencing May 1st, 1916, will be received and considered by the board. The number now in existence in South Bruce is 11, made up as follows: Walkerton 4, Cetrick 2, Brant 3 and Culross 2. The number that will be applied for when the Board meets here is 16, the two new applicants being Mrs Pauline Klempp of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, and Mr Adam Seigmiller of the Station Hotel, Walkerton, both of whom last their licenses a few years ago. If these two hats were re-opened again, Walkerton would go back to the old hoose era when six moisture plants flourished and bloomed like a bay tree here. But as the aim of the Commission is to a fairer standard of a better provance, it is not likely that they will feature their crusade against booze by opening additional thirst counters in the Bruce capital. We miss our guess if some of the unnatural odors in Bruce aren't dopped off or have a close shave getting through when the Ontario Board meets next month in Walkerton.

One of the women who accompanied a band of gypsies here and on Tuesday got into the toils for working a rather smooth game on Mr Norman Walford, G T R station agent here. Having a weakness for telling fortunes, she accosted her victim at the station and insisted on reading his hand. Part of the game was that his hand be full of money, and not suspecting, Norman enclosed in his fist several silver quarters and allowed the stranger to fondle over his paw. She went on delineating his character and revealing his future, and when he afterwards opened his fist and counted his change he was just $2.25 short in his finances. As he couldn't understand how she had extracted the coin, he kept adding and figuring away until she got out of sight, when he set out in search of her and came up with his quarry at R V Baker's store where she was apparently trying to pull off the same game on the merchant. On being accused of theft she at first denied the charge, but later handed Norm back the coin. Thinking that she might be fleeing other, Walford notified Chief Ferguson, who arrested her and dragged her screaming and shouting to jail. She was liberated after being in the cells a few hours and allowed to get out of town. A G T R conductor and others whom she seems to have worked the same game on are said to have found themselves short after departure. As a sight-of-hand artist she appears to have had everything seen before here beaten a mile.

In the death of Dr Lauchlan Sinclair, which took place at the hospital here at about seven o'clock on Tuesday evening last, Bruce county loses its oldest medical practitioner, and Walkerton its pioneer doctor and one of its best known, most useful and highly esteemed citizens. The deceased, who was in his 77th year, was born and raised in Middlesex county, and after teaching school for a time entered the University of Michigan where he graduated as a doctor in 1864. He joined the medical service of the U S army at Nashville, Tenn, at the outbreak of the American Civil War, and was present at the battle of Resaca and the great fight at Nashville, where 7,000 were killed and 30,000 left wounded on the battle field. At there was no chloroform or other anaesthetics in those days, the doctor used to relate many distressing anecdotes of how the stricken soldiers would grit their teeth while the surgeons sawed off their limbs. Upon the conclusion of the war he returned to Canada, and opened a practice at the village of Napier, Middlesex county, where he married Mrs Julia Henderson, widow of Dr Wm Henderson. He came to Walkerton in 1868, the year the court house was being built, and began the practice which he has so successfully carried on for nearly half a century. He served in the town council for some years and was one of the main movers in getting the waterworks system established in Walkerton, thus wiping out the typhoid fever scourge which was so rampant here. He was also largely instrumental in getting the hospital established in town, and took an active interest in many other public affairs. He was jail surgeon of Bruce for the past quarter of a century and was appointed by the government an insanity expert for this district. He was a staunch Conservative in politics and a Presbyterian in religion. His wife dying about eight years ago, he leaves one son, Dr Herbert H Sinclair, and one daughter, Miss Corinna Sinclair, both of town. The funeral will take place this Thursday afternoon to the Walkerton cemetery.

A gold brooch set in gold with a large diamond centre resulted on Thursday afternoon in the arrest at Toronto of Gordon A Bonter by Detective Twigg on a two-year-old warrant charging him with fraud. The complainants are the Misses McKinnon, of Walkerton. Bonter, who styles himself a promoter, disappeared suddenly from Walkerton in January, 1913, after he had sold $1,000 worth of stock in a bogus coal mine to the three McKinnon sisters here. His description as furnished to the local police at that time contained the information that he wore a large horseshoe tie pin with a diamond centre. Thursday afternoon as Detective Twigg was walking along King St near Toronto St his eye was attracted by the glitter of a large diamond in a man's tie pin. Remembering the warrant and the description he took the chance, accosted his man and arrested him. Bonter formerly resided on Jarvis Street, Toronto. In the fall of 1912 he went to Grey county and on a farm near Flesherton he announced that he had discovered a very rich coal mine. He brought an "expert" from Toronto to report on the property, and so encouraging was this expert's opinion that the police have been looking for him ever since. Having received his reports, Bonter issued stock certificates and disposed of $1400 worth to the Walkerton ladies, and is also said to have sold $100 worth to a Toronto man. He then disappeared and was not heard of again. No word being heard of this another examination of the coal mine took place, and it was discovered that the only coal in the farm had been placed there by human hands aided by shovels. The warrant was then sworn out. Immediately after Bonter's arrest the news was wired to Walkerton, and after he gets his trial on another fraud charge in Toronto on Sept 24th, he will be brought to Walkerton by Constable Ezra Briggs. He will appear before Magistrate Tolton here on the charge of fraud. Bonter is a well dressed, well built man of about 38 years of age. He refused to give any address, saying he had only been in the city a few hours before he was arrested. He says he is married. The diamond which caused his arrest is valued at $600.—Herald and Times.

When Dr. Thomas O'Hagen read some of his poems before the Toronto Women's Press Club last winter one of the members suggested that he send a copy of the verses—first published in The Globe—entitled "I Take Off My Hat to Albert," to the King of the Belgians. CHAPTER XI.—(Cont'd).

"I confess you surprise me, Rosalie! Is not the vocation of a teacher really honorable?"

"It is greater, higher, than any other, except that of the preacher of the Gospel!" answered the girl.

"What is the matter, then—am I unfit for it?"

"Yes, you are totally unfit for it."

"Why, smiled Mark, "has my education been neglected?"

"I know that you are a distinguished classical and mathematical scholar, but to be a teachor of youth requires other and rarer qualifications, which you have not."

"To wit?" inquired Mark, much amused.

"First, then, you should have a natural vocation for teaching, which you have not; a great deal of affection for children; much patience, perseverance, firmness, social humility, some of which qualities you have, and others you have not. I thought you were going to be a statesman."

"A lawyer, child."

"What are you here, then, Mr. Sutherland?"

"Rosalie, I made many an effort to get admitted to practice. I had thought myself well qualified, for I had studied legal science. For several years past I had read law, yet, through the want of familiarity, I failed to get admitted as a practitioner before the court."

"Then I would have gone into some lawyer's office and assisted him as a copyist for nothing until I had acquired an intimacy with those crabbed technicalities."

"My dear Rosalie, that would have been a very small beginning."

"Despise not the day of small things," said the wise man. And at least the lawyer's office would have been in the way of your genius; the capacity of copyist would have been much better than to have turned into this by-path."

"There were difficulties in the way of even that."

"And even if there were difficulties, what, then? We have no royal road to distinction in our country. If any would be great, he must 'achieve greatness.' Nearly all of our heroes and statesmen have struggled up from the humblest places in society."

"You speak wisely and truly, dear Rosalie; yet each of all these men to whom you have alluded had near and dear friends—mothers, sisters, a wife, perhaps—to watch his career and rejoice in it. Oh, believe me, Rosalie, man cannot work for himself alone! It were a selfish aim!"

"But he can work for humanity—he can work for God!" said Rosalie, in a low and reverent voice.

"Attain a position, Mr. Sutherland—such a position as the prophetic voice in your heart foretells. Win fame! not for yourself, but for men and God! Not for your own aggrandizement; but for the power to right the wrongod, to raise the fallen, to deliver the oppressed, to redeem the evil, to speak with authority the truth to men and before God! Labor, wait, struggle, for such a position, and, though no mother, sister, wife, or love smile on your career, men and women will know it! God will bless it!"

Mark Sutherland still remained buried in deep and silent thought upon her words. Oh, if India had so spoken to him, so sympathized with his aspirations.

"You astonish me, Rosalie; you talk far beyond your years and sex; you really astonish me."

"I wish I could convince you."

"You do, Rosalie; how is this? You must have reflected very much for one of your tender years."

"I am not so young; I am seventeen."

"A venerable age. But, Rosalie, how is it that you have thought so much beyond girls of your age?"

"Have I done so?"

"Why, assuredly. Now tell me how it is."

"Well, if it so as you say—for I do not know, having never had any young companions—I suppose it is because I have always led an isolated, meditative life. I have watched from afar the career of living great men and have secretly made unto myself idols like them. I have read with deep interest the lives of distinguished statesmen and heroes, particularly those who have struggled up from poverty and obscurity; that is the reason."

"Yet that is very unusual in so young and beautiful a girl. I cannot yet comprehend it."

"The pleasures of girlhood were not for me—there was nothing left but books, and much thought over needlework in solitary hours. Please do not give me undue credit. I must tell you how it was. I thought so much of your life. Nearly two years ago, after you made such a vast sacrifice to principle, hero-worshipper that I was, I recognized in you the elements of which heroes are made, and——"

She blushed and suddenly stopped.

"Go on, dear Rosalie."

Still she remained silent and embarassed.

"Well, Rosalie, you saw, or rather you thought you saw, in me the elements of heroism."

"It was impertinent in me to presume to say so!"

"Nay, dear child, I beg you won't take it back. If you do not hope for me, who will?"

"Indeed, I do hope for your success very strongly—and I count upon it very confidently——"

"But finish what you were going to say; you saw in some one 'the elements of which heroes are made.'"

"Oh, nothing; only I dived more deeply than ever before into my lives of great men and reflected more than ever upon the causes that made them great, and you gave that attraction a new and strong interest. I thought of you and hoped that you were on the road to an honorable and beneficent distinction. I was grieved to hear that you were coming here. Do not stay here, Mr. Sutherland."

"Yet, dear Rosalie, I cannot leave now."

"Do not think me importunate, impertinent; I wish you would go even now—to-day."

CHAPTER XII.

For several days various notes of preparation as for some joyful coming event were sounded through the hall. Wagons with new furniture arrived. Mrs. Vivian directed the operations of the upholsterers in putting down new carpets and hanging new curtains, mirrors, etc. They were all evidently playing the prelude to some great family festival. Mark Sutherland remained unenlightened until one morning as he walked out upon the piazza to enjoy the early freshness of the air he was joined by the two lads, Henry and Richard, who, seizing each a hand, eagerly inquired:

"Are you going to walk out this morning before breakfast, Mr. Sutherland?"

A nod and smile was his answer. He was depressed. Yet, too generous and benevolent to dampen the spirits of the lads by his own gloom, he smiled upon them kindly, and when they asked permission to accompany him, he inquired, gayly, how it happened that, while all were so very busy in the house and on the grounds, they alone should be idle.

"Oh, Mrs. Vivian drives us out of the way—even Rose won't let us help her; and father threatens to lock us up if we don't keep quiet; and so we came out to walk with you. Just as if nobody ever got married before St. Gerald!" said Richard, contemptuously.

They took the narrow path leading along the course of the stream, the boys sometimes affectionately holding his hands, and sometimes one or the other suddenly breaking away to pluck and bring him an early violet, or eglantine rose, or to throw a pebble in the stream, where some small fish had started up. At last—

"Making such a fuss!" again complained Richrd; "and driving us about so that we boys can't have a bit of peace of our lives! Just as if she were so much better than everybody else in the world that so much trouble must be taken for her."

"Whom are you talking of?" inquired Mr. Sutherland, carelessly.

"Why, the young lady St. Gerald is going to marry!"

"Ah, then, Mr. Ashley is going to bring home a wife, is he?"

"Why, of course he is!" said Henry. "He is going to be married to a beautiful young lady, very rich, who was the belle of the city last winter."

"Oh, she is as rich and as beautiful as a princess in a fairy book," sneered Richard.

"Don't you mind Rich; he can't bear to have a word said about anybody but himself!"

"As if I wanted anybody to bother themselves about me! I'm not so much like you as that!"

They continued their walk along the mountain stream, and then turning by the back hills, got home at the breakfast hour.

Colonel Ashley, Mrs. Vivian and Rose were already seated at the breakfast-table when Mr. Sutherland and the lads entered.

"Good-morning, Mr. Sutherland."

Mrs. Vivian and Rosalie smiled a salutation, and the thread of the conversation was taken up again.

"Yes; St. Gerald writes me that the marriage will come off at an early hour of the day, and that immediately after the ceremony they will set out from Washington for this place; so that we may expect the party on Thursday evening. Rosalie, my dear, bear that in mind, if you please, and be ready."

Mrs. Vivian's mind was certainly absent and distracted, as her manner was disconcerted.

After breakfast Colonel Ashley went to his study to write letters; Mrs. Vivian and Rosalie to their worktable, and Mark to his school-room with the boys.

The ladies had scarcely seated themselves before a servant entered to say that Mr. Robert Bloomfield had come with the ponies, and wished to know if Miss Rosalie would ride.

"Don't go, Rose; send an excuse. Cut this companionship firmly and kindly off," said Mrs. Vivian.

"Tell him, William, that I am very much obliged, but I cannot ride today," said Rosalie; then she added: "That was a very unkind message, mamma."

"Nonsense! What kindness or gratitude do you owe to Robert?" answered the lady.

But, before Rosalie could reply, Robert entered the room, and, without even seeing Mrs. Vivian, hurried up to the young girl, exclaiming: "Rose! how is this? Three times I have called here, and each time I have been met by your servant and told that I could not see you. Dear Rosalie, have I offended you in any way? Say, are you angry with me?"

"Now, what if un-such should I be angry with you about, Robert? Of course I am not angry."

"You are offended with me. I see it in your face."

"Indeed, I am not displeased with you, dear Rob. You never in your life gave me cause for any other feeling toward you than esteem and thankfulness."

Here Mrs. Vivian hemmed to give notice of her presence. If he had not observed the lady before, he did not care about her now. He bowed, and resumed his conversation with Rosalie in the same impassioned tone.

Mrs. Vivian, with a cold, offended air, left the room. But as soon as Robert found himself alone with Rosalie he certainly betrayed a great sense of relief, for his manner became more earnest, and he pleaded anew the hopeless suit. His tongue was loosened in that impetuous torrent of eloquence inspired only by passion; and that Rosalie listened with emotion scarcely less than his own; for every word he uttered gave expression to the vague, deep, unspoken yearning of her own heart.

She heard him out patiently; yes, she let him go over the whole matter a second and a third time. At last she said:

"I have deeply wronged you, Robert. I did not mean it. I shall never forgive myself."

"I don't understand you, Rosalie."

"I mean that I have not been frank enough with you, Robert. I have not had the courage," said Rosalie, in a faltering voice, for she still deeply pitied him.

He seized her hand, exclaiming:

"Do you mean, after all, that you like me a little better than you said you did?"

"No. Oh, Robert, what a sanguine nature yours must be. No, Robert! I mean that I have thoughtlessly accepted all your kind services, knowing full well that I never can repay the smallest of them; that I have let you tell me, again and again, of your regard, knowing all the while that I can never, never return it in the way you wish."

"Cruel! cold! hard! heartless!"

"It is my misfortune that I cannot accept you. If I could like you I should have an enviable lot in life; not because you are wealthy, but because I really do know you are—so good, so disinterested, so true, and because your dear mother and sisters are just like you, and I could love them as if they were my own relatives."

"In mercy, Rosalie, why do you talk to me so?"

"Why, indeed? Because I cannot reject this kindness, for which I am indeed most sincerely grateful, in any other but the humblest manner, and with every circumstance to assure you that I feel how much good I regret in rejecting you, Robert. Well as I like you, I could not love you enough to marry you, if my salvation depended on it. I begin to have a foreshadowing that my lot will be a very rough one; that I shall not be left to bask in the sunshine; but shall have to face and weather the storm."

"You—you fragile snow-drop! What do you mean now? Has the Planters' Own Bank broken, or have all the slaves on the plantation run off in a body?"

"Neither one nor the other, Robert."

"One thing I do know; that is, you are too delicate for a rough life."

"Robert, there are many delicate natures that have been cherished, and nursed, and petted to miserable weakness and death. And now, to come back to yourself. We must part, Robert, as friends, but not to meet again, except as mere acquaintances."

She extended her hand—he pressed it to his lips, seized his cap, and hastily left the house.

Chester's Speech.

Chester Thompson did not like to "speak pieces." There are few boys who really enjoy declamation in school, but for Chester the day was particularly full of terrors. He was not shy or sensitive among his mates, but when he faced an audience, even though it was made up wholly of those same school friends, he promptly forgot what he had learned, and felt as if he were walking off a high cliff into space.

Chester felt ashamed of this weakness and tried hard to overcome it, but with poor success. Now he was face to face with something far worse than speaking in school. In only two days more he must stand in the village square, beside the new drinking fountain, and deliver an address before all the people gathered there. How could he ever do it?

Several years earlier, Chester had joined the Band of Mercy, and his love for pets and all animals had led him to remain a member when many of the boys of his age had dropped out. Now he was its president, and this was why they had selected him to speak at the dedication of the beautiful drinking fountain that had been given to the village. His pride would not let him evade the task, but how he dreaded it! With the help of his teacher he had prepared a brief address, and as he said it over and over, he was rather proud of it; but he felt absolutely sure that every word of it would fly from his mind in the panic of the moment.

That is what Chester was thinking of one day while he was walking along the road just outside the village. He stopped to watch two men who were loading a cart with gravel. When the men had filled the cart, one of them spoke sharply to the horses and they plunged forward; but the rear wheels were deep in the ditch and the horses could not start the heavy load. The driver again called loudly to them, and struck them with his whip. As the willing span strained again at the tugs, one of them slipped and fell on its side.

Perhaps the horse was discouraged. Perhaps it was entangled in the harness. Anyway, it lay there with quivering sides while the driver leaped forward and struck it again with his whip. It was a cruel thing and a foolish thing to do, and the sight was more than Chester could bear in silence. Indignation boiled within him, and before he really knew what he was doing, he found himself beside the angry driver and speaking to him with a great earnestness that caused the man to turn in amazement.

Chester could never remember just what he said. Fragments of things that he had learned at the Band of Mercy meetings and snatches of his carefully prepared address for the dedication of the drinking fountain mingled with the simple and commonsense plea that he made for kinder tzentment for the fallen horse.

The anger left the driver's eye and he flushed under his tanned skin. "Well, you are right, young man," he said. "And how you can talk—for a little fellow.

Chester and the driver helped the horse to its feet, patted its nose, and removed a little of the load, and then the man drove away with no more loud words or use of the whip.

Chester said nothing about what had happened until after the dedication exercises at the new fountain were over. When his teacher, among many others, congratulated him and told him how splendidly he had done, he told her briefly about the driver and the fallen horse.

"I knew I could do it after that," he said. "It wasn't simply that I found I could forget myself and talk when I had something to say, but it gave a wholly new meaning to the address that you helped me prepare."

"That is the only way that anyone can speak well in public," said his teacher; "that is, to have something to say that is worth saying, and to put the whole heart into it."—Youth's Companion.

"I want some clothesline," he said.

"Whatcher want it for?" asked the man behind the counter.

"She is, heh?" said the shopkeeper, giving his customer the once over from head to foot. "Well, you go back and tell her to come down here and get it herself. The only way a fellow looking like you do can buy rope from me is on a prescription."

AN OPEN LETTER

From a Well Known Methodist Clergyman of Interest to All Who Are Sick.

One of the best known ministers in the Hamilton Conference is the Rev. Chas. E. Stafford, of Elora, Ont., who freely admits that he owes his present good health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Mr. Stafford writes as follows: "Some years ago I was severely afflicted for a period of nearly four months. The leading physician in the town in which I was then stationed diagnosed my case as one of complete nervous prostration, brought on by over-work and which superinduced intercostal neuralgia and muscular rheumatism, from which I suffered the most excruciating pain night and day for weeks. So weak and helpless did I become that my attendants had to handle me like an infant, raising me up and laying me down with the greatest care, so intense were my sufferings. Acting on the advice of my doctor, and taking his medicine, I did not seem to improve. One afternoon, while suffering great pain, the editor of the paper published in the town, and who was a member of the church of which I was then pastor, urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I was sceptical as to the medicinal qualities of all proprietary medicines, but on the strong recommendation of the editor, who had great faith in the medicine, I decided to try them. To my great surprise and supreme delight, I soon found that the Pills were giving me relief, and after I had taken seven boxes I was fully restored to health. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, under God, having made me a new man. Ever since I have been better and stronger physically than I had been for a number of years.

Three years ago, after an active ministry of forty-six years, I asked the Hamilton Conference of the Methodist Church to grant me superannuation relation, which it did, but for more than two years I have been supplying a charge which necessitates a drive of twenty miles every Sabbath. To-day I am strong and hearty, without an ache or pain, and for my present physical condition I am indebted to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and can most heartily recommend them to the afflicted."

Don't Do It.

Solomon Isaac was very ill, and the doctor was paying him a visit. "Well, doctor," said Solomon, "if I've got to die, I die contended. My life is insured for five thousand dollars." "Well," replied the doctor, "I think I can keep you alive for a week longer." "Don't do it, doctor," said Solomon; "the premium comes due the day after to-morrow."

Even undeserved praise sometimes becomes an incentive to better effort.

HEROES OF THE COAST PATROL

GALLANT WORK IS SILENTLY ACCOMPLISHED.

The Safety of British Shores in a Large Measure Depends Upon Them.

A few weeks after the outbreak of the war a middle-aged, weather-beaten looking man, with a pair of very clear blue eyes, and clad in rather youth attire, presented himself at the Admiralty and asked to see the official who was in control of the patrol office, says London Answers.

Casual callers do not readily gain interviews with busy officials at Government offices in war time, but there was something about this particular caller—something that suggested his inflexible resolution to see the official he had asked for and discuss "real business"—that gained him admission with but little delay to the room of the official he wanted to see.

"What do you want?" asked the official, an old naval officer.

"I am a yachtsman," was the reply. "I've a steam yacht, 600-tonner, twenty-five knots. I hold a master's certificate, and I have a crew that will follow me anywhere. The lot is at your disposal, including the man you are talking to, if you want me."

Sentinels of the Sea.

Half an hour later, the yacht belonging to this weather-beaten, roughly-clad volunteer was entered on the register of boats on patrol service, and its owner, a millionaire yachtsman, left the Admiralty a captain (unpaid) of a patrol boat in His Majesty's Navy.

This is but one instance out of many that might be quoted of how the Admiralty found ships and men for their patrol service, which has performed such splendid work round our coasts—work full of risk and hazard—since September last.

The patrol boats may be described as Naval sentinels. They are constantly watching the seas round our coasts, and it is no exaggeration to say that on their vigilance the safety of our shores in a large measure depends. The patrol boats are not fighting ships; a shell from the smallest warship afloat would seriously damage, if it did not sink, the largest of them. But many of them are tremendously fast; they are handled by men as daring as they are capable navigators, and when the history of the war comes to be written it will be found that among the officers and men who served on the patrol boats were many deserving of the highest honors of war.

Many of the boats are captained by their owners, who put their yachts, themselves, and their crews at the disposal of the Admiralty. Other boats are captained by retired admirals, captains too old for service in the Fleet, or by retired master mariners or masters in the Merchant Service. All are splendid seamen, as ready to face danger and death in defence of king and country as any officer or man in the Grand Fleet.

Chased by Enemy Ships.

There are now hundreds of boats in the patrol service, and ten months of constant work at sea have produced a fleet the efficiency and usefulness of which will probably never be properly known or understood except by those who are in control of the naval defence of our island.

There are patrol men who have been chased by enemy ships, who have encountered imminent risk of destruction from mines, who have defied attack from submarines and aircraft. Escaping from such dangers, these sentinels of the sea are daily performing work as useful and as important and as essential to our safety as is the work of the outposts at the Front to the safety of the British Army in France.

Several of the fastest patrol boats have been employed as despatch boats, to carry despatches to and from our warships, and to different naval bases. This is work after the very heart of the men in the patrol service.

Speed is the essential qualification of a boat employed on this service, and a high courage, great daring, and fine seamanship the qualifications of its commander. There may be, say, one hundred miles of ocean to traverse between the point from which the despatch boat starts and the ship it is to deliver its despatches to.

Driving Ahead in Darkness.

The time it may be given to cover that hundred miles—the distance may be longer or shorter, of course—may be but four hours. From the start it is a case of driving ahead at full speed, possibly in pitch darkness, and with all lights out.

The discipline on board the patrol boats is as strict as it is on a battleship, though its officers and crew may possibly consist of a dozen friends or so who are working it themselves.

A story was told to the writer recently of a patrol boat which before the war was a private yacht. When it was registered as a patrol boat its owner became its commander, and among the crew were four of his most intimate friends. One of them was a young fellow who had often sailed with him on pleasure trips, and who was specially keen about serving as one of the crew when the boat went into the patrol service.

"Mind," said the owner to him, "we are not going on a pleasure trip. We shall be on war service, and there will be as strict a discipline on the boat as if she were a warship. I shall be glad to take you on, but you will have to obey orders." And the young fellow promised to do so. The first night at sea the order was given that there must be no lights—an order that was forgotten by the young fellow in question. When he went to turn in at one o'clock for his four hours' sleep, he switched on the electric light in his cabin whilst he undressed.

Dismissed!

Two minutes later he was summoned to the presence of his friend, the commander of the boat. The young fellow stood between two of the crew at a table at which the commander was seated in his cabin.

"You have disobeyed orders," said the commander, "and I have sent for you to tell you that I shall land you to-morrow at ——, where we are bound for, and that I shall not have you on board this boat again.

The "commander" kept his word, and discharged his friend the next day. But the latter bore him no ill-will; he recognized the fact that he had committed a grave violation of discipline that on a battleship would have entailed severer punishment. The young fellow is now serving his country, not at sea, but as a sergeant in a regiment in which he enlisted directly after his dismissal from the patrol service.

Tactful.

Mr. Hardfax—I've brought you here so we could be alone, so that I can tell you what I've been dying to speak of.

It is reported from Northern France that the Germans are using a metal-destroying liquid. It consists of a mixture contained in a cylinder under high pressure. When charged with being drunk and disorderly, and asked what he had to say for himself, the prisoner gazed pensively at the magistrate, smoothed down a remnant of grey hair, and said:—"Your honor, 'Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn.' PAISLEY FAIR

Four Thousand People on Grounds

SPLENDID ARRAY OF EXHIBITS IN ALL DEPARTMENTS

The Military Tournament a Great and Popular Feature

EIGHT YOUNG MEN OFFER FOR SERVICE

The managers of Paisley Fair naturally feel elated at the success of this year's event. They may be pardoned for feeling so, as not since the far gone year of 1890, when the wild west show was the special attraction, has there been such a successful and spectacular show held on these grounds. The weather on Wednesday last was of the most select, hand-picked variety—dry under foot, bright overhead and sufficiently breezy to be bracing, altogether ideal for the occasion. Tuesday had also been fair, and the officers and members of the Society had utilized the hours to good advantage in getting the palace exhibits in place, and completing preparations for reception of the thousands of visitors that were expected.

The soil of the district has yielded enormous crops this year, and in the various classes of products exhibited in competition at our fair the fertility of the land was amply demonstrated by the dimensions and quality of each. There have been larger displays in some years, perhaps, in single departments, but the exhibit as a whole was a well-balanced one, and presented an appearance that reflected the plenitude of the year.

Vegetables were particularly large and field roots almost equally as good. Of potatoes there was a splendid showing. While the rot disease has wined out a good part of the crop on heavy land here there seems to be a lot of fine tubers saved from the plantations on lighter soil. The horticultural wing was well filled with beautiful samples of plants and flowers. In grains the number of entries was not large, nor the quality as good probably, owing to the wet harvest conditions of the season. Fruit was of excellent quality, but, as expected, the space was not so fully occupied as last year.

In the ladies' department there was the keenest rivalry for the honors attached to winning the premiums. The special and regular prizes offered for cooking brought out one of the most interesting exhibits in the building, and one in which there was close competition in every section. The fancy work was right up-to-date in most respects, a large proportion of the work being new. Fine arts entries were not as numerous as in some years. School children's writing and map drawing was of high merit.

Ballachey, Laidlaw & Co., Hope & Cavill, W. H. Davison, J. H. Steele, H. Pfaff & Son, Bell Piano Co., D. McGregor E. Bailey and J. A. McArthur had displays of merchandise and agency articles in the building.

Wednesday's programme of a military tournament began with the arrival of the special train from London bringing the contingent of two hundred soldiers, with officers, machine gun section, battalion brass band and field kitchen. The visitors were met at the station by reception and other committees and marched down street to the town hall, where Reeve Ballachey welcomed them with the following address delivered from the band stand:

I wish to address to you a few words to welcome you to this quiet little village, nestling as it does among the hills far from the world's tumult and the strife and roar of battle. I bid you welcome in the name of the Village Council, over whom I have the honor to preside as Reeve. I give you a very cordial welcome on behalf of the citizens of Paisley. On behalf of the Agricultural Society, under whose auspices you have come, I welcome you. And I welcome you on behalf of the farmers of the surrounding country, and of all those who will come to Paisley to-day to see and honor you. We are pleased to greet and welcome you because you represent to us those gallant Canadians who have gone and are still going to the front to join battle with the enemy, many of whom have already poured out their life's blood in defence of our Empire and our homes. We cannot all enlist; we cannot all volunteer to go the trenches, but those who cannot do so can do a good work at home by keeping up supplies from the base and I am proud to be able to tell you that Paisley has done, is doing, and will, I hope, do still more in this way and thus help to encourage, sustain and comfort those who have gone up to sacrifice. Women of Canada are very prominent in this patriotic work. They fully realize what their condition would be if the enemy hordes overran this fair land and laid it waste by pillage and rapine. They but look across the seas at their sisters and shudder. We all shudder and have called to you strong young men to save us from such an awful calamity. You have heard the call and each one of you has said, "Here am I, send me," so you are going and we say to you brave men, with loyal and true hearts—God speed, may the victory soon be yours. It may be that those who go to this great war may, later on, return as the victors. It may be yours to come marching home with pomp and acclaim, with streaming banners emblazoned with laurels of victory. That will be a happy time for the whole world. But while we rejoice in that glad day let us not forget the brave ones who are left behind upon the gory battle fields. Let us remember and pause and shed a tear for those who have sacrificed, yes, sacrificed their all even unto life itself, and so made victory possible to us. Let us never, never forget them, for "Greater love hath no man than that he lay down his life for his friends." And now soldiers and friends it is my pleasant privelege to inform you that the good citizens of Paisley are pleased to extend to you the freedom of this place. In doing so they have unbounded confidence in your integrity and honor and feel that their little town will be more than safe in your keeping. Indeed, who should be such honorable and righteous exponents of law and order as the Canadian section of the British Army, those who wear the King's uniform. They should be, and we trust are quite outside and above the letter of the law. We trust they enjoy that liberty which comes from the law of love being written in the heart exemplified by the Great Teacher when he said, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." We wish for you all a very happy experience during your short sojourn with us, so that when you return to your camp or go farther afield to join your comrades at the battle front, you may sometimes send a truest thought back to our little village. I beg to thank you in advance for the entertainment that it is your purpose to treat us with. I am sure we will enjoy and appreciate it most fully, and I feel your presence with us will stimulate us to more and greater efforts to co-operate with you to hasten and bring about that condition so greatly desired by all Christian nations—a world-wide lasting peace.

The soldiers then marched to the fair grounds, and dined in the large tent of the 32nd Regt., which had been procured and erected there. At 1.30 o'clock the khaki lads again appeared on the streets, and headed by the band paraded to the grounds, followed by a procession of school children and the greatest throng of people that has been seen here for years. Military exercises, showing the methods of physical development followed in the course of training for the men who are accepted as recruits for the overseas service, were performed in a large wired off enclosure, and spectators were thus given a fair chance to witness the whole programme of drills and exercises, as well as the operation of the machine gun in its rapid discharging of shots from strings of loaded ammunition, the bullets being directed into the high bank on the opposite side of the river. The deadly execution possible with this wicked weapon is most readily recognized after such a demonstration, with its accompaniment of nerve racking explosive noise and hail of lead upon the target. A similar programme was given at night, the ring being lighted with electric lamps of different colors.

In venturing to bring so large a body of men from London the Fair directors had a public meeting called by the Reeve, at which it was decided to ask the council to guarantee half the expense in case of unfavorable weather, the directors agreeing on their part to devote to patriotic purposes a share of the extra receipts after deducting extra expenses, should the venture prove to be a profitable one. Under this arrangement there should be something for patriotic purposes.

The soldiers were a fine body of men. If all the Canadian regiments that have been sent over present as trim and fit appearance, it is not surprising that they are admired in the Old Country.

Col. Douglas, the officer in command, is an old Bruce boy, whose home was in Tara. Some of the other officers and quite a number of the men were also from Bruce county.

All the coops in the poultry wing were filled, and many more birds had to remain outside in their travelling coops. A large number of outside exhibitors were competing, one of whom, Mr. Greer, of Owen Sound, had 75 entries. This department is one of the best features of the whole show. The fanciers seem to be well satisfied with the treatment received here.

The gate receipts for the day were very satisfactory, the tickets sold amounting to about $800 for afternoon and evening at the grounds, and $120 for the concert.

KIDNEY DISEASE WAS KILLING HIM

Until He Used "Fruit-a-tives" The Great Kidney Remedy

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., Aug. 26th, 1918.

"About two years ago, I found my health in a very bad state. My Kidneys were not doing their work and I was all run down in condition. Having seen 'Fruit-a-tives' advertised, I decided to try them. Their action was mild, and the result all that could be expected.

My Kidneys resumed their normal action after I had taken upwards of a dozen boxes and I regained my old-time vitality. Today, I am as well as ever."

The patriotic orations of the day were delivered by Mr. Hearn, a lawyer from Toronto, who spoke from the platform on the grounds in the afternoon and was given a splendid hearing by the thousands present. He again addressed the audience at the evening concert in the town hall.

W D Cargill, M.P.P., Wm. McDonald M.P.P., and Mr. John Purvis, Conservative candidate in South Bruce for the Commons, were at the Fair and on the platform during the recruiting speech.

Nine young men offered themselves to the recruiting officers for service with the Canadian forces. Some of the soldiers were very energetic in their solicitations and invitations to come in and sign up.

Proceeds of the concert in the evening amounted to $120, which proves that comfortable seatings in a hall are more of a consideration than standing room on the grounds to people who are looking for an evening's entertainment. The gate receipts at the grounds summed up to $80.

The Dominion Well Supply Co. of Cargill had one of their double-geared windmills on exhibition. They also supplied the grounds with water pumped from the river and forced through pipes by gasoline engine power.

How a Ford motor car can be utilized very conveniently for farm power was demonstrated on the grounds by Mr. M. L. Sees, the Ford Elgin agent for the Ford. He had a wood sawing outfit in operation and his men made short work of cutting up a pile of cordwood. The saw was driven by a belt from a wheel attached to the front of a Ford motor car engine, which worked very smoothly and furnished ample power for the job in hand. A farmer can use a car to operate numerous farm machines, such as a corn cutter and blower, grain chopper, wood saw, cream separator, and it is reasonably claimed that the power will not only pump water, save labor and horse feed, but will pull a mortgage off the farm. Mr. Sees is an expert mechanic and would be pleased to have the opportunity of discussing with any farmer the problem of furnishing cheap power on the farm.

BRUCE PRESS ASSOCIATION

Enlistment Will Be Boomed—The Price of Country Weeklies Will Be Raised

The annual meeting of Bruce County Press Association was held in Port Elgin on Friday, Oct. 1st. There was a good attendance of the county publishers present. Many questions of deep interest were discussed. It was decided to boost recruiting throughout the county and try to put up to our available young men their duty in this crisis of the history of the Empire. A matter of deep consideration was the increased cost of printing material all along the line. These have entered into the production of papers to such an extent that publishers find they are producing papers at a loss. After mature consideration it was decided to raise the weekly newspaper to $1.50 per annum. It was also decided that this raise would be based upon a gradual raise. All papers that are paid in advance by Jan. 31st, 1916, will be accepted at the old rate of $1.00 per annum. After that date $1.50 will be exacted. After May 1, 1916, all weekly papers will be $1.50 per annum.

In the matter of clubbing rates, owing to the raise in price of outside papers, it was decided that it was impossible to sell these papers in future at a rate less than the regular subscription price.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: Hon. President, Wm. Wesley, the oldest publisher in the county; President, J. L. Hunter, Kincardine; Vice-President, H. A. Vendusen, Tara; Secretary-Treasurer, D. McKenzie, Paisley; Executive Committee—the officers and H. H. Shirel, Southampton; H. H. Steincamp, Tiverton; A. Wesley, Walkerton.

The Association welcomed Mr. Lorne A. Eddy into their ranks, he having purchased the Walkerton Telescope.

—It's only a dollar, but it means a good deal to THE ADVOCATE if households are slow in paying that on their subscription.

East Bruce Teachers are Patriotic

The Teachers' Institute for East Bruce was held at Walkerton on Thursday and Friday last, when the pedagogues voted unanimously one day's salary toward the purchase of a motor ambulance to be placed at the disposal of the Militia Department. A gift of $25 was also voted to the Children's Aid Society, and the proceeds of a patriotic lecture given to the Red Cross. The Ontario Government's superannuation bill, which will affect the teachers of the province, was heartily endorsed.

Doing Their "Bit"

Prof. Neil B. McLean, M.A., a former Paisley boy now a professor in the University of Manitoba, is doing his "bit" in the empire's military service. He was asked on June 1st to recruit a company of 250 men for the 61st Overseas Battalion of Winnipeg, under command of Col. Murray. The 61st has made very rapid progress, and already sent across to England a draft of 250 men and five officers. Dating from June 23rd Neil B. was promoted from the rank of Captain to that of Major. His brother, Dr. Dugald B. McLean, is now a lieutenant in the R.A.M.C. and has been in France since the end of July with the 48th Field Ambulance attached to the 37th Division of the British Expeditionary Forces.

Now a Pensioner

With 45 years of continuous service on the G.T.R. to his credit, Mr. David Thompson will during the balance of his life draw a pension from the company. He entered the employ of the old Great Western at Hamilton in 1870, and four years later took the position of section foreman at Paisley, which he continued to occupy until Thursday last, when he laid down his tools and gave over the command of his crew to a younger man. Mr. Thompson built the first siding in Paismerston station yard, and there is only about one other man left who was working on the line in those early days. Mr. Thompson raised a large family and besides has saved sufficient to keep him in comfort until the semaphore signals off the road of life for him. We hope to see him remain a citizen of the village. Last week he began his holidays with a trip to Hamilton, and later he intends going out west to visit some of his sons, several of whom are engaged in railroading.

RED CROSS APPEAL

Reeve Ballachey has received the following letter from Lieut.-Governor Hendrie, which is a copy of an appeal being made to every municipality in the Dominion:

I beg to inform you that Lord Lansdown has sent the following cablegram:

I beg to inform you that the British Red Cross Society and the Order of St. John, in view of the great demands upon their resources both in France and the near east, have decided to make an appeal through the Empire by street and other collections, upon 31st day of October next. The money received from this appeal will be devoted entirely to relieving the sufferings of our wounded soldiers and sailors from home and overseas at the various seats of war from all parts of the King's dominions. We have already received generous assistance in our work, but with the increase of British and overseas forces at the front, there is a corresponding increase in our expenditure, and we shall be truly grateful to you if you will help us by organizing an appeal and sending the proceeds to us for the objects which I have named. I shall be greatly obliged if you will kindly communicate the foregoing to your government. In view of the urgency and importance of this, the first appeal that the Motherland has made to us, I confidently trust that you will at once organize with a view to getting a worthy contribution from the people of your municipality on Oct. 31st.

JOHN H. HENDRIE, Lieut.-Gov.

The council have called a public meeting in the council chamber on Friday, Oct. 8th, at 8 o'clock, to organize a committee and have collection appointed.

Eye Glasses that Don't Slip or Pinch.

When we fit eye glasses they fit firmly, yet comfortably, as near the eyes as the lashes will allow, each eye looking exactly through the centre o each glass.
Comfort assured.
Satisfaction guaranteed.

A Stopped Watch

One that will not g AT ALL—doesn't cause as much bother as one that runs now fast, now slow, in an erratic fashion.

The first you don't pretend to depend upon—the other is a constant source of annoyance.

Most people can afford a watch but no one can afford an uncertain fast and slow one.

And when our repair department is so close at hand there is really no excuse for carrying anything but an accurate time-piece, no matter what the first cost was.

Consult us about any watch troubles that may arise.

You can never get out of a pair of shoes what hasn't been put into them by the maker.

You can't get long wear unless long wear is in the leather and the stitching.

WOMAN WEAK AND NERVOUS

Finds Health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Creston, Iowa.—"I suffered with female troubles from the time I came into womanhood until I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I would have pains in the small of my back so heavy, and I would be so weak and nervous and to so much misery that I would be prostrated. A friend told me what poor medicine had done for her and I tried it. It made me strong and healthy and our home is now happy with a baby boy. I am very glad that I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and do all I can to recommend it."—Mrs. A. R. BOSCAMP, 604 E. Howard Street, Creston, Iowa.

Tons of Roots and Herbs are used annually in the manufacture of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is known from ocean to ocean as the standard remedy for female ills.

For forty years this famous root and herb medicine has been pre-eminently successful in controlling the diseases of women. Merit alone could have stood this test of time.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Dainty Dishes.

Rice and Lamb Casserole.—Line casserole or baking dish with flaky boiled rice. Have ready four lamb chops cut from the forequarter and well seasoned tomato sauce. Remove fat and gristle from chops, lay them on rice, season, pour tomato sauce over, cover with rice, put lid on and bake one hour.

Pineapple Salad.—Six slices canned pineapple, six large maraschino cherries, cream cheese, lettuce hearts. Arrange salad in individual plates, first putting slice of salad on nest of lettuce leaves, then sprinkling with cheese put through potato ricer. Fill hole in slice with cherry. Pass golden dressing.

Apple Sauce Cake.—One and one-half cups hot, unsweetened apple sauce, one cup sugar, one-half cup butter and lard mixed, one pound raisins (can use less), two teaspoons soda, two cups flour, one teaspoon cinnamon, one-half teaspoon cloves and one-half teaspoon ginger. Cream, butter and sugar, add apple sauce, then other ingredients, as in any cake and bake one hour in slow oven.

Planked Salisbury Steak.—To one pound lean beef chopped fine add one teaspoon onion juice and salt and pepper to suit. Mould into three cakes, lay on hot plank and put to cook under broiler. Turn once. When done, surround with mashed potato and return to oven to brown lightly. Serve with baked banana on top of each cake and cream sauce flavored with horseradish. May be cooked in baking pan and served on platter.

Stuffed Celery.—Select tender, fair-sized stalks, sufficiently curved to hold filling. Mash and stir Roquefort cheese to cream, putting through ricer, if necessary. Add thick cream enough to make paste. Fill hollow of stalk, and set in icebox to chill. May be served as relish, without dressing, if liked. Cream cheese may be used. Adding pimento to cream cheese filling gives piquant flavor.

Golden Salad Dressing.—This dressing is nice to serve with almost all fruit salads. Heat one-fourth cup each of pineapple juice in double boiler. Beat two eggs until light, add one-half cup sugar and combine with hot juice. Cook until spoon coats. Remove to dish of cold water, beat until cold, then fold in one-half cup heavy cream whipped stiff. Do not add cream to dressing until just before serving.

Succotash.—Scrape, wash and score in quarter-inch spaces one-quarter pound salt pork. Cover with boiling water and let simmer until nearly tender. Add one pint fresh lima beans and more water, if needed. When beans are tender, add one pint sweet corn pulp, cook about fifteen minutes, add a little sweet cream, or two tablespoons butter and salt, if needed. Pour succotash into serving dish, slice pork where it is scored and serve. Dried beans and canned corn may be used when fresh are not available. To remove corn from cob, cut down through centre of each row of kernels, then press out pulp with back of knife, leaving hulls on cob.

Tomato Canapes.—Canapes of tomato are appetizing tidbits relished before dinner. Tomato canapes are simple to achieve. They may be hot or cold. The first essential is the round of fried or toasted bread. For cold canapes, spread bread round with mayonnaise, lay on it slice of tomato, sprinkle tomato with chopped chives and finish with an anchovy or sprig of parsley. Chopped cabbage and celery mixed with French dressing go well with tomato. Mound in the centre of tomato and sprinkle with parsley. Caviare and chopped onions in layers on tomato slices make delicious canapes. For hot canapes, have the toast rounds ready. Lay on each round of toast a ring of tomato, with centre removed. Fill with mashed, boned and skinned sardines, seasoned with lemon juice, and set in oven until hot.

Useful Hints.

Enamelware which has become discolored can be scoured with vinegar.

The addition of a tart apple or two to the cranberries improves the flavor.

One of the best salads is made of finely shaved cabbage with French dressing.

Coal oil is fine for keeping the outside of your nickel or aluminum tea kettle clean.

In making sandwiches be sure that the bread is at least a day old and that the butter is soft.

Oranges and bananas make an excellent salad with lettuce hearts, chopped nuts and French dressing.

Brown and white rolls are always appreciated for sandwiches, especially when men are going to eat them.

Keep cheese in a cool, dry place, and after it is cut wrap it in a linen cloth and keep it in a tight tin box.

Rice may be substituted for macaroni as a dinner dish. Prepare it in the oven.

The juice of a lemon added to a pan of water will freshen wilted vegetables. Let them stand in it for one hour.

Mash sardines to a paste with their own oil, and they will make more satisfactory sandwiches than if simply split.

To mend a tablecloth lay it flat and baste a piece of plain Brussels net over the hole. Turn and darn down fine flax.

Polish for steel is made of sweet oil, one tablespoonful; turpentine, two tablespoonfuls; emery powder, one tablespoonful.

After being washed artificial silk stockings should not be put near a fire. It spoils them. They should be allowed to drip dry.

To clean cut glass satisfactorily use a stiff bristle nail brush and hot water to which a few drops of ammonia have been added.

Throw coarse salt over rugs and carpets before sweeping them to prevent the dust from rising. This will brighten the color also.

If bamboo furniture is inclined to crack, mix together equal parts of linseed oil and turpentine and rub it on the furniture with a soft rag.

For removing dust from furniture a paint brush is much more satisfactory than a dust rag. No crevice is too small or deep for it to reach.

To remove the smell of onions or fish from the frying pan put a little vinegar in it directly after using and put over the fire a few minutes. Then wash again in soapy water.

To whiten hands, put a few drops of lemon juice into the white of an egg. If lemon is not at hand, a little alum water will answer. Rub mixture on hands at night, letting it dry. Equally good for face and neck.

Cane chair seats sag and get out of shape without being actually in need of mending. This can be easily remedied by turning the chair upside down and washing the cane work with soap and water until thoroughly soaked and then leaving it to dry—still upside down—in the air and sun. The seat will become light and firm again.

BRITAIN'S POPULAR IDOL.

Mr. Lloyd-George, the Firey Little Welshman.

One of the most remarkable developments of the first year of the war is Mr. Lloyd-George's rise to popularity. Answering the imperative call of the Empire, he has leaped into the place of generalissimo of the civil forces of Great Britain.

Twelve months ago the present minister of munitions was perhaps the most cordially detested man in the kingdom. The mention of his name in a music hall brought a thunderous volley of hisses. Abuse of "Limehouse George," as he was nicknamed, filled columns of the newspapers.

To-day it is not too much to say that Lloyd-George is the most popular man of the empire. His word is law. It is indeed almost pathetic to see the manner in which the nation has taken the fiery little Welshman to its bosom. It trusts him wholly and devotedly. It looks to him for counsel and advice. It sends for him in every crisis, expects him to evolve order out of chaos. No matter to whom he appeals, irate politicians or sullen colliers, munition workers or wealthy coal owning sticklers for privilege, they succumb to the mixture of blarney and downright common sense of which the ex-chancellor of the exchequer is a past master.

The inventor of the phrase "silver bullets" is himself silver tongued. England has many orators of eminence. Mr. Asquith and Mr. Balfour are skilful dialecticians, with the gift of eloquence, the power of passionate pleading, but neither of these clever politicians can lay claim to the impassioned, soul-stirring eloquence of Lloyd-George, nor have they his power to play upon the feelings, to sway the multitude.

CZAR WORLD'S RICHEST MAN.

Owns Many Palaces, Estates, Farms, Churches and Convents.

In his own right the Czar of all the Russias has possessions and investments probably greater than those of any other man.

In his name stand the titles to ninety-eight grand palaces, to over 120 large estates, to churches, convents, houses and farms innumerable. A whole army of retainers, managers and overseers are on the salary list, say 50,000, without counting their dependents.

There are over 100,000 head of horned cattle, some 30,000 horses, and pigs and sheep counted into millions. He owns valuable mines in the Ural, and many important industrial establishments.

When it is borne in mind that all his possessions are exempt from taxation, a net revenue of another $25,000,000 would hardly be considered an overestimate.

Moreover, now that Russia has by official order become temperate, the nation saves at least five milliards a year from waste.

Looking-glasses are commonly to be seen hanging outside Dutch dwellings. These are so arranged that persons sitting inside can, without being seen, enjoy a reflection of all that is going on in the street.

One-Piece Dresses Easy to Make.

THE ALLIES MUST FIGHT ON.

Not One of Them Can Afford to Yield to German Dictation.

Were it possible at this time to assemble a peace conference, Germany, holding nearly all of Belgium, the better part of Poland, and one-sixth of France, could practically dictate her own terms, says the Brooklyn, N.Y., Eagle. Those terms might not be onerous to the other belligerents in their immediate effect, but the very fact that they were dictated by Germany would establish the supremacy of that nation in European politics for the next 50 years at least. Russia, defeated, but not conquered; England, supreme at sea; France, renewing her ancient spirit on the heights of the Vosges and in the trenches of the Argonne, and Italy, moving to complete her national edifice by the conquest of Irredenta—not one of these great nations could afford to yield to German dictation. Not one of them at this time could hope to obtain any considerable part of what they seek and to attain which they have shed the best of their blood and spent the best of their treasure.

SLEEVELESS BODICES SMART.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, OCTOBER 10.

Lesson II.—Elijah Taken Up Into Heaven, 2 Kings 2. 1-12a. Golden Text: Psa. 16. 11.

1. Elisha Refuses to Leave Elijah (Verses 1-6).

Verse 1. When Jehovah would take up Elijah—The narrative of to-day's lesson was, of course, supplied by Elisha, as only he was present when Elijah was caught up in the chariot of fire.

From Gilgal — Not the Gilgal of Josh. 4. 19; 5. 9, 10, but a place of the same name in the hill country of Ephraim, probably alluded to in Deut. 11. 30.

2. Tarry here — Elijah knew how hard the parting would be, so he wanted to spare Elisha as much pain as possible. He realized how much the last few moments in his presence would mean to Elisha, however, and so does not insist on making the younger man remain behind.

Jehovah hath sent me—The whole of the last journey of Elijah had been divinely pre-arranged. A fitting exit for such a man of God.

As Jehovah liveth, and as thy soul liveth. I will not leave thee — See Judg. 8. 19; Ruth 3. 13; 1 Sam. 14. 39. Also 1 Sam. 1. 26; 17. 55; 20. 3; 25. 26; 2 Sam. 14. 19. "Elijah's master may be withdrawn from him: he will not be withdrawn from his Master."

3. Hold ye your peace — It would seem that others besides Elisha had intimations of Elijah's coming departure. But these others did not notice the prophet's solemn mien, nor, like Elisha, appreciate the full significance of the fact. So Elisha told them abruptly to hold their peace.

11. At the Jordan (Verses 7-12a).

7. Fifty Men—The life of a prophet was not secure under the reign of such kings as Ahab and his children. Men who were giving themselves up to the sacred calling seemingly bound themselves together in groups and for the time being lived in retirement. Such bands are mentioned at other places also.

8. Wrapped it together — Made a sort of rod out of it, reminding one of Moses and his rod at the Nile (Exod. 7. 17, 20).

9. When they were gone over—"In crossing the Jordan, Elijah stood again on the slopes of his native Gilead."

Before I am taken away — Elijah at last mentions the fateful event.

A double portion—The birthright of the first-born (see Deut. 21. 17).

10. A hard thing — The Spirit of God was not in the power of Elijah to bestow. It must come from God himself. Elijah was careful to let Elisha know that only as he (Elisha) put himself in close touch with God could he come into possession of God's Spirit.

11. A chariot of fire and horses of fire—Compare 2 Kings 6. 17.

12. My father, my father—A title given by the younger prophets to the older prophets.

The chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof.—Elisha recognized that Elijah was a greater defense to Israel than all her military resources.

THOUGHTS FOR THE DAY.

Nothing comes to us too soon but sorrow.—Bailey.

A man protesting against error is on the way towards uniting himself with all men that believe in truth.—Carlyle.

To talk in public, to think in solitude, to read, and to hear, to inquire and answer inquiries, is the business of a scholar.—Johnson.

Blessings may appear under the shape of pains, losses and disappointments, but let him have patience and he will see them in their proper figure.—Addison.

Write it on your heart that every day is the best day in the year. No man has learned anything rightly until he knows that every day is Doomsday.—Emerson.

A man's own conscience is his sole tribunal, and he should care no more for that phantom "opinion" than he should fear meeting a ghost if he cross the churchyard at dark.—Lytton.

Nature has presented us with a large faculty of entertaining ourselves alone, and often calls us to it, to teach us that we owe ourselves in part to society, but chiefly and mostly to ourselves.—Montaigne.

As ships meet at sea, a moment together, when words of greeting must be spoken, and then away into the deep, so men meet in this world; and I think we should cross no man's path without hailing him, and, if he needs, giving him supplies.—Henry Ward Beecher.

"They asked me to their reception, but it wasn't because they liked me; it was only because I can sing." "Oh, I'm sure you're mistaken."

Wife—"D'ye know you're growing quite handsome, lovey dear?" Hubby—"Yes; it's a way I have when it gets anywhere near your birthday."

The AUTOMOBILE

PUTTING THE AUTOMOBILE TO PRACTICAL USE.

Farmers who have purchased automobiles have used them, of course, like the city man, for pleasure, health and recreation, but they have also very quickly adopted this modern piece of machinery to other uses. You will find that a farmer uses his automobile to carry his produce to market; moreover, he may carry it to a market that previously was not within his reach. It is not necessary to mention the various produce that may be carried in this way, although one instance I heard of may bear special mention. It was the case of a farmer who occasionally used his automobile to take a calf or a pig to the butcher. He stretched a canvas from the front seat to the back, and did it all so neatly that you would never have known it to be other than a pleasure car if you had met him on his return trip.

While the carrying of produce and using the car to make a hurried trip for repairs to machinery, or in case of sickness, the the first uses that it would most likely be put to, it remains with the really enterprising farmer to show how an automobile can be used in the winter months as a source of stationary power. If you consider that even with the small car you have an engine of twenty-five horse-power you will readily see that you have ample power to operate a feed cutter, corn husker, portable wood saw, washing machine, milking machine, and, in fact, anything for which a farmer requires power, right up to the threshing machine.

Where the automobile is to be used for a variety of uses a simple way would be to jack up the back wheels and use a pulley. The pulley would connect by a belt to a pulley on the counter-shaft, and belts would run from the pulleys on the counter-shaft to the pulley on the corn husker, churn, emery wheel, feed cutter, etc. By arranging the sizes of the pulleys certain speed combinations could be worked out suitable for the different operations.

I do not believe that automobile manufacturers recognize fully the possibilities of the mechanical uses of the automobiles at a time when they cannot otherwise be used on account of the weather conditions.—By G.M.B. in The Canadian Farm.

CHEAPER AUTOMOBILES.

By C. R. Barns.

The day when the automobile could be regarded as the vehicle of the rich and prosperous exclusively—or when, if owned by a person of moderate means, and employed otherwise than in some regular business, its possession was held to indicate spendthrift habits—is rapidly passing away.

The multiplication of great establishments for the manufacture of automobiles has proceeded so rapidly and the number of machines turned out by them annually has become so vast, that the "upper ten" in society can no longer afford a sufficient market for the product; and manufacturers are turning their eyes toward the "middle thousands." There, after all, in supplying the needs of the farmers and middleclass townsmen, they are to find, hereafter, their largest rewards.

One great multi-millionaire corporation in the United States already announces for sale a "thoroughly capable" guaranteed car, rubber-tired, and "with a power plant that will run 25,000 miles" for $350—a figure which approximates the cost of a good "horse and buggy" such as almost every farmer has looked upon as entirely within his means. It is practically certain that the rivalry between manufacturers will lead to the immediate offering of even better cars for the same money, or of similar ones for a lower price.

The farmer, then, finds himself now the heir and beneficiary of one of the most beneficial and revolutionary inventions of the age. He is to be the beneficiary of all the experimentation which has been done, at the expense of the rich, in perfecting and developing the "auto." The "devil-wagon," which he has been wont to call the swift machine which scared his horses and made the roads so often unsafe for him, is transformed by the progress of manufacturing ingenuity into the vehicle of a good genius, with which—if he cannot, like Puck, "put a girdle round the earth in 40 minutes," —he can at least hie to his market town and get home again in minutes where it before took hours.

It will also enable him to do an amount of pleasure-travelling, independently of the railroads, such as was before a practical impossibility. It will also by practically bringing the farm closer to the market—and by giving in many cases a choice of markets—tend greatly to increase the value of outlying farms.

It was entirely natural that manufacturers should first cater to the class having the most money to spend, and that they should bend their energies to the production of vehicles which would from the pockets of that class, for the time being, extract the largest prices. But now that they turn to the "market of the millions," they will find its opportunities incomparably greater than those afforded by "the market of the select few."

UNDER FIRE IN THE FORETOP.

To be one of the small group to occupy the foretop or control station of a British battleship during an engagement at the Dardanelles was the privileges of a correspondent of the London Times.

I find myself, he writes, in a small oblong chamber of thin steel, which would not even keep out a bullet fired at close range. It is open all round at the top, and has a similar thin steel roof. Inside are a lieutenant of marines, a naval lieutenant, two midshipmen, and three sailors, a range finder, several pairs of glasses, some telescopes, the eternal voice pipe, and telephones for speaking to the conning tower, the engine room, the batteries, and the transmitting station. We are very crowded, and our tempers are ruffled by the heavy rain. A destroyer is rapidly overhauling us to lead us in. She is to make a dash up to the mine field, and we are to cover her with our fire.

The lieutenant of marines is trying to pick up ranges on the Asiatic coast. The two midshipmen, who you feel ought to be back at school, seem perfectly happy and contented with their lot. The three sailors have each an ear to a telephone and a mouth to a tube. They seem to be indulging in a solemn chant that never ceases, and the only words I can catch are, "Foretop to F Battery," "Foretop to X Battery," "Foretop to A Battery."

We are now well up the strait, and wondering when the enemy will begin. Some one shouts out, "They're off!" You hear the whistle of a shell, and a jet of water rises up just astern. At the same moment there is a deafening roar that makes you spring a yard in the air, and you hear one of our six-inch shells roaring its way through space landward. Then we hear the screech of more shells, and more great splashes of water rise up ahead, astern, and at the side of the destroyer. You can see her small and crowded bridge, for they are taking up some officers to make a reconnoissance. Our guns now blaze away freely at the Asiatic and European shores, and the noise is deafening.

The enemy's fire is concentrated on the destroyer, whose movements are interesting and instructive to watch. She is writhing about on all sides, as if she had a bad pain. She is engaged in putting the enemy off their aim. One moment she steams slowly ahead, a shell drops astern of her, and she shoots off at full speed toward the Asiatic coast, when another drops in front, which sends her scooting toward the European side. She is no sooner over there than a battery on that side drops one quite close, whereupon she turns suddenly in her own length, and dashes back toward us, which brings the enemy's fire just ahead of our ship. That sends her straight ahead again, and so she goes, from side to side, up and down, twisting and turning, dancing about like a mad dervish.

All this time our six-inch guns are blazing away at both shores, the gunners firing at the flashes of the enemy's guns. At length the destroyer has accomplished her mission, for she turns and dashes past us down the strait. The shells scream overhead. You imagine that each is coming direct into the foretop, but they all miss and either burst short or in the water beyond. Slowly and majestically we turn and follow the destroyer down to the entrance.

When we clear the strait the crews are allowed up from their stations. The ship springs into life once more. Portholes are opened, the skylights removed, and the deckrail replaced. We sit down to an excellent luncheon, and in the afternoon resume our old struggle at deck quoits.

Peeling Onions for Living.

The profession of onion peeling is not one that obtains much notice, yet there are at least 500 women in the east end of London earning their living by removing the skins of onions. With practice, they can make 80 cents to a dollar a day. Very often they have been peeling since childhood, daughters succeeding mothers. It is not a profession you can learn in one lesson, for the skin must be removed by hand, or the onion "juices" and is no use for pickling. The onions are always peeled in water. This is not to save the eyes of the peeler, but is done to keep the onion white.

The tusks of the African elephant sometimes weigh as much as a hundred pounds each, and reach a length of eight or nine feet.

BIBLE PROPHETS AND THE WAR

PROPHECIES BEING FULFILLED BEFORE OUR EYES.

Arresting Predictions About the Great Conflict Culled From Holy Writ.

An awful, whirling Armageddon of the nations; the rise of an anti-Christ; or, as is the correct and vastly more significant rendering, "A Man of Lawlessness" (Thess. II. Chap. 2); his aim at supreme personal power and world dominion; his claim to be God; his use in the world-combat of "power and signs and lying wonders" (deeds which create astonishment and fear); his overthrow; the coming of Christ, and then the end of the world!

Such seems to be the purport of Scriptural prophecies. But immense difficulties surround the subject, and the difficulties are not lessened by the fact that many prophecies which seem to point directly to the present time were fulfilled by the Fall of Jerusalem, says a writer in London Answers.

Taken From the Gospels.

There remain some, however, which, without a forced or fanciful interpretation, are surely being fulfilled before our eyes.

The Scriptural books in which these prophecies occur are Daniel, three of the Gospels, Thessalonians, and the Book of Revelation. Daniel may be excluded, because his prophecies are practically repeated in Revelation.

The Gospel prophecies by Christ are found in St. Luke, 21; St. Mark, 13; and St. Matthew, 24. They differ but in detail, and St. Luke may be quoted: "Nation shall rise against nation; and great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines and pestilences, and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven." (Verses 10, etc.)

"And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." (Verses 25, etc.)

Armageddon Is With Us.

Even in this awesome discourse of Christ, of which the above are short extracts, the vision changes from that which is close at hand to that which lies in the far future, and disentanglement is difficult.

But Armageddon is with us; there is famine in Belgium; pestilence in Serbia; and, without doubt, men's hearts are failing them for fear. What the next year may hold, or even the next month, is best unthought of. We may pass from horror to horror.

But it is in the Epistle to the Thessalonians that prophecy seems to find its fulfilment to-day. The language is very difficult, and the English translation fails to get the full force of the original Greek; but there, as in Revelation, the "Man of Lawlessness," the one who is responsible for the fearful and horrible world-cataclysm, is plainly indicated.

Full of Significance.

"Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day (i.e., the last day) shall not come except there come a falling-away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that wicked one be revealed; even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders."

A difficult passage, but full of significance, especially when studied with the prophecies in Revelation.

A dread personality is indicated. Back in history he was taken to be Nero, and then Napoleon. But when we learn that the "Wicked One," if the words were rendered literally, is really "The Man of Lawlessness," who, as indicated in Revelation, will convulse the earth and drench it in blood, and set himself up above all law, then we know to whom prophecy has pointed—the Kaiser.

In his bid for world-power, he has broken every law of God, men and nations. He is the anti-Christ; the Man of Sin; the lawless one. And it is within the memory of us all how he has blasphemously claimed to be Divine.

"I am your God!" he told his Guards. The point need not be laboured; we know it.

Again, the passage which shows him in action using "powers and signs and lying wonders" is fearfully significant. The Greek word which we translate "wonders" really denotes the effect of inhuman methods, and the astonishment or fear they create. "Power" is a reference to the agency behind the deeds—in this case, Satanic. "Signs" denotes the significance of the deeds.

We have only to think of poisonous gas, liquid fire, and other inhuman barbarities to see that prophecy is being fulfilled in this war.

Further, when we are puzzled as to the long years when the Kaiser seemed to be the one who kept the peace of Europe, we can turn to the prophecy and see that such a period is indicated. "He who now letteth" means "he who now restrains," and the reference is clear enough. Bismarck held the Kaiser back, until "the pilot was dropped," and war preparations, hidden under a fearful cloak of hypocrisy, begun.

The pregnant passage in Thessalonians (verse 8, chapter 2) indicates in mysterious language the destruction of the "Lawless One." His end may be awful!

"The Lord shall consume him with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming."

A Man of Many Religions.

Let us remember that the Kaiser, if he poses to-day for a Christian, has posed as Mohammedan to the Turks, and it would surprise no one if he openly flung away Christianity, and proclaimed himself as the new God. It is but a step, and the prophecy will be complete.

The prophecies in Revelation as to the great world-combat are clothed in mystical language, and are full of puzzling allegory. But chapter 13 is significant. The reference there is to a "beast" which shall make war!

"And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given to him to continue forty and two months. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme His name, and His tabernacle."

Chapters 17 and 18 continue the allegorical prophecies, and in chapter 16 we come to the reference to Armageddon, when the kings of the earth do battle with those which have the spirits of devils."

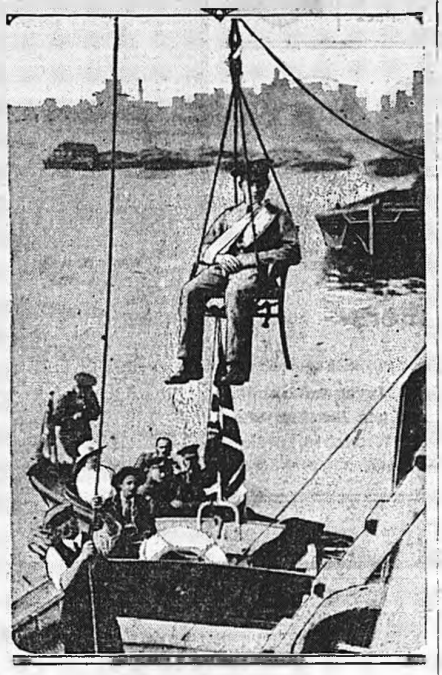
One feels that we are living in the times pointed out, and watching the awful drama being unfolded, even if the greatest of scholars cannot unravel the strange and tangled threads of the world-war prophecies in that wonderfully prophetic Book of Revelation.

FISH AND COST OF LIVING.

As a Substitute for Meat Fish Should Be More Used.

"Eat fish" should prove a valuable slogan for combatting the high cost of living. Meat has risen in price steadily within recent years, and, strangely enough, the available supply is becoming less competent to meet the demand. It is not surprising, therefore, that fish should be looked to as a substitute. As a food it is excellent, comparing not unfavorably with meat, although the proportions of nutritive elements such as protein, albumen and fat differ considerably.

Heretofore, fish has not been a popular article of diet in Canada. The reasons for this are various and some of them must be removed before fish eating can become a national habit. In the first place, irean sea fish in prime condition has been almost unobtainable even at points not far removed from the coasts. This has been due frequently to inefficient handling of the fish by the fishermen and by the distributing agencies. It has also been due to unsatisfactory transportation and retail market conditions. These difficulties are not insurmountable, and some of them are already being overcome. Education of fishermen and others who handle fish is a necessity that cannot be much longer overlooked. Traditional methods of handling must give way to more scientific and efficient practices. Such changes would mean increased profits for the fishermen, and, at the same time, by making available large quantities of food which have hitherto been wasted, would improve the quality and lower the price to the consumer. Transportation is already being improved and, in time, when the inland demands for fish warrant it, fast train services should, and probably will, be established from the fishing ports to the larger inland centres. The present offers splendid opportunities to the fishery industry. A demand for fish is already half created by the high price and comparative scarcity of meat. But if Canadians are to be taught to eat fish, there must be more enlightened methods of producing and handling it.



WAR AND THE PHONOGRAPH.

The Military Aeroplane Frequently Carries One.

When the military aeroplane is scouting it usually carries two men. One is the pilot, who runs and steers the craft; the other is the observer, who marks the placing of the hostile troops, the position of their guns, the movement of trains, etc. The observer also makes many sketches of the ground over which he is flying—work that often interferes with his writing notes and memoranda. In certain conditions of flight, too, it is often hard for him to use a pencil and paper.

To obviate that difficulty the military aeroplane now frequently carries a phonograph, with a speaking tube running to the mouth of the observer, so that by talking into the machine at any time during the flight he can record his observations and still have his hands free for his field glass or his sketching pencil.

THOUSANDS OF WOUNDED HAVE BEEN MOVED IN THIS MANNER

In the picture we see one of the British soldiers who is convalescing from wounds in the arms, unable to help himself, go down the ladder to the hospital launch. For such as he a chair has been rigged up, and he is seated in it while the crane from which the chair is suspended is being swung out to the launch. Thousands of wounded British soldiers returning from the Dardanelles and other scenes of war, are removed from the hospital ships on their arrival in paris in such manner as this before being transferred to the hospitals ashore.

THE BRIDE OF THE PRINCE OF WALES

NO FEAR OF A GERMAN "FRAU" FOR H.R.H. NOW.

Marriage of the Heir Apparent to an English Lady Would Be Popular.

As a result of the war a serious problem has arisen in regard to the marriage of the Heir Apparent of the British Throne.

It is quite certain that there can be no alliance between the English Royal House and that of any branch of the German Royal Family for many a long year to come, if ever, indeed, such an alliance becomes again possible. But the hard fact remains that, outside German Royalties, there are serious difficulties in the way of finding a suitable bride for the soldier son of our Sovereign who is one day destined, if he lives, to reign over the British Empire, says London Answers.

It would be out of place to discuss just now the special character of these difficulties; but it may at least be stated that it is the earnest desire—indeed, one might say that it was the settled intention—of the King and Queen that the Prince of Wales shall not marry anyone who has not been brought up in the Protestant faith.

Someone of Royal Blood.

A way out of the difficulties that have arisen in connection with the marriage of the Prince of Wales has been recently suggested in quarters closely in touch with the Royal entourage: that the Royal Marriage Act should be repealed, or, at all events, suspended. Under this Act the sons of the Sovereign must wed someone of Royal blood, otherwise the marriage is a morganatic union.

If the Act were repealed or suspended, the heir to the Throne could marry the daughter of an English peer, or even a commoner, and the marriage would be valid.

Were the Prince of Wales to marry the daughter of a great English aristocratic house, there is not the least doubt that such a marriage would be vastly more popular in the country than would any foreign alliance, and it is at least possible that, after the war, this may happen.

The daughters of the English sovereigns have ere this married the sons of peers; and nothing really stands in the way of the future Princess of Wales being a lady of pure English descent, except an Act of Parliament that can very easily be altered. Alliances by marriage between Royal Houses of different countries in days gone by were often made with the idea of preserving peace between them. But in later days it has become quite obvious that peace cannot be preserved by Royal alliances.

Of Long Descent.

At one time there was talk of a marriage between the Prince of Wales and the daughter of the Kaiser, and if such an alliance had been arranged —no doubt it was never seriously contemplated—no one for an instant thinks it would have had the least effect upon Germany's long-conceived ambition of smashing us at the first good opportunity.

There are several families among the English aristocracy whose descent is as ancient and honorable as that of our Royal House. What more natural and fitting than that the future Queen of England should be chosen from among these ancient families of the purest English descent?

The suspension or repeal of the Royal Marriage Act would, of course, be bound to influence profoundly the future destinies of the English Royal House.

There are some who fear that it would weaken the Monarchy, or possibly give rise later to conflicting claims to the Throne, such as in ancient days led to civil war; but there is no real justification for such fears. The war has tended to deepen the affection of all classes for the Monarchy, and it is more firmly established than ever in the affections of the English people.

An alliance between the Hr. Apparent with the daughter of a great English aristocratic house would tend to strengthen this affection further, and would be vastly more popular than a foreign alliance.

Pleased in One Thing.

A story has been told of the Prince of Wales that on the night when the news reached Buckingham Palace that war was certain, the Prince rushed off to his sister's boudoir, where he found her Royal Highness writing some letters before retiring.

"Mary," exclaimed the Prince, "we are going to war with Germany, and now I shall not have to marry a German princess, thank goodness!"

GOD'S LAND.

The Story of Why Canada Was Called a Dominion.

Canadians are accustomed to take the expression of the "Dominion" of Canada for granted; but the origin of that somewhat unusual term is known to very few.

When the great scheme of the Fathers of Confederation was finally realized, and the nine provinces grouped themselves together into one great confederation, a serious difficulty was presented by the choice of a suitable name. For a time almost a deadlock ensued.

At length one old member of Parliament rose from his seat and told his colleagues that he had read in his Bible that very morning the words: "His dominion shall be from the one sea to the other." Accordingly, he suggested that Canada should be known as the Dominion, or God's Land. The suggestion seized upon the hearts and imaginations of those present, and it was promptly acted upon.

"I once knew a fellow who gave a girl an engagement ring of opals." "Gracious! Wasn't it unlucky?" "You bet it was!—She married him."

Dix—"Getting in debt is as easy as falling out of an airship." Dix—"Yes; and getting out of debt is about as easy as falling up to it again."

National Duty in War

From The Round Table.

London, Sept. 22.—The events of the past three months make it unnecessary to demonstrate further how great is the effort which lies before us, if liberty is to be saved in Europe. Now that Russia has been forced to evacuate not only Galicia, but Poland, every citizen of the Empire must be able to see for himself that the war is likely to be a very long business indeed, and that the cause of Liberty will triumph only if we put forth our whole strength. Germany has produced no Napoleon. But in the forty years that her General Staff has spent in working out the theory of the conquest of Europe she has created a military system and a national organization unequalled by those of any of the Allies. By comparison we are all somewhat amateur. It will, therefore, be by our endurance, our courage and our numbers rather than by any superiority in generalship that we must reckon to win the war.

Till recently nobody fully realized these facts. In consequence as a nation and as an Empire we have so far failed to approach the problem of organization for war in the spirit of absolute subordination of the conditions and controversies of peace to the supreme necessities of war. It is this failure which is the root cause of the dissatisfaction and unrest which have manifested themselves in the body politic in the last few months. In one sense we have nothing to be ashamed of. The spirit and bravery of the individual have been beyond all praise. The figures for voluntary enlistment, the endurance and courage of officers and men by land and sea, the long hours spent by workers, male and female, in factory and workshop producing munitions of war, are an answer, final and conclusive, to the charge of degeneration in the national stock. Nor have our actual performances in the field fallen short of what either we ourselves or our Allies had good reason to expect. It would probably have been impossible by any other method to have produced a larger army, better trained and better equipped, and of better material, in so short a time. The task of the fleet has been discharged with such silent efficiency that people are inclined to forget that it may yet be the most decisive achievement of the whole war. Yet there has been some national failure of method or purpose in the war, though it is difficult to see exactly where it lies. It cannot be ascribed to delay in achieving military success, or to a shortage of munitions. Both of these might have induced disappointment, but not the uneasy conscience which afflicts us today.

The general nature of the trouble is well indicated in a letter written from the trenches in Gallipoli and received a few weeks ago:

"I write to voice that which I think many of us are feeling now, and more will be before we get much nearer the end of these times, and that is the wonder whether there are to be found anywhere the men who will at last rise to the required greatness and take hold of our poor blind-eyed country and lead it, when its eyes are opened at last. I think many regard, as I do, this change of government as a pity, while fully recognizing that it was necessitated by our system. What we want is not a change of government, but a change of system, and this last move smacks very strongly of an attempt to pour the new wine, which is already running (for those who have the eyes to see it) from this great treading of the wine press, into the old skins, and they patched at that. Out here our view, both physically and mentally, is apt to be bounded by the sea and the summit of Achi Baba, but we do not altogether forget there is something beyond. If there is any possible influence which could be exerted to show the nation at last what it is really fighting for, there might be more hope of a near end, and at least something would be done. If the nation could only realize that it is not fighting so much against militarism, or for Belgium, or for anything else, but just against itself, against all that which has kept us where we are, instead of the living Empire we ought to be, there would be more hope. Unless we first cast the beam out of our own eye it is no use shrieking at the size of the mote in the eye of another nation, and until we do it our struggles and the heavy price of manhood we are paying will really be as vain as they sometimes appear. Our light at present is a peculiarly thick darkness, and great because so few seem to know that it is darkness and has been darkness even when we thought it light."

We propose to consider this diagnosis in two parts. First, as it concerns our conduct of the war, and second as it concerns our national mode of life. In substance the criticism of our conduct of the war amounts to this, that as a nation we have not yet risen to the full level of our duty in this supreme crisis of the world, that we have spent much time in abusing the sins of Germany, while we have dealt lightly with our own, that we have criticized our own Government unmercifully, and have changed it, but that we have not yet begun to make the sacrifices and incur the discipline that are necessary if we are to support our own brothers and our Allies at the front to the utmost of our power. That individuals, and an immense multitude of them, have sacrificed their all, but that as a community we have not pulled ourselves together, nor abandoned absolutely the shibboleths of peace, nor accomplished fully the three things which really matter in war: the organization and disciplining of the whole population for the purpose of the war, the absolute suspension of every hindrance, however dear to capital or labor, which impedes the work of national supply, the husbanding of the resources of the nation by a rigid enforcement of public and private economy. That people are still left to serve only if they choose and when they choose, that industrial service is rendered by many employers only if they are handsomely paid for it, that trade union regulations restrictive of output are still enforced that strikes occur, and that, throughout, money is squandered lavishly as if nobody could be expected to do his duty without being paid for it, and paid extravagantly at that. In consequence that, while one section of the nation is enduring hardships and making sacrifices greater than any in English history for the sake of their fellows, the rest are still living at their ease, seeking pleasure and enjoyment as usual, and wasting resources which are vital if we are to make certain of victory for our cause.

It is easy to lose sight of the immense amount of hard and efficient labor which is being put forth amid the confusion and turmoil incidental to the sudden transformation of the industrial, social and political life of a democratic and unwarlike State. When all has been said and done our effort has been prodigious considering our unpreparedness for war. But still in this choice lies the fundamental truth. We are now fighting the war with only half our national strength. One half of the nation, and that the smaller half, are submitting themselves to discipline and to separation from relatives and friends, are suffering untold hardship, pain, and, in great numbers, are giving up their lives for their friends, while the other half are making no equivalent contribution to the common cause. That is broadly true, and, inasmuch as it is true, it must be changed. We owe it to ourselves, to our brothers at the front, and to our Allies to put our whole national strength into this war.

CARS FOR FIRE FIGHTING.

Railways Are Being Equipped for Forest Protection Work.

The management of the Government railways has made material progress in fire protection in Quebec since taking over the line of the National Transcontinental for operation. A tank car, for fire-fighting purposes, has been equipped and will be stationed at some convenient point between Edmundston and Quebec. This car has a capacity of ten thousand gallons and is equipped with hose to reach a fire five hundred feet from the track. The question of placing two similar cars at convenient points between the City of Quebec and the Ontario boundary is under consideration. Special fire patrols will also be necessary, and the details are being considered. Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals, has announced that the same measures for fire protection will be taken on Government railways as are required by the Railway Commission of lines under private ownership. The measures referred to above constitute an excellent beginning. The Government railways are not under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission.

Special tank cars for fire-fighting purposes constitute efficient means of conserving forest resources along railway lines. The Canadian Pacific railway has two such cars stationed at Brownville Junction, Maine, where serious fires had previously occurred. The Grand Trunk Railway also has equipped a tank car during the present season, placing it at Algonquin Park station, to be used in extinguishing fires along the railway line between Ottawa and Depot Harbor especial attention being given to that portion of the line within Algonquin Park. Excellent results have been secured by both the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk railways from the use of these cars for fire-fighting work.—C. I.- in Conservation.

Played the Same Game.

George—"You seem devoted to that old lady you were with. Is she a near relative?" Gus—"Hist! I'll tell you how it is. She is the mother of Miss Beautie, and I've always heard that the nearest way to a girl's heart is through her mother's. That's why I'm so sweet on the old lady. See?" "Humph! Yes, I see. I played that game, too, when I was young." "Yes, and you married the girl, didn't you?" "True. But the old lady took such a fancy to me that she has been living with me ever since."

There is an average of about 350 births and seventy deaths a day in London.

TENTH CON. BRUCE

In this neighborhood where potatoes have been planted on anything but high, loamy land they are almost a failure from rot. A number of farmers who have been spraying their murphies for blight this summer seem to be more fortunate and report a fairly clean crop.

Underwood L O L No 1122 has decided to hold a squirrel hunt on the 5th of the next month. As quite a few new members have joined the lodge during the past year an exciting time is expected. A supper and good programme will be provided at the evening entertainment for the members' wives and friends.

Nearly everybody in this part took in the big show in Paisley and were not disappointed in the exhibits that were there for inspection. No doubt the soldiers were quite a drawing card. Their performance in the afternoon was quite interesting, although quite a number were disappointed in the programme that was provided on the grounds in the evening. It has to be a good committee that can provide a day's sport to suit everybody.

The sympathy of the entire neighborhood goes out to Mr and Mrs Robt Irwin in the sad bereavement they have been called upon to bear in the death of their little son, aged about two years, who passed away after an illness of about two weeks. The little fellow, who was of a bright, cheerful disposition, easily won his way into the hearts of those who were intimate with the family. The Rev Mr Sawers, of Queen Hill, conducted a beautiful funeral service at the house and also at the graveside. A large number of friends accompanied the heart-broken parents on Saturday afternoon to Stark Vale Cemetery where the little form was laid to rest by loving hands. Although the parents are almost distracted with grief over the loss of their little one it is a great comfort to know and realize what our Lord and Master meant when he said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

DEATH OF MRS. ARCHER

After an extended illness Mrs. Archer, of 13th con. Bruce, passed away at her home on Thursday last, at the age of 76 years. Mrs. Archer had been a resident of Bruce for 53 years, having come with her husband and family from Goderich township, near Clinton. She was born in the town of Goderich, but a few years thereafter her parents went to live in Hullett township, where she was married. She was predeceased by her husband who died thirteen years ago. Mrs. Archer was a warm-hearted, kindly person, much respected by her neighbors and friends. She was a member of the Church of the Ascension, and the funeral on Saturday was conducted by the rector, Rev. L. W. Diehl, assisted by Rev. R. J. McEwen. Interment was made in Stark Vale cemetery. The family surviving are two daughters and five sons: Mrs John Hammond, of Elderslie; Mrs Greenslees, of Mount Forest; John, of Ripley; Albert and William, of Paisley; Samuel and James at home. Another son, Thomas, died only two weeks ago, and the surviving ones have the sympathy of all in their double bereavement.

NEXT GOVERNOR-GENERAL

Democrat and Popular Soldier is Prince Alexander of Teck

Pluck, business capacity, geniality, and good nature are the chief characteristics of Prince Alexander of Teck, who is to succeed the Duke of Connaught as Governor-General of Canada. That the Prince possesses just those democratic qualities which will make him popular in Canada is generally recognized. In the army the "Tommies" always loved him because he had no "side," and knew his business. As a fellow officer put it, when they went out with the Prince's regiment, the Seventh Hussars, and first saw active service in the Matabele War in 1896, "he was not a military clothes horse, but one who knew what soldiering meant."

A striking illustration of his Royal Highness's enthusiasm for soldiering is the fact that when the South African War broke out the Prince at once volunteered for immediate service, and within forty-eight hours sailed with the Inniskilling Dragoons, who took part in the operations round Colesberg, the routing of General Cronje, the relief of Kimberley, and the march to Bloemfontein. Says one who met him during the war, "I once travelled half a day with him, not knowing who he was. Then I learned how earnest a soldier the Prince is, and how thoroughly wedded to his profession. He is a good trekker, and a good camp-mate, too."

As a boy before he went to Eton, the Prince spent his days at Kensington Palace and the White Lodge, Richmond Park, where, with his two brothers and sister, Queen Mary, he romped and ran like a merry sandboy. He was Her Majesty's favorite and it was a black day when he first went off to school—a "preparatory" for Eton, for, in spite of the seven years' difference in their ages, the sister and brother were constant companions. At Eton the Prince was known as a good-tempered, jolly fellow, very fond of games, a reputation which he has always maintained. The business enterprise and capabilities of Prince Alexander were displayed when he carried on the task of raising funds for the Middlesex Hospital, begun by his brother, the late Prince Francis of Teck.

In this work he was largely assisted by his wife, Princess Alexander, who devotes a great deal of time to practical philanthropy. A daughter of the late Duke of Albany, and a sister of the reigning Duke of Saxe-Coburg, the Princess Alexander of Teck married in 1904, when she was twenty-one years of age. Exactly how much truth there may be in the romantic stories that are told of foreign aspirants to the hand of "Princess Alice of Wonderland," as she was called in her younger days, because of her passionate devotion to the works of Lewis Carroll, is not known; but it is stated that she early determined, like her cousin the Princess Royal, that she would not marry a foreign prince.

CHAPTER XIII.

The day came at length upon which St. Gerald Ashley and his young bride, with their attendants, were expected to arrive at Ashley Hall. All the members of the family were assembled in the drawing-room to await them. Many of the county gentry who had been invited to meet the bridal party had joined the circle in the course of the evening, and the rooms were now quite full. Among the guests present were the Right Honorable W—— R——, then Governor of the State; Judge M——, of the Supreme Court, and a few others, high in State or National authority, whose distinguished names are now historical. But there was no one present so proud or happy as old Colonel Ashley, who walked about gently rubbing his hands in the simple gleefulness of his country heart and habits.

The carriage was behind time. At length, however, the welcome wheels were heard to roll up to the door, and the travelers to alight and enter the hall. They retired to change their dresses before entering the drawing-room. All was half-subdued excitement and expectancy. Among the company was Mark Sutherland, of course. He was not one to shade with his dark brow the brightness of other people's gayety. He had heard the slight, subdued bustle in the hall incident upon the arrival of the bridal party, and the instant absorption of the whole heart of the assembled company, in the interest of the moment, had left him free. He had stood a few moments quite alone and unobserved, when a slight tremulousness of the air near him caused him to look up.

Rosalie Vivian was standing near him, with a deprecating, imploring look and gesture. Her face was white as the white crape dress she wore, and her wreath of snow-drops quivered with the trembling of her frame.

Startled by her appearance, he asked hurriedly: "Dear Rosalie, has anything happened?"

"I ought to have told you before. Some of us ought to have told you! ought to have done so!"

"Told me what, dear Rosalie? What is it?"

"Give me the support of your arm into the next room—there is no one there."

"My child, you are not well!" said Mark, looking at her now with painful anxiety.

"I am not good, you ought to say. I have not been your friend, Mark! I have been a traitor!"

"A traitor! Rosalie, you rave!"

"I ought to have told you; but I could not bear to do it. And now it is a mockery to tell you. But yet, I could not bear to see you standing there, so gay and unsuspicious. I could not bear to think how you would lose your self-command in her presence."

"Rosalie, you are very nervous; you have over-exited yourself about this wedding."

As they passed, the buzz of conversation increased very much, and "The bride is coming," "There she is," "Hush," etc., were the sounds that heralded the entrance of the bridal party, just as Mark Sutherland led Rosalie Vivian into the next room. He took her to a sofa, handed her a glass of water; but she waved it aside, saying: "I do not need it! It is you who need strength and calmness now. Oh, Mark! I wish you had left the house when I advised you to leave it!" she exclaimed. At last, forcing herself to speak again, she asked: "Mark! do you know the name of the lady whom St. Gerald Ashley has married?"

"Certainly," said Mark, raising his eyebrows.

"You do!" exclaimed Rosalie, greatly surprised.

"How could I possibly remain in ignorance of it?"

"You do! And yet you are so calm! I am afraid you are mistaken. Whom do you suppose it to be?"

"One once betrothed to myself—my Cousin India!"

"You know it! And you are not unhappy about it! I am so thankful!" And Rosalie dropped her face upon her hands and wept softly and quietly.

"Dear Rosalie, has all this disturbance of yours been caused by your sympathy with unworthy me?"

"I remembered how you suffered at Cashmere—I feared—I dreaded if you met her suddenly here——"

"Tell me your thought, Rosalie. Was it that all those sufferings would be renewed?"

"Yes."

"Yet you see that they are not."

"No, thank Heaven! But I cannot understand it."

"Well, then, understand it now. The advent of my promised bride as the wedded wife of another does not disturb a pulse of mine, because in my heart love could not long survive esteem." Here his whole manner grew most earnest, and passing his arm over her shoulder, he drew her face toward his own, and kissing away the tear-drops from her eyes, said: "Because I love this single tear of true feeling better than the whole heart of yonder selfish beauty!"

And now, if Mark fancied tears, he might have a plenty of them; for now they fell warm and fast.

"What is the matter, Rosalie? Why do you weep?"

At last, sobbing softly, and smiling, and sighing, and blushing, and averting her face, she said, archly: "Juliet wept at what she was 'glad of.'"

"Are you glad, Rosalie? Tell me, dear Rose, are you glad that I love you more than all the world—that I have chosen you the gulding star of my life?"

She did not, she could not answer.

At last it came, with her face hidden on his shoulder, and in a tone scarcely above her breath: "I always hoped you would like me at last."

"But are you glad—are you glad?"

"Yes, glad," whispered Rosalie; and in proof of her truth, the tears rolled quietly down her face.

"And so am I! Glad, happy, confident—Rosalie! You have infused new life into me. That any gossamer girl should have the power to do this!"

"Am I such a gossamer?"

"You are very fragile, Rosalie."

"Out of the heart are the issues of life."

They were interrupted, of course; people always are when they are very blessed. This time it was old Colonel Ashley. He came in with a brisk step, with his slight figure seeming slighter, his gray hair lighter, and his thin, rosy face fleecr than ever, with the effervescence of his joy.

"Ah, Mr. Sutherland, you are here! I have been looking for you. What! will you be the last to pay your respects to the bride, and she a relative? Come, let me present you."

"Does India—does Mrs. Ashley expect me?"

"I imagine not!" replied the old gentleman, raising his eyebrows. "But what does not matter, you know."

Pressing the hand of Rosalie, Mark Sutherland arose to accompany Colonel Ashley to the front drawing-room and to the presence of the bride.

There stood India receiving the homage of her circle, her superb form arrayed in the rich and gorgeous costume that was so well adapted to her majestic and luxurious style of beauty. Her cheeks were mantled with a rich, high color, yet this seemed not the carnation bloom of youth and health, but the fire of a feverish excitament. Her eyes were dark and brilliant, yet not with the light of innocent love and joy, but with the blaze of a burning and consuming heart.

"Come," whispered the old gentleman; "it is no use to stand here waiting our opportunity. Come, we must elbow through that circle of dandies; gently, you know—gently."

And suiting the action to the words, Colonel Ashley adroitly insinuated himself through and into the very presence of the bride.

Colonel Ashley and Mr. Sutherland were before her.

"Mrs. Ashley——"

She looked round.

"Will you permit me to present to you my young friend, Mr. Sutherland—a distant relative of your own——"

Mark Sutherland looked up, caught her eye, and bowed deeply. But before even the deliberate ceremonious presentation speech of the old gentleman was half over—at the very instant she had turned around, and her eye had fallen upon Mark Sutherland—a change, an appalling change, had come over her lovely face like that which might be supposed to sweep over the face of some beautiful and fertile oasis at the sudden blast of the simoon.

As by the sudden smite of death, all color was dashed out from her cheek, and all light from her eye. For a moment she stood and gazed, transfixed, unable to withdraw her stony eyes from his; then, with a sudden cry, as if some tight-strained heart-string had snapped, the tension of her form relaxed, and she fell to the floor!

In an instant all was confusion. Raised in the arms of her father, Clement Sutherland, who had remained obscure in the background, the swooning bride was borne into the adjoining room and laid upon the sofa, while restoratives were anxiously sought for.

In the meantime, in the saloon she had left, only Mark Sutherland and Mrs. Vivian understood the cause of her fainting. "It was the heat of the room," thought one; "over-excitement," opined another; "standing so long," fancied a third; "the fatigue of her journey," imagined a fourth.

"I noticed her face was very pale," said a sympathetic lady.

"Indeed! but I thought it was very flushed," interrupted a matter-of-fact individual.

All these various conjectures were expressed, while, undisturbed and smiling, Mrs. Vivian passed among the company, and, as it were, moved upon the troubled waters of their half-suppressed excitement, and, with her mere smile of self-possession, restored calmness and order.

Presently the door of the inner room opened, and the bride reappeared, leaning lightly upon the arm of her father and attended by her husband and bridesmaids. Several gentlemen drew forward a cushioned chair, and several sympathetic old ladies approached with inquiries and expressions of condolence.

Pale and weary, but smiling and self-possessed, Mrs. Ashley gracefully accepted the services of the former, and replied to the interested questions and comments of the latter.

"It was very ill-judged on the part of the Colonel, my dear, to subject you to the fatigue of a reception, just off your journey," said Mrs. Chief Justice M——.

"I do really think we ought to exercise the good taste of retiring," whispered another.

Whether India heard this remark or not, she answered:

"I am not fatigued. We made but a very short stage to-day, and rested several hours at the next village. No; it was the warmth and closeness of the room. The windows are open now, and the effect has gone with the cause," she added, smiling brightly; while at the same moment the consciousness of the first falsehood she had ever uttered in her life brought a warm though transient blush to her cheek.

After a little the musicians began to touch their instruments and soon struck up a lively quadrille air. Gentlemen hesitated, and then chose their partners for the set, and remained awaiting the motions of Mrs. Ashley. As hostess, it was her right to select any gentleman present to honor with her hand for the quadrille; and as bride, it was her privilege to lead off the dance.

When India became aware that all were waiting for her, she threw her eyes over the assembly; and the aspiring heart of many a youth beat faster when their beams lingered for an instant on him. But he for whom she looked was nowhere to be seen. At last, a smile of scorn and self-scorn writhed swiftly athwart her lips, and her eyes suddenly blazed as their light kindled upon the form of one who came last of the farthest door. Quick as lightning flashed and fled the spasm of that face, leaving it serene and smiling, as she arose and met the new-comer, and said sweetly:

"My Cousin Mark, will you honor me?"

And before the astonished man could bow, she had placed her hand in his, and he found himself by her side at the head of a set that instantly formed around them.

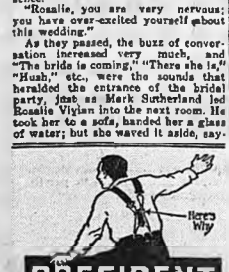
India spoke and smiled with her usual charming ease, and danced with her usual grace and dignity.

And after the dance was finished, and her partner had led her to her seat, she detained him near her. She presented him to her husband; and Mark Sutherland, of course, politely expressed himself as pleased to form the personal acquaintance of one with whose public life he had been so long familiar.

Throughout the long evening India maintained a regnant self-control. And Mark Sutherland wondered at the seeming inconsistency of her conduct.

Not again that evening did Mark Sutherland find an opportunity to speak with Rosalie. India detained him at her side, smiling and chatting.

The drama of the evening was at last over, and India found herself for a few moments alone in her chamber. She had smiled and charmed all eyes and ears to the last. She had gained the privacy of her chamber—she had angrily rejected the services of her attendant, and turned her from the room. And now for the moment she was alone and free—the miserable victim of pride might see the wretch she really was.



And, oh! the fearful change that came over that beautiful but agonized face when the mask of smiles fell! She threw herself, all robed and gemmed and wreathed as she was, prostrate upon the bed—her form convulsed, her bosom heaving with the suffocating anguish, which, from its very excess, could not be vented.

"False! false! false!" she wailed. "False to Mark! false to my husband! falser than all to myself! Lost! lost! lost! Lost body, soul and spirit! Would that I could die!"

A light, gay footstep on the stairs, a low, love-turned voice near the door, and it opened, and St. Gerald Ashley entered with a smile of confiding affection on his noble face.

How will that erring woman meet his manly, trusting love?

Sir Crawford McCullough, J.P., Lord Mayor of Belfast, has received a communication from the Minister of Munitions stating that arrangements have been made with the Board of Trade for continuing the work of enrolling war munition volunteers.

ALFONSO'S READY SILENCER.

An Amusing Story of a Visit the Spanish King Paid.

Few of those who recently read in the newspapers that King Alfonso of Spain had celebrated his twenty-ninth birthday remembered that this young monarch has reigned longer than any other European sovereign except the King Montenegro and the Emperor of A——n. Alfonso was born a king, and has reigned all the twenty-nine years of his life. Pearson's Weekly tells an amusing story of a visit he once paid, when he was little more than a boy, to a small Spanish town that is noted for a certain delicious kind of candy that is as sticky as it is palatable.

When the young king arrived, a deputation of the townsfolk waited on him and presented him with a huge box of the famous candy. At the same time a pompous man stepped forward with a large roll of paper in his hand, which he began to open. It was a loyal address, and evidently a very long one.

Now, King Alfonso loathes listening to addresses, so as the big man advanced, he handed round the box of candy among the deputation and made the would-be reader take a particularly large piece. Of course etiquette forbade him to refuse. As he worked his jaws up and down, his teeth stuck in the candy, and he could no more have read the address than he could have flown into the air!

There were only 364 days in the year 1752.

"On the strength" means that a soldier's marriage has taken place with the knowledge and consent of the authorities. "Off the strength" presumes a clandestine marriage.

PRACTICAL FARMING

Requisites of a Good Horse.

The first requisites of a good driver are a cool head and a watchful eye, with ready fingers and the quick understanding of the needs and requirements of his horse. He must also be ready to detect any object by the roadside which would be likely to annoy the horse and grasp at a glance the character of the road that lies ahead of him.

No quick-tempered, loud-voiced man can expect to have a quiet, obedient horse; and the undue haste of the quick-tempered driver to correct what seems to him misbehavior, is one of the reasons why so many horses are dangerous to drive. Much of this abuse, however, to which the horse is subjected, arises more from sheer ignorance and carelessness than from wanton cruelty.

Before starting on a long drive you should examine the horse, the harness and the vehicle—the bit should be as easy a one as possible, the harness must be comfortable and well fitting. Do not use a check rein if the road is long and hilly, but should one be necessary then loosen the head of the horse before ascending a hill, when going over muddy roads, and also whenever you stop, as it is natural for a horse to lower his head when he makes an extra exertion, and also to droop it when he is resting.

A horse should not only be allowed to walk slowly along steep and muddy parts of the road, but also occasionally on level ground; the change from one set of muscles to another rests him. When your horse begins to feel fatigued he will strike one of his hoofs against the ankle opposite, often bruising and cutting it.

As it is generally one of the hind ankles, an ankle boot should be worn during a long drive, even if it is unnecessary on other occasions.

Two other indispensable articles on a long drive are a wooden scraper for removing foam and a hoof-pick for dislodging stones. For one who is often on the road it is also useful to have a few pieces of rope and some brass wire, as with these in his possession anyone with ingenuity can quickly repair ordinary damages to the harness or carriage.

Horses, when traveling, should have water given to them frequently in reasonable quantities—if you drive slowly for a while after watering your horse, no injurious results will follow, and they may be refreshed by a few mouthfuls of grain, hay or grass. Should you chance to stop where there is a strong breeze blowing, put a light blanket on your one, even if the weather is warm.

Do not, at any part of a long trip yield to the temptation of racing with passing vehicles, for the quickening of a horse's steady road pace to a racing gait heats him unnecessarily, and if done frequently is very fatiguing.

Remember always that your mood communicates itself to your horse. Be gentle, cheerful and patient in your manner toward him and allow him to derive as much comfort as possible from the drive, as you yourself expect.

Nowadays farmers are beginning to awaken to the fact that it takes strong horses to do good work on the farm. The fact that almost any horse can be made to do something at farm work is no valid excuse for men who profess to have their own interests at heart to persist in breeding horses that nobody wants, not even themselves.

In the fields a big team makes haste by the width of the furrow or swath they cut.

There is pleasure and inspiration in the business of breeding and handling high class horses.

Bear in mind in breeding horses that it is just as essential to breed good feet on to them as to get weight and blood in them. The pure-bred mare is a good investment to the small farmer, and if he will allow her to share the work of the place she will do nearly as much work as a gelding, and raise a good colt besides.

A well-bred mare to a stallion of the best type will bring a colt worth as much at weaning-time as a grade colt would bring at maturity, sometimes a lot more.

Officer—So, Mrs. Casey, ye wint to the aviation meet. An' did ye ondershtand the aeroplanes?

GREATLY DISCOURAGED OVER BABY'S ILLNESS

Mrs. Jos. Gaudreau, Notre Dame des Bois, Que., writes: "Last autumn our baby was very sick and we were greatly discouraged. The doctor did not seem able to help him, and we began using Baby's Own Tablets, which soon made him a fat, healthy child." Thousands of other mothers give Baby's Own Tablets the same praise. The Tablets regulate the stomach and bowels, break up colds and simple fevers, expel worms, cure colic, and make teething easy. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THOSE STRIPS OF COLOR.

What the Narrow Ribbons Mean on a Soldier's Coat.

When a man is in khaki it is impossible for him to wear the medals he has won, so a small piece of the ribbon on which the medal is suspended, and which differs in color, according to the decoration, is worn on the left breast above the pocket of the tunic. By the colors of these scraps of ribbon a civilian who knows anything about decorations can tell what medals a soldier is entitled to wear, and incidentally what campaigns he has been through, for every survivor of a campaign is awarded a special medal at its conclusion.

The Crimean veteran would wear a ribbon with a broad, light blue stripe between two narrow yellow stripes. It might be mentioned here that on every medal-ribbon the stripes are vertical. The man who fought in the Indian Mutiny would wear three white and two red stripes placed alternately, in the Egyptian campaign three blue and two white stripes placed alternately, in the Matabele campaign four orange and three blue stripes, in the Sudan a broad yellow and broad black stripe divided by a narrow red stripe, and in the South African campaign, for which there are two medals, two red, two blue, and an orange stripe, or a green, white, and orange stripe, or both.

The former—the Queen's medal—was awarded by King Edward soon after his mother's death in 1901, and the latter, known as the King's, in 1902, to be worn in addition to the Queen's by men completing eighteen months' service in South Africa during the war. The Sudan medal was awarded by Queen Victoria in 1898 to the men who carried out the operations under Lord Kitchener, which led to the re-conquest of the Sudan.

Apart from the foregoing medals, there are a number of special decorations. The ribbon accompanying the Victoria Cross, the most coveted of these special decorations, in plain crimson for the army and blue for the navy; the Khedive's Star ribbon is plain blue; that of the Long Service and Good Conduct medal, which was instituted by William IV., and is awarded after eighteen years' service in the British army, and carries with it a gratuity of $25 on discharge, is plain red; that of the medal for Distinguished Conduct on the Field, which carries with it a gratuity of $100 on discharge, or an increase of 12 cents a day on the pension, is two red and one blue stripes, while of Roberts' Star, which bears the words, "Kabul to Kandahar, 1880," has one red, one yellow, and one blue, and two white stripes.

A DOCTOR'S EXPERIENCE

Medicine Not Needed In This Case.

It is hard to convince some people that tea or coffee does them an injury! They lay their bad feelings to almost every cause but the true and unsuspected one.

But the doctor knows. His wide experience has proven to him that, to some systems, tea and coffee are insidious poisons that undermine the health. Ask him if tea or coffee is a cause of constipation, stomach and nervous troubles.

"I have been a coffee drinker all my life, and when taken sick two years ago with nervous prostration, the doctor said that my nervous system was broken down and that I would have to give up coffee.

"I got so weak and shaky I could not work, and reading an advertisement of Postum I asked my grocer if he had any of it. He said, 'Yes,' and that he used it in his family and it was all it claimed to be.

"So I quit coffee and commenced to use Postum steadily, and in about two weeks I could sleep better and get up in the morning feeling fresh. In about two months I began to gain flesh. I weighed only 140 pounds when I commenced on Postum and now I weigh 167 and feel better than I did at 20 years of age.

"I am working every day and sleep well at night. My two children were coffee drinkers, but they have not drank any since Postum came into the house, and are far more healthy than they were before." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

APTITUDE FOR LANGUAGES.

Russian Woman Knew Only Five, But Knew Them Well.

Writing of the aptitude of the Russians for acquiring languages, Richard Whiteing tells in the current number of the Bookman of a woman he met in that country:

"I knew of one," he says, "who had four languages, besides her own, at her tongue's end—English, French, German, Italian. She spoke in them and wrote in them. And she had something to write about—a basis of solid studies, in history, literature, and the commerce of life. She thought in them, wrongly enough sometimes, as I thought in my turn, but that was merely matter of opinion. The thesis was there, coherent and four square, with the power to hold her own in it. She was obsessed with the idea of a superior caste of mind, to which she and her intellectual set belonged. With all this she was a most accomplished musician, and had filled the Queen's Hall more than once for concerts given in her own name.

"I have a certain hesitation in saying all this, because it may seem founded on mere recollections of my reading of prodigies of the past, our own Admirable Crichton or the Continental Pico della Mirandola. As a lad, Crichton is said to have known a dozen languages. I wonder in how many of them he could have deceived the native. Gilbert Hamerton used to say that no more than two can ever be acquired in that perfection.

"The peculiarity in this lady's case, as a Russian, was that she was one of many, only less richly endowed. And I hasten to add, still with the purpose of saving myself, that the union of qualities precluded the marked bias for one that makes for success."

Joints Quit Aching Soreness Goes Away

NO MORE STIFFNESS, PAIN OR MISERY IN YOUR BACK OR SIDE OR LIMBS!

Wonderful "Nerviline" is the Remedy.

A marvelous pain reliever.

Not an ordinary liniment—just about five times more powerful, more penetrating, more pain-subduing than any thick, oily or ammonia liniment. Nerviline fairly eats up the pain and stiffness in chronic rheumatic joints, gives quick relief to those throbbing pains, and never burns or even stains the skin.

"Rheumatism kept my joints swollen and sore for ten years. My right knee joint was often too painful to allow me to walk. In this crippled tortured condition I found Nerviline a blessing. Its warm, soothing action brought relief I had given up hoping for. I rubbed on quantities of Nerviline and improved steadily. I also took Ferrozone at mealtime in order to purify and enrich my blood. I am today well and can recommend my treatment most conscientiously.

(Signed) C. PARKS,
Prince Albert.

Not an ache or pain in the muscles or joints that Nerviline won't cure. It's wonderful for lumbago and sciatica; for neuralgia, stiff neck, earache and toothache. Nerviline is simply a wonder. Best family liniment known and largely used for the past forty years. Sold by dealers everywhere, large family size bottle 50c., small trial size 25c. Refuse a substitute, take only "Nerviline."

HOW HE LOST HIS FISH.

A Fisherman Had An Experience With a Bear.

An Easterner was spending his first summer in the West where he had a good opportunity to indulge in his favorite sport of trout fishing. One afternoon he had been unusually successful, but just as he was setting out for camp with a heavy string of fish he caught sight of a great pine that had blown down, and was lying with its top in the water—just the place for hooking a monster trout.

Pushing along to the fallen pine, he climbed upon it by dint of hard scrambling, holding on as best he could with his rod in one hand and his string of fish in the other. The tree was close to the bank, and the stream was running bank full. He was in the midst of the branches, crowding onward, when suddenly an immense bear rose up close beside him.

There was no hesitation. To run was impossible. On the impulse of the moment the man dashed his string of trout full in the bear's face. In doing so he lost his balance, and the next instant there was a tremendous splash, and he disappeared in the rushing water.

The fisherman emerged some distance farther down the stream, and scrambling to the bank, looked back. There on the pine sat the bear, intently watching the hole where he had disappeared. He did not go back to inform her that he was not there, but made for camp at good speed.

More Than Pleased.

Having fallen into pecuniary difficulties the landlord decided to increase the rents of his tenants. Meeting one of them shortly after, he said: "Mike, I have to inform you that after the end of this year I am going to raise your rent." "Troth, then, your honor," said Mike, "I'm more than pleased to hear it, for I'm at my wits end to know how I'm going to raise it myself."

If Thin, Nervous Run Down, Depressed, This Will Help!

The wear and strain of life has tended in recent years to produce nervous debility in a large percentage of our population. Thousands are affected with a feeling they can't exactly describe. They are always tired and droopy, lack ambition, have poor appetite, look pale and suffer from depressing headaches and insomnia. This condition is full of peril. It is the stepping stone to invalidism, the beginning of a shattered constitution. We advise everyone in this condition to take a good medicine at once and try to get well while yet there is time. Probably no better advice can be given than to use regularly Dr. Hamilton's Pills which have become famous in restoring the sick to good health. A general toning up of the system at once takes place. The whole body is vitalized by richer and purer blood. The appetite is increased, food is digested and naturally strength rapidly increases. Headaches go because the bowels are regulated and all wastes are carried off. There is no experiment about using Dr. Hamilton's Pills because they certainly restore the sick as a trial will quickly prove. Just as good for the old as the young, and suitable to the needs of men, women and children. This grand family medicine should be in every home.

GERMAN STUDENTS IN THE WAR

Percentage Is Large. But Most Institutions Continue Courses.

The percentage of German students actively engaged in this war is greater by far than in any other war in history. And withal, with the exception of four forest academics, all German colleges have maintained their regular winter and summer sessions. The lists of matriculated students, however, have been markedly depleted.

In the fall of 1914 there were matriculated at the country's 22 universities, 11 technical colleges, 5 business colleges, 3 veterinary colleges, and 6 agricultural and mining colleges, 64,710 students, while 79,077 students were attending the 52 German high schools. Of these matriculated students there have been enrolled in the army of 30,000 university students, 8,000 technical, 6,000 business, 300 veterinary, 300 agricultural, and 300 mining.

Of the 4,000 female students approximately 600 have become sick nurses. From Koenigsberg, which contributed the largest contingent of students, 1,057 out of 1,230 went to the front. Of technical students taking part in the war Danzig supplied the largest proportion, 63 out of 72 students, or 90 per cent.

The students matriculated at the Berlin University for the current summer term of six months, or a semester, numbered 6,016, compared to 8,647 of last summer. In reality only 2,300 male and female students actually attend the university. In Munich 5,701 students are matriculated this summer semester, of which number 3,957 were granted leave of absence to serve in the army or sanitary corps.

Thus far the mortality among the students of Germany has been as follows: Bonn, 2 lectors and 113 students; Freiburg, 3 adjunct professors, 3 assistants, and 117 students; Goettingen, 7 lectors, 8 assistants, and 142 students; Heidelburg, 78 students; Jena, 112 students; Kiel, 24 students; Leipzig, 3 lectors and 268 students; Munich, 10 students; Tuebingen, 9 lectors and 130 students.

The Technical College of Berlin, which during former summer semesters 2,200 students attended, shows a matriculation this year of 2,013, of which number not more than 302 are in attendance, while about 1,710 are doing military service at the front.

CROSS ROAD FOR CANADA.

Winnipeg Trying to Get Concrete Highway for Canada.

Reports from Winnipeg state that Central Western Canada will have a Federal Highway, if the project being urged by the Winnipeg Board of Control is carried out.

This project contemplates the construction of a concrete highway from Winnipeg to Calgary, to go through the more thickly settled territory tapped by the Canadian Pacific Railroad.

The thousand miles of highway through the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and half way into Alberta, will be financed by the municipalities through which the roadway would pass. Several appropriations also will be sought from the provincial Governments. The project has been received with the greatest enthusiasm in a number of the larger cities along the proposed route.

It has been pointed out by the promoters of the highway plan that the land values of the prairie provinces would be greatly enhanced by the building of a permanent concrete highway, such as the Lincoln Highway, which has had such a wonderful effect upon the general road building in the United States.

Russia Buys Large Quantities of Tea.

The Canadian demand for Indian and Ceylon teas increase yearly, and if one adds to this the many other contingencies brought about by the war, it can readily be understood why the cost of tea is increasing. Russia is taking enormous quantities, and their buyers pay the very highest prices. The abnormal buying has forced quotations up over 10c a pound higher than nine months ago.

INDUSTRY AND SOBRIETY.

A Man Need Not Be a Servant All His Life Long.

I do not believe that the principles of life have changed in 40 years, writes John Williams Streeter. I do not believe that an intelligent, able-bodied man need be a servant all his life, or that industry and economy miss their rewards, or that there is any truth in the theory that men may not rise out of the rut in which they happen to find themselves. The trouble is with the man, not with the rut. He spends his time diligently searching for an outlet or in honestly working his way up to it. Heredity and environment are heavy weights, but industry and sobriety can carry heavier ones. I have sympathy for weakness of body or mind, and patience for those over whom inheritance has cast a baleful spell; but I have neither patience nor sympathy for a strong man who rails at his condition and makes no determined effort to better it.

Ingenious.

At one of the military camps some recruits were being put through the riding test. One man didn't know much about horses, but trusted to luck to get through.

He had not properly adjusted his saddle, and on mounting he swung—saddle and all—right under the horse's body between its legs, where he was suspended for a few seconds.

"Hi, there!" yelled the noncom., in derision, "call that riding, do you?"

"Oh, no, sergeant," was the instant answer, "that's a new trick for the Dardanelles. Riding under here's fine protection from the sun."—London Tit-Bits.

RAVAGES OF RUST.

A Corps of Painters Are Constantly Employed on Forth Bridge.

Few people comprehend the extent of purely normal wear and tear. London Tit-Bits says that one large railway system suffers a loss of more than eighteen tons of metal daily, due solely to the effect of rust. Thus far, the only known preventive is to keep the metal surface always covered with a suitable paint. Some idea of the costliness of this remedy, however, may be gained from the fact that it requires about £1,000 annually to paint one large railway bridge alone.

A typical case of this kind is the Forth Bridge, on which a corps of painters are constantly employed, since the weather makes repainting of one end of this large structure necessary before the workers have reached the other. Although experiments have demonstrated that pure iron surrounded by oxygen does not rust, and that some acid, especially carbonic acid, is necessary for the production of rust, the secret of manufacturing rustless steel and iron remains to be discovered.

Constipation Relieved or "Money Back." No Drugs.

Dr. Jackson's Roman Meal is sold with this guarantee. It is simply a most delicious food. It makes porridge, pancakes, and all baked products. All may be eaten hot without distress and nourish better than meat. Be sensible, at least try it. Costs little, only 10 cents and 25 cents. At all grocers.

Ambach Wood Lightest Known.

The lightest wood in existence is believed to be the wood of ambach, a leguminous plant that grows near Lake Chad and on the tributaries of the Upper Nile. The tree, which is sometimes called the pith tree, often attains a diameter of six inches in the two or three years of its life. At that age it dies, and another shoot starts from its roots.

A Slight Misunderstanding.

The aged lady next door had been quite ill, so one morning Willie's mother said to her small son: "Run over and see how old Mrs. Smith is this morning." Willie reparted, but in a few moments he came running back and said: "She says it's none of your business." "Why, Willie," exclaimed his mother, "what did you ask her?" "Just what you told me to," said Willie. "I said you wanted to know how old she was."

Cautious.

"Had you the audacity, John," said a Scottish laird to his servant, "to go and tell some people that I was a mean fellow, and no gentleman?" "Na, na, sir," was the candid answer; "you'll no catch me at the like o' that. I aye keep my thoughts to mesel'."

The Paisley Advocate

PAISLEY, OCT. 14th, 1915

From the Boys in the Trenches

Mr Sam Babcock received the following letter from his brother:

Somewhere in France,
Sept 20, 1915

DEAR BROTHER—We have moved across the channel at last and are in sunny France. It is a very interesting country, believe me—the buildings are so oddly built and the people are so much different from the English, although they live only a few miles apart, you might say. At least, it would not seem very far to us in Canada. Some of them can speak a little English, so one can make them understand by odd words and signs.

It makes it very hard to write a letter of any length, now that all our letters are censored before they leave camp by our own officers. We can't tell where we are at, in fact we really don't know ourselves, as the names of places are so complicated. A fellow would need a mouthful of hemlock slivers to pronounce them. So don't be vexed, Sam, if I don't tell you any news, as it is impossible. The letter would not go at all.

I had a card from Tom to-day, dated Sept 10th, stating that he was well—one of those brief and to the point affairs, you know, supplied by the military officials. Of course the poor chap can't do better under the circumstances. I saw a letter of his in THE ADVOCATE, saying that he had been in the trenches for twelve days without taking his boots or clothes off. Pretty tough, eh? I also had a letter from Duff Graham, Calgary. He is in the 66th Regt out there and says there are 15,000 troops in training at a camp near there. Old Canada is doing fine, isn't she, for men and equipment?

Haven't had a letter from you for some time, hope everybody is well. We are all first-class here. Get three good square meals per day, etc. What more can a fellow expect? And we do see life. We sleep out in the open when it is fine but have a roof to go under if it is raining. The weather here is just swell so far—plenty of sunshine, and the boom of the big guns makes us sleep all the sounder.

Well, I will close this time, hoping to hear from you soon. Love to all from ANDREW.

Army P.O., London, England

Pte Tom Babcock wrote also on Sept 22nd. He was well at that time, and in the front line of trenches. Some places they are only about 20 yards from the German trenches. He had seen some sights that were worth seeing and some that one would not care to look at. Had not seen Andrew yet, but heard he was about three miles from there. He gets THE ADVOCATE quite often. His address is:

—Just when the campaign begins to look favorable for the Allies on the French and Belgian lines of battle, the situation becomes more complicated by the Balkan kings demonstrating their blood relationship to the German Kaiser and the Austrian Emperor, and the Kaiser's sister, Queen of Greece, brings disgrace upon that nation by influencing the king and rulers against supporting the Allies, as the people are undoubtedly inclined to do. Well, it means that more men of British blood, including Canadians, will be required to fight it out to the bitter end with the Hohenzollerns. Jack Canuck should take a particular delight in upsetting the thrones of these medieval monarchs and helping to put an end to their kingcraft.

—In replying to a deputation representative of the Presbyterians of Toronto and district, who waited on him at the parliament buildings on Friday last, to urge the necessity for more drastic restrictions in the sale sale of liquor, Premier Hearst referred them to his reply to a deputation which was before him recently. He said that in his judgment it would not be advancing the cause of temperance to prohibit the traffic in the province. He pointed out that the Government were studying the question, and they had the help of the license board, a committee who were appointed at the last session and who enjoyed the confidence of the community. He said there were certain limitations to the government's powers, and it had no right to stop the manufacture and the importation of liquor, as some people thought.

At Their Mother's Funeral

Mr. J. R. Laidlaw and Mrs. R. J. Nelson were called to Toronto last week by the death of their aged mother, which occurred in the city on Wednesday last. The funeral took place on Friday to Georgetown.

Newspaper Men at Fair

The Chesley Enterprise, Tara Leader and Port Elgin Times all speak well of the Paisley Fair. The editors of these papers, Messrs. Wm. McDonald, M.P.P., J. H. VanDusen and E. R. Sayler, were among the visitors.

New Section Foreman

Mr. D. W. Gregg, who has been on the track work at Eden Grove for several years, is the successor to Mr. D. Thompson as foreman of Paisley G.T.R. section crew. He has moved his family to town, having rented the Strachan residence on Queen St. south.

Removed to Listowel

Mr. Robt. Irving, plasterer, having secured several contracts in Listowel, where building has been brisk this year, decided to remove his family to that town for a few months, and they went last week. We are glad to know they do not intend leaving Paisley permanently.

Twenty Dollars at Interest

Let a young man at twenty years of age put twenty dollars at interest, instead of expending it for tobacco. Then, at the beginning of the next year repeat it, and include also the principal and interest of the preceding year, and thus continue to do from year to year, until he shall have reached the age of seventy; the amount he would realize would exceed thirty thousand dollars. How many of our young men will try it?

Good for Soldiers or Civilians

We see the argument used, "What is good for the soldier should be good for the civilian," in papers discussing the prohibition of liquor selling to men in the King's uniform. It was demonstrated at Paisley Fair that the local option prohibition which has proven good for coercive population inequally effectively beneficial to the soldiers. We have yet to hear of one of the 200 visiting soldiers getting drunk while in Paisley. The tale was different where they visited licensed towns and came in contact with the open bars.

A Duty to Perform

The man who makes money in a community has a duty to perform to that community. It may be that he has made his money by his superior business ability, and that he would have done as well anywhere. That does not alter the case. If his gifts are great his responsibility is equally as great. No man was placed on earth for the sole purpose of making money, and the man who has this as his ideal had better never have been born. It is not an act of charity, but the performance of a simple duty for the man who has made money to pass a little of it on for the benefit of the community, even though he never expects to see a dollar of his contribution back.

Directors Grateful

The directors of Paisley Fair feel that they would be remiss in their duty should they not publicly thank those farmers and others who so willingly contributed fowl and other articles of provender necessary for the bill of fare for the soldiers on Fair day, also the ladies who contributed baking and devoted their time to preparing the meal for the tables. A large burden of the work and considerable expense was saved to the managers and treasury by the ready and generous response given to their call for assistance in carrying out in such excellent style the special attractions part of the day's programme, all of which is duly appreciated.

Potatoes Higher in Price

From $1.20 to $1.25 per bag is the price of Ontario and New Brunswick potatoes in Toronto, and in London the figures are higher. Wholesale buyers are receiving confirmation of the ominous reports as to the effects of rots on the Ontario tuber crop. Some dealers go so far as to say that it is almost a total failure, while others state that potatoes grown on the higher ground are fairly good shape. One of the largest Toronto dealers stated that in his opinion the price would be around $2 per bag this winter, as against 80c last year. New Brunswick potatoes are entirely free of rot, but the yield is not more than 60 per cent. of last year. The embargo against imported potatoes having been removed by both Canada and U.S., New Brunswick product will find a large market in the eastern States. In Bruce county the crop was most promising for a heavy yield of fine merchantables, but the rot brought great disappointment at digging time except where spraying had been done throughout the growing season. This plan seems to be the only hope for farmers to make anything out of potato growing. The Port Elgin Fruit Growers Company raised 7000 bushels and report no rot. Spraying the tops kept the tubers from the slightest taint of the widely prevalent disease. The benefits from spraying are being demonstrated everywhere. Farmers here find their seed and labor almost wholly wasted from rot, where spraying would probably give them a full crop on light or rolling land, and good prices for the surplus this year. It should not be necessary for Ontario people to eat potatoes grown in New Brunswick.

Red Cross Collection October 21

A whirlwind campaign is to be put on for Trafalgar Day in Paisley, to collect funds for the British Red Cross appeal. This is the outcome of the public meeting of citizens held at the call of the council on Friday evening of last week in the council chamber, Reeve Ballachey presiding. A committee was formed to canvas every resident of the town on Trafalgar Day, Oct 21st. Two men will collect in each quarter of the town, Queen St. and the Teeswater River being the dividing lines. The collectors are paired as follows for the four districts:

South-west—F S MacLachlan and Geo Grant.
South-east—Dr Allen and H B Putnam.
North-west—D McKenzie and J A Logie.
North-east—A Galbraith and J H Steele.

These eight men comprise the committee, of which J H Steele is chairman and D McKenzie secretary-treasurer. The money collected is to be handed over to the village treasurer, less any expense incurred, to be forwarded to the proper Red Cross officer.

Everyone is requested to have his or her contribution ready for Trafalgar Day, as all collections are to be made on that day (Thursday, Oct 21).

Be as liberal to the Red Cross as possible. Bear in mind that the men who are suffering wounds and death on the battlefields are your fellow citizens and defenders of the great empire under which you are enjoying peace and liberty.

If you can't or don't want to fight, fight, fight, you should pay, pay, pay, according to your means.

Soldiers Appreciative

Several letters from men of the 34th Battalion have been received by Paisley ladies, in which the boys express their hearty appreciation for the choice menu provided for the soldier visitors on Fair Day, also for the dainties they were allowed to take with them for variation of the camp fare.

Our Farmers

The farmers have just as much to do in building up and improving their town as do the citizens of the town. It is to their interest to have up-to-date mercantile, machinists and mechanics. How can they expect these conveniences if they send to all the large cities for merchandise that should be bought of the home dealer. The few cents that can be saved by buying goods away from home is injuring your community to the extent of many dollars by retarding progress and the increased valuation of all kinds of property, including your own. Stand together and together all prosper. Divide and prosperity will flee. You know what the Bible says, that "a house divided against itself cannot stand."

Auto Accident

Two little boys, aged six and eight years, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Fleming, were injured by an auto on Monday, but fortunately not seriously. They had been to the post office, and while on Church St. crossing going home were struck by an auto driven by Gladstone McGregor. Several youngsters were playing on the street there at the time, and in watching to avoid running over any of them Gladstone did not notice until someone shouted that the Fleming children were a few feet ahead of his car. The latter had gone past, but apparently became confused in their intention to keep together and ran back into the rear end of the car. There they grasped and clung to each other, and fell together when the car hit them. Although moving at a very slow speed the car passed over the place the children stood before it stopped. One escaped with very slight outward injury, while the other bears several marks on head and face, which will soon heal up. They were taken up to Dr. Gage's in the latter's car, where they were examined and bandaged before being taken home. Young McGregor also went to the doctor's office, and there collapsed from the shock of the accident, and was unconscious for nearly half an hour. The fact that no fatality resulted is a mighty relief to him. The Fleming boys are sturdy little fellows, and true soldier sons of a soldier father, who is in the trenches in France. The younger was wearing a juvenile khaki uniform when he was hurt.

DEATH OF ROBERT FLEMING

After only a few days' illness from erysipelas Mr Robert Fleming passed away at his residence on Queen St north, on Saturday morning last. Mr Fleming was a native of Lanark county, and about 45 years ago came to the 4th con Elderslie, where he farmed successfully for a decade and then retired to Paisley. He became one of the well known figures in the citizenship of our village, taking an active interest in affairs of both state and church. He was tax collector for a number of years, was a director of the fall fair, and one of the board of managers of Knox church. He was a Liberal in politics, and well posted in the political matters of our country. He was a wide general reader, and produced at times some verses that were credited to scholarly pens. He was a man of most upright character highly respected and esteemed in the community. He was twice married. His first wife died about 30 years ago. The surviving family by this marriage are three sons and three daughters—William and Robert, in Seattle, Wash; Dr James, in Cloquet, Minn; Mrs Bidlake and Mrs Green, in Seattle, and Mrs Thomson, in New York State. His second wife, who survives him, was Mrs Peter Sinclair. The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon, Rev G C Little, B A, conducting the services.

Harvest all Red Clover Seed

The Ottawa Seed Branch sends out a bulletin advising that prospective supplies of red clover seed are very much reduced, and at best Canadian farmers next year will face an extreme shortage with high prices. Farmers should endeavor yet this autumn to save every bit of the red clover crop that promises to yield good seed.

Zinc in Albemarle

Owing to the present high prices and shortage of zinc, and which will likely prevail for years to come, the huge deposits of this mineral in Albemarle Tp. are again attracting attention. Toronto and Hamilton capitalists see a possibility of working the mines and making big profits, which could not be done before, owing to transportation and smelting difficulties and low prices. W. H. Walker, an expert from the Klondyke, is now in Albemarle mines and samples are being sent to Chicago. Experts sent by London men some time ago said there were millions of dollars in zinc in Albemarle.

CANADA HAS MOST TO LOSE

That Canada is being defended from invasion by the Germans is one of THE ADVOCATE'S convictions, and that their failure to accomplish what they set but to do is the only reason we have not already seen the Kaiser's soldiers come over our borders. The Canadian Courier's "Monocle Man" dilates upon this phase of the war situation as follows:

"Nothing but a dense ignorance of the international situation could possibly justify the feeling which is so common in Canada that we have very much less at stake in the war than have the European Allied nations. . .

"A more wrong-headed and deadly dangerous notion could hardly exist. We stand to lose MORE by a German victory than do any of the other Allied nations, with the possible exceptions of Belgium and Servia. . . A German victory in this war means the dismemberment of the British Empire. . . Now, the dismemberment of the British Empire will not mean, I take it, the German occupation of any part of the British Islands. England, Ireland and Scotland will be much poorer—they will have lost their Empire—but they will be free and self-governed. The greater part of France will be left intact—free, French and self-governed. Italy will come out of the struggle—even if beaten—still Italy, with the exception of some northern provinces. Russia may lose Poland; but Russia will still be Russia.

"Canada, on the other hand, will be wholly taken over, occupied, systematically settled and ruthlessly ruled by Germany. There is no more doubt of this than there is that the sun will rise to-morrow morning. Take a map of the British Empire, colored red, and decide what portions of that red territory a wise German Empire would acquire if she had the choice. What she wants, we all know. She wants a land where her people can live and prosper—where there is an abundance of natural wealth for them to exploit—where they can colonize and create an Overseas Germany. . . Where can she best find that within the limits of the British Empire? Not in India—that is too full already. Both climate and population would prevent. . . .

Egypt . . Germans could not live there the whole year round. South Africa . . . Boer population would not take kindly to Prussian methods. . . Australia . . a large part of it said to be uninhabitable by Europeans. . . And what of Canada? It has a temperate climate, not unlike Germany itself. It is sparsely populated, and so could soon, by systematic German emigration, be turned into a German colony. It is an ideal land for the overseas development of German Imperial ambition. The German could create here a German-speaking "United States" which they would hope to hold in perpetual fief to the Hohenzollern crown. And, judging by the docility of the German-Americans in the present United States, they would have a comparatively easy proposition. The German race lacks that passion for self-government and individualfreedom which dominates and spurs on the English-speaking races.

So there is no doubt that Germany would want Canada—want it more than any other possible spoil of war after the defeat of the Allies. And she commonly takes what she wants—when she can. And who would prevent her from taking Canada, once the British Empire was beaten prostrate and the present gallant Alliance of Free Nations shattered? If our very good neighbors, the Americans, cherish the delusion that for one minute they could prevent it, they are due for a rude awakening—if Germany wins this war." . . .

—Kincardine Reporter: At Port Elgin fair a bevy of pretty young ladies were busy collecting money for the noble Red Cross work. One young lady approached an elderly man with the request, "Won't you please give us something toward helping our soldiers." In an instant tears ran down the man's cheek, and in tones subdued and chastened by deep sorrow, he said, "My dear, I have given a good deal. I have just received word that my son has just died for his country." The scene was touching and pathetic. Sympathy at once came into the face of the fair collector, and she, too, mingled her tears of sorrow with those of Mr. Louis Mouck, of Southampton, whose boy has been reported dead.

COL. W. J. DOUGLAS

Colonel W. J. Douglas, who is in command of the 34th Battalion, C.E.F., is an old Tara boy and the citizens of that village and the Township of Arran feel justly proud of him and the advancement he has made in reaching the position which he now holds. Col. Douglas is a son of Mr. and Mrs. John Douglas, who still reside in Tara. He was born on Jan. 20th, 1872, and when fourteen years of age joined No. 6 Company of 32nd Bruce Battalion as a bugler, and was appointed Bugle-Major. He served in all the non-commissioned offices in the ranks and in 1889 was made Second Lieutenant, in 1892 First Lieutenant. He then attended the Military School in London for the session, taking his first-class certificate, which, with a term at the Riding School in Toronto, qualified him for further promotion. In 1896 he was appointed Captain, in 1901 Junior Major, in 1908 Senior Major and in 1912 Lieutenant-Colonel, when, having been in the service for twenty-six years, he received the Long Service Medal.

When war was declared last year Col. Douglas volunteered for active service, and was sent to Valcartier in command of the 4th Battalion, remaining there five weeks. He was then commissioned to assist in further recruiting, with headquarters at Walkerton. The result was the recruiting of the 34th Battalion, which during the winter trained at the city of Guelph. In May last the Battalion was removed to London, Ont., where strict training was continued, and it is now fit for overseas service.

(Courtesy of Owen Sound Sun)

Col. Douglas possesses the necessary qualities of a good soldier and leader and there is no doubt but his battalion will give a good account of itself when in action.

Col. Douglas was in charge of the soldiers at Paisley Fair, and is personally known to many ADVOCATE readers.

FIGHT OR PAY

We've had a twelve-month now of war, but the end's not yet in sight, and the challenge comes to every man to either pay or fight. It's not the time to hum and haw, or air your hobby whims—it's up to you to see just how the British Tommy wins. It's not the time to count or grin, or to fatten up your purse, while your brothers fight to rid the world from a war-mad ruler's curse. The man who stays at home just now has got to foot the bill, and it's just as well to do the thing with a cheery British will. The man who leaves his home, his kin, w ces behind his all, to put the khaki color on and heed his country's call—he's made a sacrifice that's real, and the man who stays at home has got to bear the burden here without a grouch or groan. It's not a day to count the cost or what the tax will be when the empire's fate hangs on the beam in this fight for liberty. When strong men march away to war, our fathers and our sons, to free a blighted Belgium from the curse wrought by the Huns—we've to play the part of men—it's not the time to shake—we've got the blood of Wellington, of Nelson and of Drake. The call's gone forth to every man, alike to small and great—if you can't go with the fishermen you'll have to cut the bait. So do your duty to-morrow.—Kingston Whig.

ONLY SIXTEEN, GIRL VERY SICK

Tells How She Was Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

New Orleans, La.—"I take pleasure in writing these lines to express my gratitude to you. I am only 16 years old and work in a tobacco factory. I have been a very sick girl but I have improved wonderfully since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am now looking fine and feeling a thousand times better."—Miss AMELIA JAQUILLARD, 2961 Tchoupitoulas St., New Orleans, La.

St. Clair, Pa.—"My mother was alarmed because I was troubled with suppression and had pains in my back and side, and severe headaches. I had pimples on my face, my complexion was sallow, my sleep was disturbed, I had nervous spells, was very tired and had no ambition. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has worked like a charm in my case and has regulated me. I worked in a mill among hundreds of girls and have recommended your medicine to many of them."—Miss ESTELLA MARTINE, 110 Twing St., St. Clair, Pa.

There is nothing that teaches more than experience. Therefore, such letters from girls who have suffered and were restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be a lesson to others. The same remedy is within reach of all.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

MAKES THEM CANADIANS

Somewhere in northeastern Saskatchewan stands a little school-house hidden from view by the thick woods which surround it and threaten to encroach on the small space cleared for the school grounds, says The Public Service Monthly, Regina, Sask. The settlement is an Austrian one and at 8.30 every morning about 25 little foreign-born boys and girls make their way along the trails that converge at the school. At the door they are met by the teacher, a young Ontario man who has spent several summers teaching among foreign-speaking people. He shakes hands with each child and his kind inquiries and remarks indicate that he has an intimate knowledge of the character and home life of each.

All the children then wash their hands and faces and comb their hair, the teacher assisting the little tots, and it is evident that the sweet-smelling soap and clean towels are very much appreciated. At the ringing of a bell the children march to their positions beside their seats and sing all together, "Father, we thank Thee," after which all heads are bowed and "The Lord's Prayer" is reverently recited in English. After this the "flagman" of the day—a lad of nine—takes his place at the door with a large Union Jack and the children file past him and form a circle round the old poplar tree which serves as a flagstaff. Two boys pull the flag up while all heartily sing the first verse of "God Save the King." It is now time to begin the work of the day, and the children march into school with happy hearts to wrestle with the difficulties of the three R's "God Save the King." Yes, and long live such noble-hearted teachers as this young man in the little rural school.

The debris left from coral, after it has been made into articles of jewelry, etc., is crushed, scented and sold as tooth powder at a high price by Indian perfumers.

The Housewife's Corner

Selected Recipes.

Rye Biscuits.—One cup rye flour, one cup bread flour, one-half teaspoonful salt, five teaspoonfuls baking powder, two eggs, well beaten, one cup milk, two tablespoonfuls molasses. Beat thoroughly, fill hot buttered gem pans two-thirds full of the mixture and bake 25 minutes in hot oven.

Sour Cream Cake Filling. — Beat cup cream until stiff; also white of one egg, combine the two, add yolk of eggs, one-half cup powdered sugar. Nuts, cocoanut, cherries, strawberries and peanut butter may be combined with this filling to place between the layers of cake and on top.

Molded Spinach Salad.—Cook spinach early in the day, chop fine, season with salt and pepper, and add one tablespoon melted butter or olive oil to each cup of spinach. Press firmly into small molds and place on ice. Serve on lettuce leaves with French dressing and garnish with slices of hard boiled eggs.

To Cream Butter.—Put the required amount of butter in a bowl and with a wooden spoon work until soft and creamy. Pour off any water or buttermilk which may come from the butter during the process of creaming. Butter should be creamed for spreading on thin slices of sandwich bread, for making fairy butter or hard sauce, or for making a butter cake.

Pea Puree.—Boil a quart of shelled peas in salt water, with a young onion, a few sprigs of parsley and six mint leaves. Rub through a colander and return to the fire, adding half a cupful of good sugar. When it has boiled two minutes stir in a tablespoonful of butter rolled in flour, cook one minute longer and pour upon croutons of fried bread dice in the tureen.

Housewives can economize on butter by the use of beef fat. One way of utilizing the fat is the following: Suet is cut in small pieces, covered with water, allowed to soak for a day, the water being changed once. When drained, it is put in a kettle with one-half cup skim milk to each pound of suet, and cooked slowly until sound of boiling has ceased. When partly cooked the clear fat is drained from the scraps.

Graham Bread.—Four cups graham flour, 3½ cups white flour, 1 tablespoonful molasses, 3 cups tepid water, 1 yeast cake, 1 heaping teaspoonful salt, 2 tablespoonfuls brown sugar, 1½ teaspoonful soda, 2 tablespoonfuls butter, ½ cup milk. Sift flour, sugar, salt together; then rub in the butter. Dissolve soda in the molasses and add it. Then add lukewarm water and yeast dissolved in milk. Knead lightly, cover and rize. Form into two loaves; place in buttered pans and bake for 1¼ hours in moderate oven.

Duchess Pudding. — Three-fourths cup bread crumbs, one-half cup desiccated cocoanut, two eggs, one-half cup sultana raisins, one-half cup sugar, one cup scalded milk, one-fourth teaspoon salt, one teaspoon lemon juice, two cups whipped and sweetened cream. Soak bread crumbs in milk ten minutes. Add cocoanut, sugar, salt, lemon juice and raisins. Beat well, add yolks of eggs slightly beaten and whites of eggs stiffly beaten. Turn into well buttered molds, cover with buttered paper and steam steadily one hour. Serve cold, with whipped cream.

Rice and Cheese Souffle.—Three cups boiled rice, three egg whites, one cup light cream or rich milk, three teaspoons butter, one and one-half cups grated American cheese, cracker crumbs. Butter pudding dish and sprinkle with cracker crumbs. Put rice, which should be warm, in bowl and beat till very light. Add egg whites, whipped stiff, and beat together. Spread one-third rice mixture in pudding dish, cover with one-third cheese, dot with one teaspoon butter and sprinkle with cracker crumbs. Repeat until there are three layers. Pour in cream and bake thirty minutes in moderate oven.

Hints for the Home.

Lemon juice will take off ink stains.

The canary loves nasturtium blossoms.

Never allow a broom to stand on the broom end.

Soiled linen should always be kept in a closed hamper.

Buttermilk will make more delicious hot rolls than plain milk.

Catsup poured over pork while it is roasting improves the flavor wonderfully.

Before peeling onions for pickle pour boiling water over them and they will not make the eyes smart.

To remove fruit stains from linen stretch the fabric over the mouth of a basin and pour boiling water on the stain.

The value of an egg depends upon the richness of its contents rather than its size. The largest eggs often have the smallest yolks. The equality of eggs is decided by the dietary.

Little savings are by no means to be scoffed at if we can have them in abundance. Let us take care of the hundreds and thousands and the millions will take care of themselves.

Patched elbows may easily be avoided by placing a piece of velvet between the lining and the material when the dress is being made. This hint is especially useful to mothers of young children.

To give a rich, creamy flavor to coffee, before adding the water, mix well with the dry coffee as much mustard powder as will cover a five-cent piece and same quantity of salt for every pint of coffee required.

Sprinkle your roast beef with flour before roasting; it keeps in the juice. To brown meat nicely a very little brown sugar rubbed on before cooking is a help; the meat should be basted often. Tainted meat should be washed in a little vinegar before cooking.

When windows are difficult to open or close rub the cords with a little soft soap. Try rubbing a little yellow soap on anything that is rather hard to work on a machine, and it will be found to go much easier. Always keep a piece of soap in the machine drawer; it is very handy for that purpose.

Starched collars often get the studhole broken before they are half worn out. To make them wear longer sew a piece of fine white tape neatly across the hole and work new hole in the tape. If this is done before going to the laundry they will look quite neat and tidy when they come back, and will wear quite a long time.

Every scrap of clean bread not usable in other ways should be dried and then ground in a meat chopper. After this sift it through a strainer somewhat coarser than a flour sifter. Reserve the coarse crumbs remaining in the strainer for meat stuffings or scalloped fish or vegetables. The fine crumbs that pass through may be used for breading chops or oysters or croquettes. This fine crumb meal also may take the place of an equal measure of flour in muffins, griddle cakes, etc. Usually it is not best to use more than one-fourth to one-half of the crumb meal.

HIS EAR AND HIS ART.

The Portrait Painter and Lady Bridgewater.

Anne, Henrietta, Elizabeth, and Mary, the four daughters of the great Duke of Marlborough, were all beautiful women, but Lady Elizabeth, who married the Earl of Bridgewater, was the most beautiful. Courtiers, artists, and poets united in celebrating her loveliness—her "angel's sweetness," as Pope, one of her most ardent admirers, termed it in a letter to his friend, Charles Jervas. Jervas, an Irishman of pleasing address, moderate talent, and exceptional good looks, good luck, and unashamed vanity, had become one of the most popular portrait painters of the time. He had just completed a portrait of Lady Bridgewater, when she died.

Beauty, frail flower that every season fears,
Blooms in thy colors for a thousand years

wrote Pope,—who proved himself thereby both a poor critic and a mistaken prophet,—and he added mournfully:

Alas! how little from the grave we claim!
Thou but preserv'st a face, and I a name!

Jervas's portrait of the lovely Lady Bridgewater is unknown to art today, but, oddly enough, an anecdote survives of one of the sittings that she gave him for the picture. He fancied himself in love with her, and had been rhapsodizing about her beauty; nevertheless, he suddenly and surprisingly qualified his praise by informing the lady that she had not a handsome ear. A trifle piqued, despite her sweetness, "And pray, Mr. Jervas," she inquired, "what is a handsome ear?"

Pushing up the velvet cap that he wore in his studio, and thrusting aside a dandy curl or so which obscured the pleasing prospect, Jervas ingenuously turned his head sideways and displayed his own ear. Whether or no Lady Bridgewater admired the elegance of the ear, she appreciated the humor of the incident, and delighted in relating it.

Jervas was quite as vain of his achievements as of his person. Having once copied a picture by Titian, he looked alternately at the copy and the original, and at last ejaculated, "Poor little Tit, how he would stare!"

In reality, his talent was less than mediocre. Sir Godfrey Kneller, under whom he had studied, hearing that his growing vogue among fashionable folk had encouraged the dashing Irishman to set up a carriage and four, exclaimed:

"Ah, if his horses do not draw better than he does, he will never get to his journey's end!"

STYLE AND BECOMINGNESS COMBINED.

The new Fall dresses are, to say the least, refreshingly delightful. There is no wide a range of choice and the garments are so easy and simple to make that there is little excuse for one's not being well supplied with clothes. Overblouse dresses are fashionable, and one of the smartest is Ladies' Home Journal Pattern No. 8935, which has a four-piece skirt, plaited on the hips. The shirtwaist worn with it has one of the smart convertible collars. Blouse No. 8922 cuts in sizes 32 to 46 inches, bust measure, requiring in size 36 3¼ yards 27-inch material. No. 8935 cuts in sizes 32 to 44 inches, bust measure, requiring 8 yards 36-inch material.

Pattern No. 8937.—Smart and simple lines are combined in Ladies' Home Journal dress pattern No. 8937. The waist opens in front and has a deep yoke and two styles of collars, a small round collar and a large Quaker collar. The one-piece straight-gathered skirt is attached to a two-piece hip yoke. The pattern cuts in sizes 34 to 44 inches, bust measure, requiring in size 36 8¼ yards 27-inch material with ¼ yard 27-inch contrasting material for collar and cuffs.

Patterns, 15 cents each, can be obtained at your local Ladies' Home Journal dealer, or from the Home Pattern Company, 183-A George Street, Toronto, Ontario.

MASTER OR SERVANT?

Do You Manage Your Mind or Does It Manage You?

Despite the difficult look of the word, psychology is a most interesting and intensely fascinating subject. Briefly, it is the science which deals with the extraordinary effect of the mind on the body.

To make matters clearer, here is a simple instance of ordinary psychological effect. You are cycling, and come to a long, steep hill. If you let your eyes dwell on the hill and its length, a feeling of depression and discouragement at once effects you. That is communicated to the body, which instantly tires and loses energy. The hill, sight, mind, muscles—there's the psychological sequence. But if you keep your eyes fixed on the road just ahead, and pedal on, that strange "tired-out" feeling doesn't come. It's quite weird.

Soldiers, tired to the point of exhaustion, will revive and march with energy if the band plays.

Why do we prefer a twisting road for a long walk in preference to one which, if shorter, stretches out like an endless ribbon straight in front of us? To avoid the psychological depression of spirits which the long, straight road gives.

Now you can see that a study of psychological effects is practical and useful.

An interesting example of being psychologically "unsensed" is to be found in the attitude of civilians living in the fighting zone of Northern France. The effect on them has been such that they have lost the "danger sense."

They go about their ordinary occupations apparently careless of shot or shell. It is not bravery, nor is it resignation; their attitude is a psychological one.

A commercial traveller has stated that he always knew when the psychological moment had come for him to snap the order he had been angling for. That is, he noted the swing of a wavering mind, and booked his orders before his customer was "balanced" again.

The best safeguard against being psychologically affected is to maintain your hold over your mind and to keep your feelings in equilibrium. Manage your mind, and don't let it manage you!

The best antidote to ordinary, everyday life psychological effects is to have many interests in life—one main one, and the rest side-lines, as it were. A busy mind keeps its equilibrium, and where stern common-sense reigns, psychological effects have no place.

GENERAL "DUMPIES."

The Nicknames Given to Some Famous Generals.

All good soldiers love a nickname. General French, for example, has at various times been known as "Dumpies," "Soda Water Bottle French," and "Froggy." Sir Ian Hamilton has been called "Hippo" and "Silent Ian." Sir Horace Smith-Dorrien is familiarly known as "Smithy."

But French commanders do not get off scot-free. Napoleon had half a hundred sobriquets. He was called "Nap," and "the little Corporal," "Corporal Violet," "L'Autre," and "Bonny." His opponent, Wellington, was known to fame, of course, as "The Iron Duke," but few people are aware of the fact that he was also, at one time, commonly referred to as "Old Boune," owing to his successful passage of that river.

American soldiers are very apt at re-christening, and the Civil War produced a host of changes of name. Robert E. Lee was "Marse Robert" to his men. G. H. Thomas was "Old Reliable," Philip Kearney "Fighting Phil" and "One-armed Phil," and General Jubal Early "the Bad Old Man."

Most famous of all, of course, was the alias of General Jackson. If you speak nowadays about General Jackson, many people do not know to whom you are referring. But speak of "Stonewall Jackson," and you may be sure that there will be no misunderstanding.—London Answers.

843,000 Married Soldiers.

Lord Devonport, in the British House of Lords, elicited the fact that there were 843,000 married men in the army whose wives and children were receiving separation allowances, the cost of which from the time of mobilization was approximately $126,000,000.

HUMOR IN THE CATECHISM.

Laughable Answers to Some Simple Questions.

There must have been some curious specimens of Scottish humor brought out at the examinations that the ministers of the flock conducted before administering the communion. Thus, a clergyman asked one parishioner, "What kind of man was Adam?"

"Oh, just like ither fouk," he replied.

The minister insisted on a more accurate description. "Weel," said the catechumen, "he was just like Joe Simson, the horse couper."

"How so?" asked the minister.

"Weel, naebody got onything by him, and many lost."

A lad had come for examination previous to receiving his first communion. The pastor, knowing that his young friend was not very profound in his theology, and not wishing to discourage him or keep him from the table unless compelled to do so, began by asking what he thought a safe question. So he took the Old Testament and asked him how many commandments there were. After a little thought the lad put his answer in the form of a supposition, and replied cautiously, "Perhaps a hunner."

The clergyman was vexed, and told him such ignorance was intolerable, and that the youth must come back for another examination when he had learned more.

As he went away he met a friend, and on learning that he, too, was going to the minister for examination, the young fellow asked:

"Weel, what will ye say if the minister speers hoo mony commandments there are?"

"Say! Why, I shall ten, to be sure."

To which the other rejoined with great triumph, "Ten! Try ye him wi' ten! I tried him wi' a hunner, and he wasna satisfied."

A better example of an answer to catechetical examination was offered in the very conclusive reply made by an old body to the minister who proposed the question of the Shorter Catechism, "What are the decrees of God?"

Wisely the old man replied, "Deed sir, He kens that best Himsel'."

Another answer from a little girl was shrewd and reflective. The question was, "Why did the Israelites make a golden calf?" and she replied: "They hadna as muckle siller as wad mak a coo."

ARMY SWORDS VARY.

Different Regiments Have Their Own Type of Weapon.

Swords in the British Army vary to a very great extent, and practically every branch of the service has its own type of weapon. The difference is not so much in the shape of the blade as in that of the hilt.

The sword used by the infantry has a large ornamental guard, bearing the Royal cipher and crown. There is a slot at the top of the guard for the sword knot, really a leather loop ending in a knot to prevent the loss of the sword. The infantry sword is perfectly straight and is sharp on one edge only.

Rifle regiments have a special guard of their own with the rifle badge let into the open-work guard. Very much the same sort of sword, but with a still more open guard, consisting of three curved bars, is used by the Royal Artillery and Army Service Corps. The Royal Engineers have a gilt hilt on their swords, a distinction they prize.

The claymore of the Highland Regiments has a big basket hilt lined with red cloth and blue ribbons. The officers of some Scottish regiments carry a plain cross-hilted sword without a guard.

Until a few years ago the cavalry were armed with sabres. Nowadays, however, they carry swords of a straight rapier pattern. The guard is a large affair, completely shielding the hand.

"Black Watch" Irish?

"The Black Watch are fighting so well in France that even the Germans praise them. Wonderful fighters, the Irish!"

The speaker was W. Bourke Cockran. He continued:

"When I think of the valor of the Black Watch regiment I recall the story of Pat McCann.

"Pat came home one night with a black eye, a broken nose, and a split lip; a front tooth was gone as well.

"'Tim Sullivan done it,' he told his wife, as he began to bathe his wounds in a basin of water.

"'Shame on yet' Bridget chier.' 'A big fellow like you to be licked by a little, hard-drinkin' cockreach like Tim Sullivan! Why, he——'

"'Whist,' said Pat from the basin, softly, 'Don't shpake evil of the dead!'"—New York Sun.

Deliver Me From My Friends.

The gentle German misses no opportunity of letting even his chief Ally know that he, the gentle one, must always come first. It appears that, in exchanging totally disabled prisoners of war, the Russian Government has had the insolence to return more Austrians and Hungarians, who naturally predominate, than Germans. Up rises Berlin, at once, and through the medium of Sweden, demands that Germans must be released first. How perfectly delightful it must be to fight in alliance with such people!

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, OCTOBER 17.

Lesson III. — Elisha Heals Naaman the Syrian. 2 Kings 5. .Golden Text: Exodus 15. 26.

1. The Little Maiden of Israel (Verses 1-4).

Verse 1. But he was a leper—His leprosy, as yet, evidently was not of a malignant kind. Had he been a Jew he would not have been permitted to mingle with his fellows, much less command an army (see Lev., chapters 13 and 14).

2. A little maiden—She must have been so attractive as to suggest to some soldier of the marauding band that she would be a welcome gift to the captain of the host, who in turn would be glad to present her to his wife.

3. The prophet that is in Samaria—Elisha's name had gone abroad so that it was not necessary to mention his name.

4. One went in—Doubtless one of the close friends of Naaman, who in rendering a service to his master Naaman would doubtless serve the king.

II. The Letter of the Syrian King (Verses 5-7).

5. Go now—The king would let no time be lost in putting "the prophet" to the test.

I will send a letter—The relations of the two kings evidently were friendly.

Ten talents of silver—The accompanying gift, which, according to Oriental custom, is always indispensable on such occasions. The silver was worth about $18,750 in our money. Gold had a value of ten times that of silver. The "piece" or "shekle" was worth about ten dollars. The six thousand pieces amounted to about $60,000, making the total gold and silver gift about $80,000. The ten changes of raiment were also very costly. See Gen. 45. 22; 2 Chron. 9. 24.

7. He rent his clothes—The king of Israel seemed to have less faith than the king of Syria. But he may well have trembled, as leprosy was an incurable disease, and hence the request of the Syrian king seemed to be nothing more or less than an attempt to provoke war.

III. The Message of Elisha (Verses 8-10, 14).

8. He sent to the king—The news of the message from the Syrian king was soon abroad and created fear. When Elisha hears of it he assures the king of Israel that God is still potent through his prophets and that, therefore, no cause for alarm exists.

9. Stood at the door of the house of Elisha — This indeed was a kingly suite which came to the unpretentious house of the humble prophet.

10. Seven times—The usual sacred number.

14. According to the saying of the man of God—To wash in the Jordan seemed to be an inconsequential matter. Naaman was looking for "some great thing." He was willing to obey, however, even to the seventh time. For, doubtless, no sign of healing appeared until he had done all that he had been commanded to do.

RESOURCEFUL WINTER MOTH.

The Most Striking Discoveries in Natural History.

England's winter moth is one of the greatest pests with which the fruit growers of that country have to contend. It begins to appear in October, and the female, whose wings are very short and quite unadapted to flight, climbs the trunks of fruit trees and deposits her eggs. These hatch out in the spring, and the caterpillars soon devour the young leaves. Heretofore it has been comparatively easy to combat the ravages of the pest. Seeing that the female is unable to fly, fruit growers place bands of a sticky substance round each tree. The female, in climbing the trunk, comes to the band, and is held fast.

But a wonderful thing has happened, says the Manchester (England) Guardian. In recent years the female moth has been found from time to time above the band, and how she got there was a mystery. Finally, however, an entomological expert unveiled it. He saw the male and female moths together above the band on the tree—the male evidently having just deposited the female.

There appears to be little doubt, adds the Guardian, that in this we have a remarkable adaptation to circumstances. The female cannot fly, but the male can, and it would seem that he had flown to the higher part of the tree, carrying his wife upon his back. This is one of the most striking discoveries in natural history, and is creating much interest among nature students.

National Duty in War

From The Round Table.

II.

Service For All.

London, Eng., Sept. 22.—The first and most obvious step is to introduce a new spirit into the conduct of public affairs. In ordinary times the real ruler of the country is public opinion, slowly evolved under the ceaseless hammer of political controversy, and slowly passed into law through the ponderous machinery of Parliament. The Government of the day is composed of party leaders primarily concerned to carry into effect a certain programme of reform, and the people obey them because they are part of the constitutional machinery rather than because they command any authority in themselves. War introduces us to a new world. Speed and efficiency, secrecy and the withholding of information useful to the enemy, are essential to success. Public opinion is, therefore, dethroned, for it has neither time nor material with which to formulate sound judgments. This imposes upon both Government and people a totally new set of responsibilities. It requires of the Government a new quality of leadership, and of the people a new kind of loyalty and obedience.

The Government for the time being is in the position of dictator. It alone has full knowledge. It is freed from criticism of the usual destructive and embarrassing kind. Unless it takes upon itself to act on its own initiative, unless it proposes, regardless of popularity or outcry, any and every measure which it may consider necessary to win the war, unless it insists on prompt and complete obedience to the national law, it is failing to discharge the functions of a national executive. In time of war the primary duty of the Government is to govern, and this is a responsibility which it can neither escape nor share.

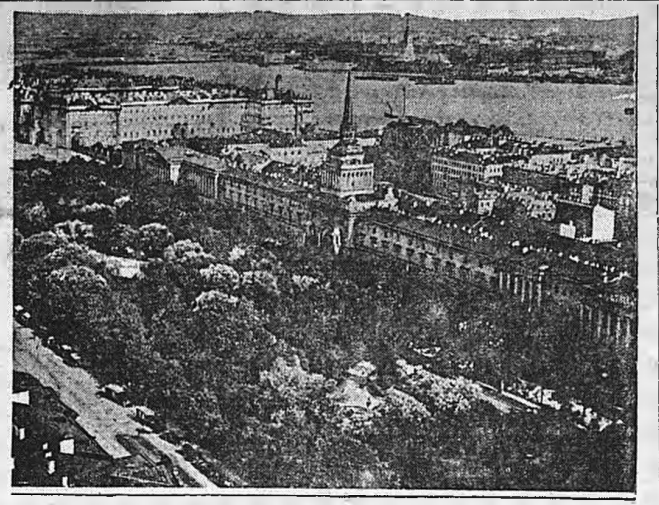
But if the Government is to act as it should the people on their side must give it loyalty and obedience, and that means that they must voluntarily put themselves under orders till the end of the war. No body of men can cooperate for a common purpose if each one is free to work or not as he chooses, and to choose what work he should do. They must elect an executive committee and give it the power to allot the work between all according to a single plan of action and according to their several capacities. Each must then do his appointed task faithfully and punctually. Only so can a machine be made to work, whether it be human or of steel. Only so can an army manoeuvre so as to defeat its enemy. And only so can a nation make war to the utmost of its capacity. If it means business in the war it must freely and of its own accord, submit itself to the irksome restraints of national discipline. Mr. Lloyd George, speaking on July 29th, enunciated this principle with great clearness:—

"We have [he said] but one question to ask ourselves—we of all ranks, of all grades, and all trades. Are we doing enough to secure victory, because victory means life for our country? It means the fate of freedom for ages to come. There is no price which is too great for us to pay that is within our power. There is too much disposition to cling to the amenities of peace. Business as usual, enjoyment as usual, fashions, lockouts, strikes, ca' canny, sprees — all as usual. Wages must go up, profits must also improve, but prices must at all costs be kept down. You will forgive me, I am sure, for speaking quite plainly. No man must be called upon to serve the State unless he wants to; even then he has only to be called upon to do exactly what he would like to do—not what he is fit for, not what he is chosen for, but what he himself would like to do. A man who could render more service by turning out munitions must be allowed to go to the front if he prefers to, and the man who would be better at the front must be allowed to stay at home if he feels more comfortable there. Freedom, after all, implies the right for you to enjoy and for others to defend. Is that freedom?

"War is like a fever, a deadly fever in your veins, and the rules which are applicable in health are utterly insulted to a fever. Restraints which would be irksome, stupid and unnecessary when a man is healthy are essential to save his life in a fever. What is the use of the patient saying: 'I must have meat as usual, drink as usual, in fact more than usual, because I am thirstier than usual. I have a high temperature, so I am more parched than usual; there is a greater strain on my strength, so I really ought to have more than usual. If I want to go out, why should I be confined to that little bed? Freedom means all.' But you will die.' 'Ah!' he says, 'it is more glorious to die a free man than to live in bondage.' Let Britain be beaten and discredited and dishonored, but let no man say that any Briton during the war was ever forced to do anything for his country except that which was pleasing in his own sight. Ah! Victory is not on that road."

If we are to exert our full national strength in the war, we must decide to act much more as if we were an army than as if we were free and independent citizens obedient as in peace only to a law of our own choosing. Both Government and people must learn something of the spirit of the Army itself, where the leaders recognize that they, and they alone, are responsible for policy, and issue orders knowing that they will be obeyed, and the rank and file realize that they cannot stop to discuss the wisdom or otherwise of particular instructions, but that they must obey them promptly, however dangerous or exacting they may be. In this war the larger half of the army is in the mines, the workshops, and the fields at home. If the national effort is to be successful as a whole, it will be because our leaders are resolute and strong and because every section of the people, at home or in the field, carries out that fraction of service which falls to its lot with loyalty and determination to the end.

This raises at once the contentious subject of military service. In order to mobilize the whole available manhood of the country for military purposes, should we resort to compulsory methods of enlistment? To this question there can only be one answer. Whether or not it is required the Government, which knows the facts and the need, alone can decide. But if it judges such a measure necessary, then we have no option but to give it the powers it asks. The function of the community in the matter is not to force the hand of the Government one way or the other, but to make it understand that it is willing to accept any method of enlistment for military service which it considers necessary to win the war.



There has, in the past, been much misunderstanding about national military service of this kind. On the one hand it has been treated as though it involved the permanent introduction of Continental conscription. The measure which may be necessary in order to complete the mobilization of a national army, by far the greater part of which is already voluntarily enlisted, ought not, and indeed cannot, have anything to do with military organization after the war. That is an entirely separate question, and it is one which will be determined not by any Acts we may pass now, but by our success or failure in the war itself. The one thing which would make conscription certain would be the triumph of the Prussian ideals of force and war.

On the other hand, compulsory service has been objected to on the ground that it is inconsistent with the free principles of the British Constitution won in long centuries of struggle. This objection is based on a misapprehension. It implies that what is proposed is that an arbitrary Government should begin to coerce an unwilling people by force. That is impossible in a democratic country. No Government could survive, even in war, which proposed to undo in any way the constitutional work of the last two hundred years and put power back permanently into autocratic hands. National military service involves an act of a totally different kind. It is one which only the people themselves can enact. It can be brought into force only if the people declare by a deliberate Act of Parliament that, as a nation, they authorize the Government to take the necessary steps.

Such a measure, however, though voluntarily accepted by the nation, and imposed by popular consent, does involve two things. It ends temporarily the voluntary system, so far as military service is concerned, and with it the fundamental merit of the system, that it places the responsibility for judging where his duty lies, and for doing it, squarely on the individual—a responsibility usually only exercised in national affairs at the ballot box. It also involves a temporary interference with the normal liberty of action of the citizen. But there are times when it is necessary to sacrifice liberty temporarily in order that it may be preserved in the long run. Every soldier who has enlisted in this war has sacrificed his personal liberty, and subjected himself to a most irksome discipline, in order that a great cause may be served thereby; and in a national crisis it may be necessary for a whole people to do the same. The state itself is not organized on the voluntary principle. People are not given any option about obeying the ordinary law. The State, liberty, civilization itself, would cease to exist unless the law, representing the common judgment about social relations and social rights and duties, were binding on all. And the State cannot fight a war in which its honor and its very existence are at stake unless its citizens are willing to make military service of the State no longer a matter of individual judgment, but a duty binding by law on any whom the Government may select, directly the Government considers it necessary.

Turned in Disgust.

When the dreadnought Lion went into action in the North Sea fight she had a number of workmen on board whom it was impossible to put off before giving chase to the German cruisers. One of these workmen became panic-stricken, and kept getting in the sailors' way while they were preparing for action, imploring them to put him ashore. At last one tar turned in disgust and said to the terrified man:—"I suppose you're one of them blokes at home that are always wondering what the Navy are a-doin' of. Now, we're — well goin' to show you."

Above is a view of Petrograd, the great Capital of Russia, toward which the German armies in Poland are now heading.

WAR AND HYSTERIA

From The Toronto Daily News.

Condemning the readiness of Americans to swallow the hysterically exaggerated tales brought home by tourists regarding the damage done in England by German Zeppelins, The Wall Street Journal says: "What underlies this hysteria? What is it that causes us to take seriously the talk of such men as Hearst, Bryan, Stone, Hoke Smith and the like upon the war and the way to secure peace? The psychological reason can be found in ourselves. After fifty years of peace within our own borders, we have deteriorated in a most vital respect. We attach an exaggerated importance to death. It is not that we over-estimate the sanctity of human life, as our criminal waste by preventable accident shows. It is that we do not realize as our grandfathers did, fighting for principle upon the field of battle, that death is by no means the most important thing in life. There are many worse things in life than death. The peoples at war do not suffer from hysteria. It is our returning tourists who read their own hysteria into conditions upon which they are not fitted to pass an opinion." For plain speaking on American sins we have to go to American newspapers. The better class press of the United States is holding the pacifist and pro-German elements throughout the country pretty well in check.

FRENCH SOLDIER AND WIFE.

This Touching Little Story Comes From Paris.

Mr. Howard Copland, a graduate of Yale University, who has lived many years in Switzerland and is now engaged in the Red Cross service, tells a touching little story about a French soldier in Paris who deliberately bid and let his train go off without him. He was ill with bronchitis, had been able to eat nothing for four days, and was scarcely able to stand.

I came upon him an hour or so afterward, stretched in the straw, says Mr. Copland, the only one in all the great, gloomy train shed. He seemed so weak that I went to one of the doctors and asked if I could not have him for our hospital. The doctor was furious at me for cutting in. He said it was the man's own fault, and he would have to lie there until to-morrow and another train, and ordered me to leave him alone. But I went back when the doctor was gone and talked with him. The man fairly broke down, and, as well as his awful cold and weakness would let him, he explained. He was perfectly crazy to see his wife, and she lived in Paris. Nothing else mattered. Being at last in the same town, he could not get in the train that was to take him away.

I got her address from him, but it was at the other end of Paris. I could not take my ambulance away from its duty to fetch her. So I tried to get a taxi and pay the driver well to fetch her, but there were no taxis to be had. I rushed out in the street and stopped a prosperous-looking touring car passing by, occupied by a rather nice-looking man and woman, and had a good deal of trouble in getting them to listen at first. At last I got them interested and speeding off rapidly to the address, to fetch the wife for one glimpse of the poor chap, and I arranged with a nurse to let her in at the station gates when she came.

The next morning one of the nurses who passed the night in the train shed told me that late in the evening the good people brought the wife and the little baby, and the couple just sobbed and sobbed—half in delight at meeting and half in sorrow at parting—but that the soldier took the train early the next morning much better in health, and able to eat for the first time.

JOURNALISM IN WAR.

Newspapers Published by Soldiers and Sailors.

Despite hard times and the discouragements of censorship, there have recently appeared in the field of British journalism several interesting and audacious newcomers. These are the newspapers published by soldiers in the trenches and sailors at sea. A unique venture is the Maidstone Magazine, with which is incorporated the Pandora Piffle and the Alecto Argus, whose editor and contributors are all officers of the Eighth Submarine Flotilla. It contains a little news and a great deal of jollity and nonsense, including an amusing parody of Lewis Carroll—"Alice In Eighth Flotilla Land."

The undersea journalists are rivaled by those who ride the billows instead of diving under them. Several papers have appeared on different ships of the battle fleet. In one, the North Sea Times, a contributor, "Mr. Clinker Cole from the stokehold," protesting against the uneven distribution of fighting chances, perpetrates a pun that is so bad that it is positively pre-eminent.

"Well, I dunno, but some blokes seem to scoop in all the luck wot's goin'," he complains resentfully. "Every time there's anythink doin', that 'ere menagerie squadring—you know, the Lion and Tiger, and Indomita (bull), whatever kind of animile that may be—always gets a look in and does something, whereas the remainder of us merely takes the part of aujince."

Even the Voice of the Bentine Lancers—motor transport—makes itself heard through a special organ; and more than one enterprising little British sheet, published just behind the trenches "somewhere in France," contains, along with its news and nonsense, advertisements of concerts, private theatricals, wrestling and boxing matches, and football games organized among the men. In all the papers, anecdotes of the lighter side of military life abound. Here are a few of them:

"The skipper of a trawler arrived alongside in his dinghy last week, having a German mine in tow," reports a naval correspondent. "The worthy man's reply to urgent requests not to bring the thing too close was, 'It's all right, sir. I've knocked the 'orns off wiv a boat hook.'"

Two brief dialogues were sent in to compete for the leather medal offered by a journal published in Flanders:

A discontented soldier complains to an orderly officer about the dust and dirt in his rations.

Orderly Officer, severely—Didn't you enlist to fight for your country?

Discontented Soldier—Yes, but I didn't enlist to eat it.

The second dialogue takes place between an infantryman and a motor mechanic:

Infantryman—Which is your sergeant-major—that thin man over there?

Friend, of the Motor Transport—No, the other one; him with the pneumatic stummick.

Always Looking For Trouble.

Some people are of so suspicious a turn of mind that they are always looking for trouble. A stout gentleman with sharp eyes entered a little restaurant, fixing an eagle gaze on the obsequious waiter. "I see you recommend your oysters at a shilling the dozen!" he snapped. "Yes, sir; the best, sir—real natives, sir," bowed the waiter. "Then I think I'll have one." "One dozen, sir?" "No; I said one, and mean one—one oyster!" The waiter's smile vanished, and he eyed the stout gentleman witheringly as he asked—"With or without, sir?" "With or without what?" "Pearls," snapped the waiter with great sarcasm. "Would you like it with pearls or without?"

AMERICA'S CAUSE

From The Toronto Daily News.

Mr. Benjamin A. Gould, an American resident of Toronto, who from the first has ably championed the cause of the Allies with voice and pen, has a letter in The New York Sun in which he outlines the purpose of Germany, and expresses deep dissatisfaction with the action of the United States thus far. He sees in Germany's efforts an attempt to impose on the world a dynastic autocracy, a doctrine of might, a philosophy of force. He sees in it an assault upon the theory of democracy, to the development of which the freer nations have given the best part of two centuries. He sees that every neutral nation is vitally interested in the things for which the Allies are fighting, and will suffer the loss of much of their freedom unless the Allies win.

Mr. Gould insists that Germany has struck at the ideals of the United States, at those things for which the Republic has always stood, at America's sacred traditions, at everything that raises man above the well-fed cattle or the comfortable sheep. This clear-thinking American continues: "Yet against this purpose of Germany against this attack on the soul of the world, against this endeavor to poison not only ourselves but our future generations the Government of the United States has not said one word. None of its protests has been based upon the higher and more commanding necessity of maintaining the orderly evolution of nations. Nothing has been said to show that it would not regard with equanimity the victory of the German cause so long as in achieving it the German methods did not interfere with American lives or properties."

Writing still as an indignant American, Mr. Gould concludes: "The Lusitania and the Arabic call us in clarion tones to abandon our slothful ease and vindicate our liberties; much louder and more resonantly, although perhaps less distinctly, comes the call of mankind and of the generations to come that we make the great sacrifice to secure to them the conditions of freedom of individual development to which they are entitled." Elsewhere in the letter he expresses the hope that his country will soon be in the war against the barbarians. This may not be the general wish of Canadians, but undoubtedly millions of Americans think with Mr. Gould.

Planned to Reciprocate.

"Well, what can I do for you, Sam?" asked Jones as the colored waiter who usually served him at the restaurant entered his office.

"I got a chance to change mah p'sition, boss. Kin yo' say a good word for me? Say I'se honest and sich?"

"I know, of course, that you're a good waiter, Sam, but how do I know you're honest?"

"Well, jes as yo' think I'se hones', Dat'll do."

"All right, Sam, I'll do that."

"Thank you, boss, thank yo' very much. When yo' come ovah to-morrow be sure to sit at mah table. I'll give yo' a sho't check."

Not Positive.

Pete, the hired man, was known for his prodigious appetite. One morning he had eaten his usual breakfast of oatmeal, buckwheat cakes, toast, fried potatoes, ham, eggs, doughnuts, coffee, and the usual trimmings, and had gone to a neighbor's to help with extra work. Pete arrived before the family had risen from the morning meal.

"Well, Pete," hospitably inquired the farmer, "had breakfast yet?"

"Aw," drawled Pete in a wheedling tone, "kinda."

GERMANY SEIZED BRITISH AIR IDEA

IMPROVED AEROPLANE URGED TWO YEARS AGO.

Germans Took Up Idea, and Now Have Triplane With Four Big Engines.

C. G. Grey, editor of The Aeroplane, London, discusses the German and British aeroplane situation as follows:

When the official eye witness was permitted to make known to the people of England the existence of a big German biplane with two fuselages or bodies and two engines the existence of such a machine aroused a considerable amount of interest in this country. Now a report comes from Switzerland that the Germans have actually put in the air a "triplane," which is a machine with three pairs of wings, one above the other, driven by four propellers, each driven by an engine of 200-horsepower, so that, the whole machine has 800 horsepower in it. This shows that the Germans are going one better than the Russian Sikorsky, which has about 400 horsepower in it, consisting of four engines of 100 horsepower each driving a single propeller.

Incidentally triplanes were built and flown successfully in England by A. V. Roe in 1910 or earlier.

Recently I have heard from officers who have returned from France that the Germans have of late put in the air several large biplanes which, although they have only one body apiece, like an ordinary tractor biplane, are driven by two engines each driving a separate propeller.

British Negligent.

Those who have seen them and who are qualified to judge, assume from the speed and climb of the machine that these engines are the ordinary 100 horsepower engines used in most of the German machines.

In connection with this sudden appearance of German aeroplanes with multiple engines and of large size, it is worth while noting that fully two years ago Gen. Henderson, then and now commanding the Royal Flying Corps, stated on more than one occasion at the semi-public meetings of the Aeronautical Society that one type of aeroplane necessary for the full equipment of the Flying Corps was a big machine with more than one engine.

He was particularly insistent on the need for more than one engine, so that if one engine broke down the other one, or others, would be able to keep the machine in the air.

Gen. Henderson's opinion was backed up by various other officers of the Flying Corps, yet in spite of this we have the extraordinary position that after the appearance of the first of these big German aeroplanes, Mr. Tennant, the Under Secretary for War, announces that we have multiple-engined aeroplanes in course of construction.

It seems fairly obvious that the German authorities paid more attention to the opinions of those in Britain who were best qualified to judge of the development of military aeroplanes than did the British authorities.

SEA FIGHTS LONG AGO.

Old Sea Battles Showed High Percentage in Killed and Wounded.

People think of the 15-inch guns on "Lizzie" and ships of her class as the largest naval guns ever made, but British war boats carried bigger guns in the early days of the hardwaru navy. The old Inflexible had four 80-ton guns of 16-inch calibre. Nearly 20 years ago the British navy had 110-ton guns, 16.25 inches in calibre, and these were the most ponderous ship's guns ever made. But the 17-inch navy gun is coming.

That reminds us that the world went very well in the good old days when ships of war thumped away at each other's wooden homides with Long Tom, who was only a round-butted son-of-a-gun of a 32-pounder, and Tom's numerous family, long and short, the smallest member of which heaved a little thing smaller than a tennis ball. Men fought just as merrily in the old days when the whole broadside of a three-decker was only 80 per cent. of the weight of one shell thrown by the "Lizzie" at a Turkish fort on many-hilled Gallipoli. The old wooden ships hauled alongside each other at "close quarters" and the decks were a foot deep in blood when the scuppers choked with the fragments of shattered humanity. The plunging round shot was as capable a projectile, muzzle to muzzle, as the modern shell at 10 miles range. A two-pound shot could cut a man in two, and what shell could accomplish more? The butchery was just as satisfactory proportionately to the number of men on the ships. The records of the old sea battles show that vessels often lost 50 per cent. in killed and wounded, and sometimes as high as 70 per cent. In some fights off shore ships were sunk or burned without as much as a rat escaping. In view of this, modern guns and gunnery have hardly made sea fights any more bloody than in the days of "sticks and strings."

CANTIRE

Threshing and silo filling are now engaging the attention of farmers when the weather will permit. The corn has all to be cut one way and in a great many cases the old reaping hook has to be resorted to on account of the softness of the growth.

McNeill and Mitchell's threshing outfit has been laid off work for a few days having the engine repaired.

A number from here took in the school fair at Vesta last week. Several red tickets were secured by pupils in this section.

George Fletcher, who was engaged with Don Reid for the past summer, has donned the khaki and is now in training with the 71st Batt in London. George hails from old London and the dropping of bombs in his native city was more than his patriotic spirit could endure.

Among the soldier boys on the fair grounds at Paisley was one face that was familiar to a good many from Cantire, that of Andrew Ross, who worked for A D McKay a couple of years ago, and during his sojourn here made many warm friends who were surprised and delighted to have a handshake and a bit crack with this scurdy son of auld Scotia. Andrew hopes to be able to bring home a lock of the Kaiser's whiskers.

Barnes Bowling is working for Donald Reid.

Some from here took in Tara show last Wednesday.

Mrs John A McIntyre and son Maurice visited at the home of her father Mr Maurice Crawford, of Arkwright, last week. We are glad to report that little Maurice is rapidly recovering from his recent severe illness.

The Death of William Russell

After an extended illness Mr Wm Russell, 6th con Bruce, passed away at his home on Saturday evening, Oct 2nd, at the age of 71 years, 4 months and 17 days. Mr Russell was well known and highly respected by all who knew him, and had been a resident of Bruce for about 30 years. He was born near Cobourg in the County of Northumberland. He was a member of the Presbyterian church and in politics a Reformer, also a member of the S O S, McCrimmon Camp, Underwood. He always exercised his affliction with cheerfulness, bearing his cross for his Master's sake. Although he is absent from the family circle, although his chair is vacant we know he has joined the happy throng in Heaven, and what is our loss is his gain. The funeral on Tuesday was conducted by the Rev A MacNab and was largely attended. Interment was made in Stark Vale Cemetery. He is survived by his widow, one son, and three daughters.

IN LOVING MEMORY

Death with his cold and icy hand
Has made another call,
And several are from earth away,
Esteemed and loved by all.

For many years he suffered pain
And then was called away;
To mansions bright his spirit fled
And left its home of clay.

A dear and loving husband,
A father, too, has gone;
And we are left to mourn for him,
Both night and day alone.

Though dark and dismal seems the hour,
Though night excludes the sun,
Help us with resignation, Lord,
To say Thy will be done.

His sorrowing family full of grief,
Doth mourn their father's end,
His widow and his family, too,
Have lost a priceless friend.

But why should we lament for him?
He's only gone before;
In heaven we soon shall meet again
To separate no more.

Prepare us, Lord, for that great change,
That change that's sure to all;
The day, the hour, we do not know
When we may get the call.

HENRY WARING

On Sunday evening Henry Waring, of 12th con. Bruce, passed away in the county hospital at Walkerton, where he had gone a few days before for treatment. He had suffered a stroke of apoplexy about three months ago and had been ailing since. Mr Waring was 56 years of age and was a native of Oxfordshire, England. He came to Canada in 1884 with his brothers Edward and Peter. They lived in Vaughan Tp until 18 years ago when they came to Bruce Tp. They leased farmed for several years on the 14th con, but in 1914 rented Mr Colin McArthur's property on the 12th, which he and his brother Peter have since occupied. The deceased was a very steady going and typical English yeoman, who won the respect of his neighbors and acquaintances in Bruce. He was not married. The remains were brought to the home of his brother Henry, from whence the funeral takes place Wednesday afternoon to Queen Hill cemetery.

Editor of THE ADVOCATE:

SIR—I noticed in your last issue an item stating that the Underwood L.O.L. are going to have a contest in squirrel hunting. We had hoped that we had heard the last of such amusements, but it seems not. These little, harmless animals should not be slaughtered in this wanton way. The squirrel is a native Canadian, to the manor born. He stays with us in winter and summer, in sunshine and storm, always seems lively and happy, and his presence during our long winter helps to brighten the solitude of that season, and we hope our good friends of Underwood will find some other recreation. I know some of these members and I know that they are loyal, patriotic Canadians, determined to maintain a united Empire, and if they wish to have a little shooting if they would go down to London there is a target to shoot at free, and before they get home they might have an excellent opportunity of immortalizing themselves on the field of fame.

Selected Recipes.

Spanish Salad.—Four large cucumbers, one bunch of celery, three large onions, four large tomatoes, two heads of lettuce, three green peppers; chop all separately very fine, then mix together and season with a tablespoonful of vinegar, juice of one lemon and salt and pepper to taste.

Grape Catsup.—To each 5 pints of grapes allow 1 pound of sugar, ½ pint of vinegar, and ½ ounce each of mace, cloves and cinnamon. Boil sugar and vinegar 15 minutes; heat the pulp and skin, let them cool, then rub through a colander and add to the vinegar and sugar, cooking about 15 minutes more. Bottle and seal while hot.

Sweet Grape Pickle.—Allow 4 pounds of sugar and 1 quart of vinegar to 7 pounds of grapes. Tie mixed spices, cloves, cinnamon, mace and all-spice in a thin bag and cook with the syrup. Pour the latter, thick and boiling, on the grapes. Pour off and reheat this syrup and pour again on fruit for 2 successive days; then seal.

Black Bean Soup.—Soak two cups of beans over night. Boil until soft enough to mash through colander; after adding one quart of stock, half cup of tomato catsup, one sliced onion, salt and pepper and pinch of summer savory. When the seasoning is cooked in, cut lemon in three slices and float on top as it is served at the table.

Honey Fruit Cake.—Half cup of sugar, half cup of honey, half cup of sour milk and quarter cup of shortening, two cups of flour, half cup of raisins, half cup of walnut meats, one egg and one teaspoonful of soda. Spices to taste. Do not use too much spice or it will spoil the nice honey flavor. This will keep a long time and is very nice.

Japanese Chocolate Cake.—One-half cup of grated chocolate, 1¼ cups of granulated sugar, half cup of butter, four eggs, 1¾ cups of flour, one teaspoonful of soda, and one cup of sweet milk. Cook half of the milk with the chocolate, until it is as thick as cream; cream butter and sugar, add yolks of eggs beaten light; then add milk, flour and whites of eggs, a little at a time. Last add the chocolate and a teaspoonful of vanilla. Bake in layers.

Orange Custard.—Juice of 10 oranges, 1½ cups of sugar, yolks of 10 eggs, 1 pint of cream. Put the juice and the sugar on to boil in a double boiler; when boiling, skim it carefully and set aside to cool. Beat the yolks of eggs very light and add the juice of oranges; beat the cream also to a froth; then return the orange juice and beaten yolks to the fire and heat slowly, stirring until thick; add cream and pour into cups. Serve cold.

Beef, Tomato Gravy.—Put lump of butter size of walnut in saucepan, and two onions cut fine, brown slightly, stirring with fork; cut up in pieces two pounds of any good lean beef, and brown in more butter if there is not enough fat to the meat. Add water, salt and pepper to taste, and one can of tomatoes strained; boil until tender, adding water to make enough for about six people; thicken with whole wheat flour.

Beef Tamales.—Boil one pound of beef and pour over it some hot fat. Scald thoroughly one quart of meal, adding one teaspoonful of salt and one tablespoonful of lard. Cut off the upper end of the corn shucks and put to boil in cold water. Set aside meat and shucks cool off, chop the beef fine and season to taste with salt and chili powder. Put a thin layer of the meal on the shucks (leaving shuck enough to turn ends and the sides under), then put a small quantity of meat in the centre. Put a few shucks in the bottom of pot to prevent scorching, and pack in the tamales, placing a weight on top. Cover with boiling water, adding one tablespoonful each of lard and chili powder.

Chicken Tamales.—Take two quarts of yellow dried corn, boil in water mixed with a half cup of lime. When well cooked, wash thoroughly and grind the corn on a metate (mill) three times until it is very fine. Boil two medium-sized chickens until quite tender; cool, then cut in small pieces. Mix with the corn enough water in which the chicken has been boiled to make it soft, and add about two cups of lard. Season with a little salt, and knead thoroughly. Remove the seeds from three red chilis, and roast in a moderate oven for a few seconds. Take out and place in tepid water; then grind on metate several times, together with almost a head of garlic. In a stewing pan place some lard (about a tablespoonful); when hot, drop in one onion cut fine and a tablespoonful of flour; let cook a moment, then drop in the chilis. Then cut the chicken, a cupful of seeded raisins, a cupful of stoned olives and salt and pepper to taste; let come to a boil, take away from fire and cool. Have some dry corn leaves well soaked in cold water for several hours. Shake them well and apply a thin layer of the corn dough on a half of each leaf. When the tamales are finished, place them in a large pot with a little boiling water, and boil gently for one hour. Any other meat may be used if desired.

Useful Hints.

To clean doormats, put the mat into a bath of soapy water and scrub with a hard scrubbing brush. Then rinse well in cold water, standing it up to dry.

A few drops of vinegar will keep potatoes white, if put in as soon as they begin to boil, and when boiling fish, a few drops of vinegar hardens the fish and helps to keep it whole.

Every cellar should have many shelves for the convenience of the housekeeper. There should be one or two hanging shelves. By this means the cellar may be kept in order and sanitary.

TRICKS OF THE BRAIN.

Experiments Made During Abnormal Periods.

A French sergeant who was wounded in the head in the Franco-Prussian War of 1870 had abnormal times, which lasted about thirty hours, during which he felt and smelt nothing, although his appetite was normal. During these abnormal periods certain experiments were made with him, and one of these was the writing of an unseen letter, the writer's hand being hidden by a special screen.

Ten sheets of paper were placed under his hand, and he would commence to write. As he wrote the sheets would be removed one by one, until only the signature would appear on the last. That is to say, he would have written one page of writing on ten sheets. Then he would be asked to read his letter from the last sheet, blank with the exception of the signature. This he would do without missing a word, making corrections where necessary, and putting punctuation marks exactly in the right place as measured by the other sheets!

There in the case of a Scottish lawyer, who, having a perplexing case in hand, was observed by his wife to get up one night, go to a writing-desk in the boil-room, sit down, and write for a considerable time. Having carefully folded his document, he then opened his desk, put it away, and came back to bed.

Next morning he related a dream to his wife, in the course of which he had given an excellent expert opinion on the case at issue, no single point of which he could recall. Judge of his surprise when his wife led him to his desk, told him where to look, and directed him to his own dream document, where he found the whole matter clearly written out and the whole case satisfactory!

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, OCTOBER 24.

Lesson IV.—Elisha's Heavenly Defenders, 2 Kings 6. 8-23. Golden Text: Psalm 34. 7.

I. Plotting Against Elisha (Verses 14-17).

Verse 8. The king of Syria—Probably Ben-hadad (see verse 24). Israel was in grave danger at this time. Syria was a powerful and determined foe.

In such and such a place—This expression is like that of "somewhere" now seen in so many reports of a battle after the account thereof has passed the censor's hands.

9. The man of God sent unto the king of Israel—Although the kings were inimical to the prophets, the latter did not forsake their sovereigns. The prophets knew that without God's guidance Israel and her kings could not survive.

10. Not once nor twice—But several times. Elisha's advice was always good. The Syrians claimed it was based on actual knowledge (see verse 12).

11. Which of us is for the king of Israel?—The king of Syria had been frustrated so many times in his plans that he thought he had a traitor in his camp.

21. Nay, my lord, O king; but Elisha—The story of Naaman was known. It was natural for a quick-witted soldier to remember Elisha's cure, and to relate this power of the prophet to the seemingly miraculous way in which every military move of the Syrian king was anticipated and frustrated.

12. Go and see—That is, spy out.

Dothan—Mentioned in the Old Testament only here and in Gen. 37. 17. According to tradition, it was only twelve miles from Samaria, which shows how far into the country of Israel the Syrians had penetrated.

II. The Mountain Full of Horses (Verses 14-17).

14. Horses, and chariots, and a great host: and they came by night—An exceedingly large host to come after one undefended man. To make sure, the night time was chosen.

15. How shall we do?—Not a question for instructions or advice, but a cry of despair.

16. They that are with us—The present tense is used by the prophet. To him the angelic protectors were always apparent.

17. Open his eyes—Elisha's concern for the young man was so great that he was unmindful of the many men waiting to waylay him.

18. Round About Elisha.—Dothan stood on an eminence, and so the summit could be thus encircled, and the barrier against the Syrians appears complete."

Tobacco Growing in France.

The cultivation of tobacco in France is strictly controlled by the national Government. Licenses are issued to communes or districts authorizing the cultivation of tobacco on a specific area. This area is then allotted to certain growers, and from the planting to the gathering of the crop every plant is under the supervision of government officials. As the government is the sole purchaser of the leaf when grown, it thus maintains a practical control over the amount that may be produced in a given year. No bounties are paid for the growing of tobacco, and the price paid is according to the quality of the leaf grown and the requirements of the regie.

FEARS OF GREAT MEN.

"Boba" Was Afraid of Cats, and Peter the Great, Water.

A peculiar sense of fear is associated with many different creatures and things. Lord Roberts, for instance, was afraid of cats. He could not have a cat in the room when he was sitting. On one occasion, when asked out to dinner, his host rather doubted the existence of his fear and concealed a cat in the ottoman in the dining-room. Dinner was announced and served, but the chief guest seemed ill at ease and at last declared his inability to go on eating, as he was sure there was a cat in the room.

A pretended search was made, but disclosed no trace of the animal. The famous soldier persisted in his declaration. Finally the host, realizing that he was causing "Bobs" great discomfort, let the cat "out of the bag" and the ottoman at the same time and apologized for the annoyance caused.

Another famous man who was supersensitive to the presence of cats was Henry III. of France. This monarch disliked them so intensely that he was known to faint at the sight of one. Two other great generals, Marshal Saxe, the French soldier, and the Duke of Schomberg, also held them in horror.

Peter the Great loathed the sight of water. He could scarcely be persuaded to cross a bridge, and if compelled to do so would sit in his carriage, with closed windows, bathed in perspiration. Fear of the River Moser, which flowed through his palace garden, prevented him ever seeing its beauty.

Julius Caesar, to whom the shout of thousands of the enemy were but sweet music, was mortally afraid of the sound of thunder, and always wanted to hide underground whenever a thunderstorm hovered over his army.

SCIENTIFIC SURGERY.

Newly Discovered Curative Principles in the Present War.

The one encouraging feature of the war news that probably will constitute a special memorial in the history of the present conflict is the statistics of the number of wounded who recover if once they are placed in a position to obtain the benefit of surgical measures. Infection prevails in army wounds. Antiseptics have been found unavailing to a great degree except for superficial wounds, but the advance in bacteriological pathology has made some very potent remedies available.

Sir Almroth Wright, to whom modern medicine owes so much for the discovery of remedial reactions within the body to bacterial toxic processes, recently received one of the prizes of the French Academy because of the magnificent effects noted from these newly discovered curative principles in the present war. French surgeons have now followed up his discovery by the invention of a polyvalent serum that is eminently life saving.

The reports from both sides in the western war area seem to indicate that by far the greater part of the wounded not only recover but actually return to service. For some months the ratio of such recoveries to deaths has been nearly as high as eight to two. The statistics of the surgical history of the war is to be one of the most valuable contributions to the story of human experience with infected wounds.

Boiling to death used to be a form of capital punishment in England.

The Fur Trade in Canada

"The fur trade has passed through the most remarkable year in history," said John Hallam, the Toronto fur merchant. "Before the war 65 to 75 per cent. of all the raw fur caught in Canada and the United States was annually exported to Europe; the two largest fur markets of the world being London, England, and Leipsic, Germany. Shortly after the war broke out the export of furs to Germany from the United States was rendered very difficult by the activity of the English fleet, while the decree against 'trading with the enemy' prohibited exports to Germany from Canada and the British Possessions.

"The fall of 1914 found great stocks of raw furs in London, so that there was no demand for American furs from that quarter, while many dealers in the United States and Canada had large stocks of raw furs in their warehouses which they had failed to ship to the London June sales of 1914, owing to the poor outlook for obtaining reasonable prices, which preceded that sale, while the results of the June sale proved that their fears were only too well grounded. Leipsic fur merchants, who previously were very heavy purchasers at the London sales, having large stocks of raw fur on hand, attempted to have the June sales of 1914 postponed, and on refusal of the London merchants to grant their request, a boycott of the members of the Fur Merchants' Association at Leipsic was instituted under a heavy penalty for any member of the Association who purchased raw furs directly or indirectly at the June sales of that year.

"This fact, taken with the large offerings of furs and the lack of purchasers, resulted in a heavy decline in prices compared with the prices realized for the same class of furs one year earlier; the result being that many fur dealers withdrew their stocks from the sales, and the war coming on shortly afterwards, left vast quantities of furs unsold on the London market, while the American dealers were also well stocked up with raw furs. Business in all lines was in a more or less demoralized condition; many men were out of employment, both in the United States and Canada, and the outlook for the sale of manufactured furs in America was far from promising, so that the raw fur dealers were at a loss to know whether they would be able to find a market for the furs they purchased or not."

"Owing to these facts, some raw fur dealers withdrew from the market for the time being, while others readjusted their prices as far as possible to meet the new unprecedented conditions, and purchased such furs as were offered them for sale. Manufacturers of fur garments and retailers bought only on a hand-to-mouth basis, fearing to lay in their usual stocks, owing to the unsettled conditions then prevailing. Articles appeared in the papers advising trappers not to set out their traps, stating that there would be no market for their raw furs, all of which naturally tended to demoralize business of all kinds, and especially the fur trade.

"The ruling prices were lower than they had been for several years, but were decidedly higher than they were some fifteen or twenty years ago. This gave the general public an opportunity to purchase manufactured furs at very reasonable prices, and had a stimulating effect on the retail trade, as the public were thus enabled to purchase American-caught furs at prices they had formerly been forced to pay for inferior imported furs, thus opening a new avenue for the sale of American furs, which aided the dealer in disposing of his stocks, and the trapper in securing reasonable prices for his catch. This was especially noticeable in Canada, as the war tax of 7½ per cent. placed on all furs imported into Canada made it an object for Canadian manufacturers to purchase Canadian-caught furs with which to supply the Canadian trade.

"The result of the increased consumption of American-caught furs in the United States and Canada has tended to use up the accumulated stocks that were in the hands of the dealers at the time the war broke out. Business has assumed a more settled condition, manufacturers have bought heavily and retailers have bought their usual stocks of manufactured furs, so that the present raw furs season opens with no great accumulation in the hands of the dealers, and the market is practically cleared ready for the new-caught skins to be absorbed in the ordinary course of trade.

"Under these conditions we can only look forward to a prosperous season for all concerned. The consumer will purchase American-caught furs at comparatively low prices, this stimulates the demand of the retailer from the manufacturer, the manufacturer from the raw fur dealer, and the raw fur dealer from the trapper, consequently we expect that the prices which will prevail during the coming raw fur season will be fully as high on all articles, and considerably higher on some articles, than were paid during the past year, and while they may not be as high as the prices that prevailed for several years when values of raw furs were inflated, yet they will be sufficiently high to amply recompense the trapper for his efforts in securing the valuable fur bearing animals, and the larger catch which he will undoubtedly have, will materially assist in increasing the size of the trapper's bank account."

JAPANESE DOGS BEHAVE.

Coming Coronation of Emperor Causing Reform Among Canines.

Indicative of the minute care taken by the Japanese to prevent untoward happenings on the occasion of the coronation next November, it may be noted that the police authorities have decided to kill all vicious and stray dogs in the prefectures through which his Majesty will travel during the ceremonies. All the dogs in Japan are, therefore, on their good behavior and reformed and repentent dogs are reported daily in great numbers. The police have already killed 374 irreclaimable dogs in Kyoto—the bad boys of Kyoto.

The Imperial Household Department has already procured from the Sanryusha at Okazaki in Aichi prefecture three kan of the best raw silk, with which the ceremonial dress of the Emperor at the coronation this fall will be woven. At the Sanryusha silk-worm weaving room, the selected silk worms were reared with utmost care. The raw silk was reeled and was sent recently to the Imperial Household Department through the Aichi Prefectural Office. On Sunday the cleaning work was started in the reel room. Forty girls wearing white working clothes were employed. The working girls began their work in the morning at 6 o'clock and finished at 4 o'clock.

LEGALLY AN OUTLAW.

Old Sentence Revived in Case of Man Who Ran Away.

A curious ancient penalty was revived in a sentence passed on an accused person in Scotland. John McArthur, a Glasgow dealer, did not appear with two other defendants, who were accused of stealing stolen jewelry valued at over $10,000. The other men surrendered to their bail at the Edinburgh High Court and were found not guilty and discharged.

McArthur did not appear, having fled from the jurisdiction of the court, and a sentence of outlawry was pronounced by the Judge. This means that he is put outside the protection of the law, is banished from Scotland, and any goods or land he may have are forfeited. He can, however, at any time submit to the jurisdiction of the law that he has defied.

WORRIES WHICH WORKED.

How Fortunes Were Made Through Accidents.

Trivial mishaps have often led to fortune; good has often come out of seeming evil; joy out of sorrow. Alfred Nobel was assisting in his father's factory at Stockholm in the manufacture of nitro-glycerine. One day he found that a cask of the stuff had leaked badly, and its contents got mixed with the infusorial sand used in packing. It suggested to him the method of preparing a safe and manageable explosive, and the result was dynamite, says London Answers.

It was the burning of a starch factory on the banks of the Liffey that first revealed the adhesive qualities of scorched starch with water, and introduced to the world a new and cheap gum.

A Limerick tobacconist believed himself to be ruined by a fire that destroyed his shop. Several tins of snuff had been in the fire, subjected to great heat. Curiosity prompted him to open one, and his fortune was made. That scorched snuff ousted every other brand!

Visitors to the "pictures" will be familiar with the method which used to be in vogue in Good King George's day, of sprinkling wet ink with sand from a sort of pepper-box. Well, one day some ordinary paper was being made, when a workman forgot the size which ought to have been mixed with it to give it surface. The whole batch was ruined; but shortly afterwards the paper-maker wanted to write a note, and, thinking it good enough for the purpose, used a piece of the sizeless paper. To his great annoyance the ink ran all over.

Suddenly the idea of its utility flashed across his mind. He at once started to advertise his new blotting-paper, and the demand was so great that the mill ceased making ordinary paper, and concentrated on blotting-paper.

The inventor of the automatic system of signalling was, when a boy, an attendant at a spirit-rapping seance. He found that the table stood on two brass rails running across the stage, and at once suspected electricity.

Taking a piece of insulated wire, the ends of which were open, he laid it across the two brass rails. The spirit ceased to rap! Years after, when a signal engineer, this early experiment in track-circuiting came to his mind. It was then that he made use of the principle for the protection of trains.

National Duty in War

From The Round Table.

III.

London, Eng., Sept. 2.—The principle that we should act under orders to the end of the war applies no less to the industrial than the military sphere. It applies to every department of national supply—to the agriculturist, to the transport worker, to the skilled factory hand, to the employer and his machines, to casual labor. The activities of 45,000,000 human beings can be co-ordinated and directed to a single end only through the impalpable cohesion which willing and loyal service gives. Discipline in essence is prompt and exact obedience to orders. And in war time the nation, if it is to do its work properly, must, no less than the army, put itself under discipline.

But on the industrial plane it cannot be done by law. The Government cannot give orders to every individual as to how he should employ himself to the end of the war. National service in industry must be introduced primarily by public opinion. The national unity of Germany or France, their efficiency and spirit, their subordination of all questions of person or class to the supreme business of war, is not due to statutes or to fear of punishment, but to a self-imposed national discipline, directed and encouraged by Government, but in its essence of popular origin. And in this country unity and efficiency will only come through national discipline similarly self-imposed. It is not until every worker, every employer, every farmer, resolves to do whatever will serve his country best in this the day of its trial, whatever it may cost, that we shall get efficient organization and inner peace.

This spirit is specially difficult to introduce in the industrial sphere. Unfortunately the war has caught the British Isles at the crisis of the struggle between capital and labor. Industry itself has become a sort of trench warfare in which positions are won or retained only after long and desperate fighting. In consequence, to a large proportion of the population duty to the State has been almost forgotten in the more pressing claims of duty to their class. Suddenly another and more real war has intervened, with an imperative demand on both sides to abandon their strife and bend all their energies to increasing the output of supplies. This they have so far been unable to do. The ill-feeling between employers and labor is not abated; neither side will make much advance towards compromise, and, in consequence, strikes still occur, and the output of supplies is grievously delayed. In the industrial sphere there is as yet no united front to the foe. It is manifestly shared by both sides. And fundamentally the reason is the same. The war is not to be allowed to endanger the positions they occupy on the industrial battle-ground. The rights of property are not to be seriously infringed, the rights of labor are not to be seriously impaired even during the war. Neither side, in fact, is willing to make the sacrifices which must inevitably be made if they are one and all to do their own full duty in the war.

It is obviously difficult for two armies to suspend their quarrel and to substitute spontaneous and energetic co-operation for competition and suspicion. It is, therefore, the business of the State to lay down the terms of a temporary settlement which, by guaranteeing to each side as far as possible the essentials of their own positions after the war, will justify it in calling upon both to combine to increase the output of munitions to the utmost possible extent till victory is won. The principles of the settlement are not difficult to see. On the one hand, all special war profits, of whatever kind—that is, profits over and above the average of the pre-war rate—must be diverted from private pockets into the coffers of the State, so that every man should feel that if he is working harder, he is working for the State and not for private gain. On the other hand, the right to strike and regulations restricting output must be abandoned, so that the output can be increased to the maximum which efficient organization and hard work can give.

No settlement, however safeguarded, can be expected to restore pre-war conditions when the war is over. The war itself is changing them permanently. The totally new economic world in which we shall soon live will change them still more. With the best will in the world things can never again be as they have been. But even if they could, the risk that both sides will incur of losing something of what they have fought for all these years, by absolutely suspending their own industrial battle for the war, is precisely the sacrifice which they ought to make for the sake of their fellows and their Allies and the cause for which we stand. So long as we look at the problem from the point of view of our own interests we shall never do our duty. Those who have gone to the front have offered their all. It is for those who are left behind to offer no less. It is not until we approach the industrial problem in the spirit that we will do whatever will most help to win the war, that difficulties will vanish and the straight and narrow road which leads to victory will become plain.

There is a third sphere in which we have already to go on national service. Victory in this war will depend not only on men and munitions. It will, as Napoleon found, depend even more on money. We have hardly begun to recognize this truth in practice. We are spending more than the other nations and getting less. In another article the problem of economy is examined in greater detail. Its conclusion amounts to this, that we cannot assume that we shall be able to last out the enemy unless we get far more for our expenditure than we do to-day, and unless we effect ruthless economies in our private expenditure, especially on imported supplies.

The first aspect of the problem is mainly for the Government. They alone can decide where economies can be effected in our public expenditure. Not the smallest cause of waste is the prevailing idea that everybody and every locality has a right to make as much profit as they can out of the tremendous outlay of public money that is now going on. That idea is quite inconsistent with any true principle of national service. If national service were carried into universal effect everybody would serve the country for a living wage according to their own standard of living, till the end of the war. But while any such drastic revolution as that is out of place in the middle of war, some steps can be taken towards it. Large savings, at any rate, can be made at the expense, not of the comforts of the soldier, but of the profits of the stay-at-homes, by a ruthless cutting down of billeting rates and contract prices, and by careful economy of supplies everywhere.

The second aspect of the financial problem is for ourselves. The Government has already declared that drastic personal economy is necessary partly so that the savings effected may be invested in the war loan, partly so that, by reducing the quantity of foreign imports, we may lessen also the bill we have to pay abroad. It is for us now to carry these orders out. If we are all to do our share to help to win the war, we must set about economizing in every possible way ourselves. In this all have a part to play. No economy is too small, whether it be in food, material like petrol and tires, or luxuries, for it not to affect the balance of trade. And no sum withheld from expenditure on some private pleasure is too small to invest in the national loan. In the aggregate the effect will be immense, and our conduct for the rest of the war may determine whether we are able to last out the end which is decisive. Months ago the Germans began to work for victory in this way. We have now to make our first time by still greater resolution in the task.

Finally, in order to enforce economy, as well as to ease the industrial position, drastic new taxation may be necessary. This may mean—it probably ought to mean—the sweeping of all special war profits over and above the average pre-war rates into the coffers of the state, a tax on wages, a still higher income-tax, and new duties on such articles as tea and tobacco imported from abroad. Of the actual measures necessary and the complementary steps which may be needed to deal with the unemployment drastic economy may cause, the Government must judge. It is for us to accept the burden cheerfully and without complaint.

A YANKEE ON THE BRITISH.

Says That Average Britisher Is a Clean Fighter.

The following letter, which is quoted in the London Spectator, is by a young American fighting with the Allies:—

"I've been mixed up with the British soldiers for some time now," he says, "and I tell you there is not a cleaner fighter nor better gentleman in the world than the average Britisher. They know how to win and they know how to lose. They never forget they are gentlemen no matter what they do, and they have the courage that knows no ending. Napoleon said—'The British nation is a race of lions led by asses,' and he was quite right. They are thought to be snobs, but I admire them. I have seen the 'snobs' out in France, and braver men nor truer gentlemen never lived. They share the hardships with the men, and never ask them to do what they wouldn't do themselves. The men worship them, and will follow them anywhere. I have yet to witness a German officer leading his men in a charge. They follow after. But the British officer always leads his men, and so does the French.

"For an example of the average British officer let me tell you of my company commander, Lieut. Scott. He is only a boy of twenty, and a direct descendant of Sir Walter Scott. He was an only son of one of the proudest families in Scotland. When there was any risky work to be done he would not shift it off on to a sergeant or corporal, but would ask for volunteers, and when he had those he wanted would lead himself. His unflinching devotion to what he considered his duty and quiet courage in the performance of that duty was something beautiful to witness."

RUSSIAN REINFORCEMENTS ON THEIR WAY TO THWART ENVELOPING PLANS OF THE GERMANS

In the engagements around Vilna, the Russian city taken by the Germans, huge bodies of German cavalry endeavored to cut off the Russian armies retreating from the city in the vicinity of Dvinsk, which is now the center of attack by the Teutonic forces. Countermanding the German plan, the Russians sent their cavalry with all haste to the vicinity of Dvinsk to defeat the plan of the Teutons.

WEIRD VISITORS AT THE WAR OFFICE

HARD MATTER TO INTERVIEW LORD KITCHENER.

The Strange Callers Who Try to See Members of the Cabinet.

You have hard work indeed to get into the War Office nowadays when you wish to see anybody important there. For a host of guards of one sort of another have to be satisfied, passed, and propitiated ere you come to the man you want to see. Nor is this provision unnecessary, for every day sees an eccentric man or woman trying to get an interview with some notability in the various Government offices about Whitehall, says a writer in London Answers.

"I want to see Lord Kitchener, that's what I want!" exclaimed a recent visitor to the War Office indignantly, when he was stopped by a burly policeman, and asked to show his pass at the Whitehall Avenue entrance. "No, I haven't any pass. But I've invented something which will drive all the Germans out of Belgium in a fortnight! What is it? Never you mind what it is, young man!" went on the irate visitor. "Just take me to Kitchener's room, that's all! What? I can't see him? And this is called a free country! Well, then, I'll just go along to Buckingham Palace and see King George, and tell him about it, that's what I'll do!"

Saved by Tact.

Whether the angry man went to the Palace or not the smiling policeman never learned. But it is certain that his chance of interviewing Lord Kitchener without some very special appointment made long beforehand was about as likely as his seeing in the flesh the present Shah of Persia!

Another crank did actually get into the Home Office some few weeks ago, though how yet remains a mystery. He must have smuggled himself in somehow amongst a number of clerks, etc., about nine a.m., when there was quite a little crowd entering. Be that as it may, a clerk on arriving found this stranger in his room, and was blandly told by the visitor that he was waiting to be taken to Mr. McKenna, with whom he had an appointment. Luckily, the young official quickly grasped the fact that this man in his room was at least "a bit off" it, if not altogether a lunatic, for he began to say such strange things as to rouse suspicions.

So the clerk did a very smart thing. Instead of raising the poor fellow's temper by refusing to let him see the then Home Secretary, the clerk quite calmly asked the man to follow him, and led by devious stairs and corridors until he found himself shown through a side door into the street.

What the demented one said when that happened the clever clerk did not wait to hear. But certainly the eccentric visitor did not pass the keen doorkeepers again that day.

Only if you have a letter on you, showing the actual appointment made, do you get admission to the room of a Minister at the House of Commons to-day. When I recently had to pay a visit to Dr. Macnamara, of the Admiralty, in his room at the House, the policeman on duty there, after being satisfied on seeing my credentials, told me about the trouble they had with unauthorized visitors almost every week.

Did England Want to Win?

"One came a month or so back," he said, "who told us he must see Sir Edward Grey. It was imperative, as he could put 'um up to a thing or two which would just about make all America immediately send thousands of men to help the Allies at the Front! When we told the man he had better write the Secretary for Foreign Affairs concerning it he got very much annoyed, and finally wanted to know whether England wished to win this war or not.

"Then he tried a new tack by vehemently declaring that I was preventing England from winning it by my stopping him there; and, finally, I had to summon another officer to remove him altogether outside Palace Yard. Even when this had been done he stood beyond the railings shaking his fist at me for several minutes ere he finally departed."

"Beg pardon, can you tell me if this is Mr. Lloyd George's house, sir?" said a lady to me as I drew near to the Minister's residence, in Downing Street the other day. I happened to be going myself to see Mrs. Lloyd George on important business.

"Yes, it is, madam," said I, as we came to the door.

Then her eyes opened wide as she saw me ring the bell.

"Oh, are you going to see Mr. Lloyd George?" asked she. I nodded.

"May I come in with you? I very much desire to tell him something about the drink question I think he ought to know, as it is extremely urgent."

She Lost Her Temper.

I had to explain that it was quite impossible for me to ask her in with me; that she must ring and ask for an interview on her own account. Whereupon she got very angry, called me many unkind names, and, as the maid admitted me into No. 11, this violent woman was told by a policeman who had just sauntered up that if she didn't quickly clear out of Downing Street, unless she kept quiet, she would have to be forcibly removed elsewhere.

It is rare indeed that any unauthorized person does actually get inside the sacred place, whether house or Government office, into the presence of a Cabinet Minister in this way. But it has been done.

I recollect one of the former secretaries of a Prime Minister telling me how he, one noon, with amazement, found a perfect stranger in a room close by where the Cabinet was holding a meeting at No. 10 Downing Street.

The stranger quite politely explained that he was an American visiting London, who had thought he should like to see the famous house, had found the door open, strolled in to ask someone if he might look round, and had walked from room to room, never meeting a servant till he had come across this secretary. But, of course, that curious chance could scarcely happen once in half a century at ordinary times, let alone when a Cabinet meeting was in progress, so thorough are the precautions which are taken against unofficial intrusions.

Government Factories in Japan.

The British commercial attache at Yokohama reports that the Japanese government has recently appointed a commission selected from the high officials of state, to consider the question of transferring to private ownership, the various government factories. The factories include the wool, army clothing, steel, wood and printing works.

MERITS OF CERTAIN WATERS.

Baths That Have Made Men and Cities Famous.

The act of bathing has usually been looked upon as merely prosaic and necessary, but not a few baths have attained to fame either because of some incident which took place while the bather was engaged in the act of ablution or from some other circumstance connected with it; while there have been some famous baths in fiction, such as the one which Alfred Jingle took after his match with Sir Thomas Blazo, after which he "had a bath and went to dinner." Then there was the bath taken by Arthur Pendennis, to which he treated himself after he had "met men of a low set," and which he had scented in order to make it more efficacious.

Bathing has been the custom among primitive peoples from the earliest times, and indeed the animals recognize the necessity of keeping their skins healthy by cleansing them constantly in some way. It was said that the merits of the Bath springs were first discovered by Prince Bladud, who suffered from a skin disease, by watching a sick pig wallowing in the mud.

Sick animals, too, led the traveller to discover the merits of certain waters in Africa for curing fever, for the banks of rivers bordered by certain shrubs become impregnated with their juices; the extreme value of quinine as a remedy for malaria was first discovered, it is said, by watching the recovery of several animals who drank of the waters which flower past the bushes.

Baths among some nations of the East have come to be recognized as curing mental ailments, and the pilgrim who sought everywhere for the "River of the Arrow" firmly believed that, when he had bathed in it, all his sins would be washed away. Bathing in the Ganges is credited with the same virtue by the Hindus, while visitors to the Pool of Siloam in Biblical days believed that no ailment could survive washing in its waters. Many holy wells are credited with still stranger virtues, since those who plunge into them are said to obtain their wishes if the proper forms are observed. Stories have been woven round certain bathers which gild their act of bathing with romance. The bath taken by Archimedes, owing to overfilling by a servant, led to the discovery of specific gravity. The absent-minded philosopher, leaving the bath abruptly, rushed through the streets of Syracuse shouting "Eureka!"

THE DUAL EMPIRE.

Unless Germany Wins the Empire Is Doomed.

There is no doubt that the profoundest discontent with the war pervades the high mixture of people known as the "Dual Empire," and unless Germany wins a sweeping victory the Empire is doomed. The Empire is made up of probably two score of different nationalities, each selfishly straining to get the advantage of the other and tugging at the leash which holds them together. On top of this is the decadent old aristocracy, with the senile Emperor at the head. The "idiot Archdukes" of Austria has long been a byword in Europe. They have only succeeded in maintaining their ascendancy by playing off one race and one religion against another. Now when they are using the sons of the people as mere "kannonenfuter"—cannon fodder—the anger and rebellion of the people grow hotter every day.

One bricklayer can lay about 1,500 or 1,600 bricks in a day of ten hours, leaving the joints rough.

THE MARVELS OF SHELL MAKING

FACTS CONCERNING THE POINTS OF THE PROJECTILES.

Everybody knows that the modern shell is one of the most diabolical of man's inventions; but how many of us realize that it is also one of the most delicate and complicated?

Recently, some firms holding contracts for making high-explosive shell took upon themselves to "correct" a detail a detail in the specification, and, as a result, a certain thread was "improved." They will never do anything of the kind again, because all their work was rejected. The apparent absurdity—it is, in fact, an absolute absurdity, from an engineering point of view—is designed of set purpose, says London Answers.

With a Soft Nose.

There is a somewhat similar anomaly in the big shell for penetrating armor plating, which was introduced in consequence of an accident. One day a test shell was fired at a piece of armor-plating from the soft side, and the projectile went clean through it, and exploded after impact; whereas, a similar shell fired against the front—the hardened and tempered side—shattered, and left an indentation of only a few inches.

This singular incident set somebody thinking, and, in consequence, the high-explosive armor-piercing shell is now given a soft nose. To the hard point is attached a cap of soft metal, with which addition it will go through the toughest piece of armor-plate. What happens on impact seems to be this: The cap spreads, holding the point, and so enabling it—remember that the shell is revolving rapidly—to force its way unbroken through the hard face of the plate by a sort of boring action.

No less curious is another fact concerning the points of such projectiles. After the heads have been worked, the shells are left for weeks before they undergo the next stage, because, strong as they look, they are liable to snap.

Steel is Easily "Tired."

Why? Think of a razor. Constant stropping twists the grain, with the result that the steel gets "tired," and will not yield a keen edge. But if you put the thing away for a few weeks the grain will return to its normal state, and you can get a satisfactory shave. In a similar way, the grain of the steel is affected by working, though, of course, to a much greater extent, and till it is "set," the makers must go cautiously.

Steel shows a like eccentricity in the making of test-gauges. Some of the measurements of shells are very fine, and the instruments employed are so delicate that they have to be used quickly, lest the heat of the hand causes the metal to expand.

Now, when a groove is cut in a piece of steel which is to be used as a test-gauge, the work is laid aside for weeks, perhaps months. Why not finish it at once? Because the groove, though dead true when cut out, may be otherwise in a short time, even though it has been absolutely untouched.

Constantly Inspected.

As a concrete proof of the elaborate nature of projectile making, take the case of the shrapnel shell. The steel portion undergoes about a score of operations, and the brass cartridge-case attached to the base requires about sixteen, counting from the disc of sheet brass to the finished article. Then there is the fuse, the delicacy of the work in which resembles watch-making.

Altogether, the shell is subjected to about forty inspections, and may be rejected at any stage.

After a shell has survived this ordeal it ought to be, one would think, perfect; but a test shell is taken from every 120, and actually fired from a gun into a bank of sand. It is then again examined, and if the contour about the powder is expanded, away goes the whole batch, because if they were fired the grooving might be torn out of the gun.

Perhaps the most striking illustration of the minute care exercised in projectile making is that every shell is weighed over and over again. If you produce an eighteen-poundes high-explosive shell, it must be only a few drachms over or under its normal weight; otherwise it is rejected.

A Crack Rifle Shot.

A good story is told of a certain colonel in connection with an inspection of a crack rifle corps which he commanded. The inspection passed off satisfactorily; there were no complaints, and the regiment was evidently in good order. "But," said the inspecting general, "I am bound to tell you, colonel, that rumors have reached me of gambling being carried on extensively among your officers." "That may have been the case, sir," said the colonel, "some months ago but I can assure you that nothing of the kind is in vogue now, because I've won all the ready money in the regiment, and I would not allow an gambling on credit."

—Earl Grey is being condemned because he failed to outdo the Germans in the Balkan diplomatic field. If the German methods of diplomacy are as unprincipled as their military system is despotic and cruel, it would not be creditable for any representative of a civilized nation to beat them at the game.

Shortens the Bar-room Day

The 1400 licensed liquor bars of Ontario will have their selling hours considerably curtailed after Nov. 1st, the Provincial Government having decided to put on a new regulation for closing them up at eight o'clock every evening except Saturday, when they close at seven as heretofore, while the war lasts. This is a commendable step, and one that will help to liberate the people of this province from the thralldom of tyrannical booze. It was formulated specially for the object of effecting a saving of expense, as the daily consumption of liquor as a beverage is something that should be modified during the present critical times, also as a means of removing temptation from the soldiers who are preparing to take part in the war of the Empire. So far as the general public is concerned, the change should certainly make a marked reduction in the quantity of liquors sold, as between eight and ten o'clock in the evening is the heaviest drinking period of the whole day, when most of the moderate drinkers can find time to line up before the polished rail or sit down quietly to enjoy a social glass with convivial friends and acquaintances. The hotel-keepers are protesting loudly and unanimously against such a reduction in the selling hours. So far as the soldier's temptation is concerned, the shorter day should also be an improvement, but it will really affect him less than the workingman, the warrior's period of leisure not being confined to after supper, as is the case of those employed in day labor of any kind. The regulation does not satisfy the temperance party, as they desired more restrictive measures, and an active campaign is being launched for total prohibition.

—Presbyterians are about to vote on church union. After having the question discussed and deliberated upon in the courts of the denomination for several years, the people are now to mark their ballots for or against amalgamating with the Methodists and Congregationalists and forming a new United Church of Canada. At a time when war, the greatest waster, is ravaging the old world and forcing the inhabitants of almost the whole earth to economies of all kinds, it seems more than a mere coincidence that three of the large sections of our church people should be called upon to say whether certain division lines should not be abolished and forces united. The greatest international alliance that has ever existed on earth is that of the nations engaged in fighting against the Teutonic attempt to destroy civilization. Had each nation involved been determined to carry on its own war in its own way against the highly organized Germanic hosts, what would be the condition of Europe to-day? Under the heel of Prussian militarism and Hun savagery! No question about it. Nations that once sprang to battle against each other upon the slightest provocation are to-day supporting each other against a common enemy to the extent of their whole national resources. This is the get-together age in national and commercial affairs, and may be also in the religious field of operations. An alliance of the different wings of the forces of righteousness would be quite in order. The church union movement is a great one, approved by the average layman for many plain, practical reasons. If union is not desirable in the interests of spiritual progress then why not dissolve those unions that have afread been consummated in the different branches of some of the strongest denominations—the Presbyterians and Methodists for example. Taking a local view of the question, there does not seem to be any more need of four different churches in Paisley than for four council boards and town halls, four schools and school boards, four public libraries, or four railway stations. Our civic business or educational system could not be conducted to any greater advantage by a multiplicity of officials and institutions, nor railway traffic increased by planting depots at different places on our streets, notwithstanding the difference of opinion as to how all such business should be done. The spiritual and moral interests of the community would be as well maintained and advanced by a single organization as by four.

Dr Black Leaving Town

That Dr Black had bought a practice near Hamilton and was about to leave Paisley, has been rumor for some time past, but not until this week was there any definite intimation of the change. For twenty-three years Dr Black has successfully followed his profession in Paisley and taken a prominent part in the social, civic and political life of the community. The removal of the Dr and his estimable family will be a distinct loss to Paisley and will leave vacancies in the ranks of our citizenship that will take time to replace.

No. 1 Wheat, Frozen Potatoes

Mrs. D. M. Hay, who recently went out to Rockhaven, Sask., writes an interesting letter to Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Hay. After making the trip the writer says she feels that she enjoyed rough scenery on the north shore line to do her the balance of her short life. The monotonous rocks and bush travelled through for two and a half days was broken by a glimpse of what seems to be an intermittent camp up somewhere in Algoma. She was told that there were 1800 German prisoners there, guarded by 300 armed soldiers. The prisoners were armed only with axes, and were employed in clearing up the land. Arriving at Rockhaven Mrs. Hay found her brothers James and Kenneth McLaren very busy with big crops. The former had about 150 acres in crop and the latter about 115 acres. Kenneth had over 40 acres of wheat, and the stooks were so thick in the field that a team with buggy could hardly be driven through. Another brother Norman is with a threshing crew for the season. The wheat there is No. 1. The boys had a fine looking crop of potatoes growing, but the green tops were all cut down by frost early in September, and some of the potatoes were frozen in the hills.

Crossed Wires Cause Blaze

The town got an early awakening on Tuesday morning, when the fire-bell rang clamorously and insistently at 5.30. By the time the populace found it possible to hike down street the conflagration was over. The little blaze was at Sparrow's livery barn and was caused by the bare telephone wire becoming charged with a high voltage from the electric light line. The firemen came down with the hose and started playing upon the blaze, but received repeated shocks of electricity, so desisted. Mr Tom Sparrow proposed to climb up on the roof to get at it that way, but as soon as his hand touched the eave-troughing he was thrown backwards by a heavy charge. The ends of his fingers were slightly but distinctly seared by the current and his arm reddened. It was a decidedly narrow escape from sudden death or serious injury, as had he been able to take a firm grip on the eavestrough as he intended, his body would have received the full effects of the electric light current. Fortunately the fire was discovered in its incipient stage, and dampness in the wood had prevented rapid development, so that the damage was small.

West Bruce Teachers

The teachers of West Bruce held their annual convention in Kincardine High School on Oct. 7 and 8. There were 168 out of 190 teachers in the inspectorate present. In the Mayor's absence the address of welcome was given by Mr J J Hunter. In his address he drew the teachers' attention to the writing competition which is held each year at the fall fair and also to the advisability of holding a school fair each year. Mr E T White, B Pard, of London Normal School gave practical and valuable information on the subjects of "Primary Arithmetic" and "Problems and Solutions." A very interesting talk was given by Miss McTavish on "Agriculture in Rural Schools." By the teaching of Agriculture we meant just teaching the children to think and reason about the common things in and around their homes, thus giving them training for their leisure as well as work hours. Miss Bradley of Tiverton read a well prepared paper on "Primary Reading." A lesson taught by Miss Fisher of Paisley to an entrance class was enjoyed by all. The subject "Spring on the Lidevre" was chosen because both the author and subject were Canadian. Miss Nicholson taught a splendid lesson in Geography on "Life on the Desert," to a junior class. A sandboard was used, as material to represent clouds, the oasis, camels, ostriches, Arabs, etc. Mr Shales gave an instructive talk on "Capillarity and Osmosis." A number of experiments were shown to illustrate how the soil solution enters a plant and is conveyed from cell to cell through the plant. Miss Dewar gave a paper showing how fifth class work could be taught successfully in a rural school.

The evening entertainment was in the form of an At Home. $25 of the proceeds were donated to the Red Cross, also $25 from the general association's funds to the Patriotic Fund. A resolution was passed that each teacher in West Bruce donate one day's pay to the Patriotic Fund and $50 additional from the general fund. The officers for the ensuing year are:—President, Mr. Durnion; treasurer, Mr. Bald; secretary, Miss H. S. Malcolm.

Knox W.M.S.

The annual thankoffering meeting of Knox W M S was held on Thursday afternoon, when an address was given by Mrs (Rev) Hogg of Southampton. The total offerings will be about $50.

S. S. Convention

The North Bruce annual S.S. convention held in Chesley last Thursday was largely attended, delegates being present from Chesley, Port Elgin, Paisley, Tara, Wiarton and rural points. Among the speakers were E. D. Otter, Toronto, provincial superintendent of the secondary and adult division of Sunday School work; Rev. R. A. Facey of Paisley, C. A. Fleming of Owen Sound, and C. J. Michie of Chesley. The following officers for the ensuing year were elected: President, M. A. Halliday, Chesley; 1st vice-president, H. B. Putnam, Paisley; 2nd vice-president, J. E. Case, reeve of Elderslie; sec'y-treas., Rev. Mr. Prudhomme, Wiarton. Robert Oswald was elected as representative of Elderslie in the township organization. The ladies of Chesley provided supper for the delegates.—Enterprise.

To Correspondents

An "occasional" contributor of news for THE ADVOCATE recently got past the editorial censor with an innocent-toned item that turned out to be an annoying joke. Such items, when recognized at their (two-) face value are invariably blue-pencilled. Our regular staff of news-gatherers do not indulge in that class of paragraphing. While we appreciate receiving news from other sources, as well, the "joker" who frames up a concealed sting of ridicule for publication does something that will not advance the interests of any newspaper, and therefore cannot be encouraged in efforts along that particular line. It is considered a breach of newspaper confidence to divulge the name of a correspondent under any circumstances, but we do not consider the person who perpetrates these jokes should be so shielded, and hereafter the perpetrators may find their identity revealed and they publicly exposed for execration or prosecution at the hands of the party whom they sought to jocularly or maliciously hurt. The prospect of such a horrible fate should be sufficient to restrain the pen hand of any one inclined to commit an offence of the nature mentioned.

Townships Collect for R. C.

Nearly all the adjacent townships are in line to support the British Red Cross appeal, and will have collectors out on Thursday, Oct. 21st. In Elderslie the collectors are as follows: Elora road—J. Richardson, A. Cormack, J. B. McBride; townline Bruce—P. McCurdy, W. J. Fortune, T. Patterson, Wm. Pepper; con. 3—D. McBeath, Dan McGill, H. McCulloch, A. Young; con. 4—J. Stoddart, M. J. Barefather, Mrs. J. E. Case, Mrs J. Maxwell; con. 6—R. Daniel, R. C. Pearce, Mrs. R. Oswald, Mrs. T. Oswald; con. 8—J. Buchanan, Guy Rutledge, J. Robinson, C. Stalnhoff; con. 10—Mrs. Geo. McKay, Mrs. J. Davis, A. Clement, C. Calhoun; con. 12—J. Rushton, I. Carr; E. Harris, T. H. Powell; con. 14—W. Grant, Jos. Poole, E. H. Park, Wm. Gordon. In Carrick Tp. the collectors for the south polling division (No. 6) are—Thos. Fullerton, David Dunlop, R. Teeple, Thos. Hay; Div. No. 5 (Pinkerton)—Thos. Birrell, J. Mutrie, D. Fitherton. Collectors are also appointed for each of the other polling divisions. Saugeen Tp. is also well organized for a house-to-house canvass. When the reports are all in hand it will be found, we expect, that the residents of the rural municipalities of Bruce have contributed their quota for the relief of wounded soldiers and sailors of the Empire.

The British Red Cross

When any country is plunged into a war of magnitude, the task that confronts the Army Medical Service is so colossal that it is impossible to cope with it without outside assistance. Many people ask, "Why does the Government not take care of the sick and wounded? Is it not the Government's business?" We therefore endeavor to lay some information before ADVOCATE readers. There is no Army Medical Service in the world that can be maintained in times of peace on a war standard, as it would be ridiculous to have any 500 well trained army doctors on regular pay in peace times when only five are required. It would be preposterous to lay in an enormous supply of perishable material when a war might not take place for 20 or 30 years. So when war breaks out suddenly as at present one the Army Medical Service has need of immediate help. The demand comes for doctors, and they go to the front in batches as fast as the Society can supply them. The Army Medical Service performs great things, but can hardly do more than provide the bare necessities, while the Red Cross, by supplementing its work, provides both necessities and comforts which help make suffering bearable. The advent of the present war brought new problems and complications innumerable in dealing with such diseases as spotted fever, typhus, tetanus (lockjaw), frost bites, poisoned wounds from bombs and high explosive shells, fractured bones, throats and lungs affected by asphyxiating gases. Filth diseases, epidemics and contagions broke out because of the sheer inability of the soldiers to change their clothing or to keep clean, also the number of decaying bodies, choking trenches and canals, remaining unburied for days and weeks in some instances. Not only the men at the front are cared for, but the reserve armies in camp at home. Resources have been taxed by the greatest war the world has known and relief has had to be supplied on this prodigious scale, not only to British forces, but assistance contributed to some of the Allies, notably Belgium and Serbia. Staffs of surgeons had to be continuously increased, trained nurses supplied by tens of thousands. Great hospitals had to be built or equipped to hold armies of men, fleets of motor transports and ambulances put into service and kept in commission, Red Cross ships commissioned, hospital trains with wonderful equipment, surgical and medical material supplied in vast quantities undreamed of before. The British Red Cross has six hospitals in France, and several in England itself, the largest in London, which has nine acres of floor space and cost $500,000. The British Red Cross has 2,500 Voluntary Aid Detachments comprising a membership of 67,000 people, who give their service however needed. Some 600 auxiliary hospitals were equipped and rest stations established for tending the wounded on the way to the hospitals, also convalescent hospitals established, manned and maintained. The Red Cross in time of war is directly under the direction of the War Office and Admiralty. In battle the wounded are taken usually at terrible risk from the trenches to the field hospitals, thence transported to the clearing hospitals, and finally taken to the great base hospitals with incredible speed. Up to date upwards of $10,000,000 has been spent by the British Red Cross Society and the Order of St. John. The Canadian Red Cross, which is affiliated with the British Red Cross, contributed $135,000 towards that aggregate, besides relieving the British Red Cross Society of the care of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces. In appealing for help from citizens of the whole Empire, the Society is doing the only thing they could possibly do, and we in Canada, particularly in Ontario, should recognize that the obligation is a particularly pressing one. Patriotism and humanity must together urge us to consider the debt we owe to those who are fighting our battles.

VERY SUDDEN DEATH

When we hear of the passing away of a young wife and mother so suddenly and unexpectedly as in the case of Mrs. Arch. McIntyre, 20th con. Greenock, whose death occurred on Thursday night last, about 11 o'clock, the whole community is brought to realize the vale groping after the infinite meanings and ays. Why should so precious, so necessary a life be taken? The old, old question which will never be answered until the veil of our mortal vision be rent by immortality.

Mrs. McIntyre was in her usual health when the home activities for the day had ceased and the family retired to rest about 9.30 o'clock. Shortly after falling to sleep Mrs. McIntyre was apparently overcome with a weakness of the heart. Her husband became aware of her distress, and raised her head from the pillow, but she was in an unconscious condition then. Mr. McIntyre hurried to homes of some neighbors and summoned Dr Houston by telephone, but before the latter could arrive in his car the stricken one had ceased to breathe.

Dr. Houston called in Dr. Gage who, as coroner, obtained preliminary evidence and considered it not necessary to hold an inquest.

Mrs. McIntyre had seldom complained of any indisposition, and was a very active home worker, apparently always enjoying the best of health. She was born in Saugeen Tp., and was a daughter of Mr. M. Zint. She was married six years ago and besides her sorrowing husband leaves two children to mourn her loss. She was a kindly, helpful woman, and will be much missed by her friends and neighbors.

The remains were taken to the home of her parents, 6th con Saugeen, from where the funeral took place on Sunday afternoon to the Port Elgin cemetery. Rev. H. J. Bickwell, of Paisley, conducted the services. The caterers in which the deceased was held in her home district was manifested by the very large gathering of friends and sympathizers.

Every sympathy is felt for the bereaved husband, children and friends in their great affliction.

VIOLENT ATTACKS OF DYSPEPSIA

Suffered Tortures Until She Tried "Fruit-a-tives"

ST. JEAN DE MATHA, Jan. 27th, 1914.

"After suffering for a long time with Dyspepsia, I have been made well by "Fruit-a-tives." I suffered so much that at last I would not dare to eat for I was afraid of dying. Five years ago, I received samples of "Fruit-a-tives" and after taking them I felt relief. Then I sent for three boxes and I kept improving until I was well. I quickly regained my lost weight—and now I eat, sleep and digest well—in a word, I am fully recovered, thanks to 'Fruit-a-tives.'

MRS. CHARBONNEAU.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At dealers or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.
